Mr. SPEAKER: With all that has been so eloquently and so affectionately said here to-day regarding the life and character of the late RICHARD P. BLAND I concur, and I would not be true to myself and to my friendship and admiration for him if I did not on this sad occasion place on record my humble tribute to his memory.

For years Mr. BLAND has been a prominent national figure and his name a household word. He had friends and followers and admirers in every hamlet and every State in the Union. His untimely death was a sad and terrible shock to us all, and to his country an irretrievable loss. When he died, the whole nation mourned and sympathized with his bereaved family, and the Republic lost as true and sincere a patriot as ever lived. He was a true man, a friend of the plain people, generous and forgiving, sincere and patriotic, honest and truthful, zealous and indefatigable in the cause of right and justice. For a quarter of a century he was a towering pillar of the Republic. The work he did is a part of the history of our country, and it is fitting and proper that his colleagues in this House should set aside a day to justly commemorate his name and fame. As the years come and go he will be better understood and more appreciated. Posterity will give him a higher place in the Temple of Fame, and future generations will pay his memory greater homage.

RICHARD PARKS BLAND was born near Hartford, Ky., on the 19th day of August, 1835, and died at his home in Lebanon, Mo., on the 15th day of June, 1899. He received an academic education. He was an unwearied student and an apt scholar. In 1855 he removed to Missouri and shortly thereafter to California, thence to that portion of Utah now Nevada, locating in Virginia City, where he practiced law for a time. He was interested in mining operations in California and Nevada; was county treasurer of Carson County, Utah Territory, from 1860 until the organization of the State government of Nevada; returned to Missouri in 1865; located at Rolla, Mo., and practiced law with his brother, C. C. Bland, until he removed to Lebanon in August, 1869, and continued his practice there; was elected to the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses.

The work he did for the toilers of the land and the beneficent results he accomplished for struggling humanity during his long career as a member of this House must ever be a part of the imperishable history of the country, and the future historian impartially writing the legislative story of the last twenty-five years of the American Congress will place him in the front rank of constructive statesmen. That record is the heritage he left his countrymen and will be for all time to come the monument of his undying fame. It stands for absolute truth, exact justice, eternal principles, equality before the law, and equal rights for all.

He was no respecter of persons, no hero worshiper. He believed in humanity and trusted the people. He had faith in the greatness and the endurance of the Republic, and battled all his life to perpetuate our free institutions and hand them down unimpaired to future generations. He was a plain, simple man who loved his fellow-man. He was a believer in the fundamental principles that constitute our national existence and he trod the path of the patriot fathers. He was a disciple of Thomas Jefferson and struggled to keep the Government pure and in the control of the people. He turned his back on caste, combated privilege, and was the relentless foe of monopoly. He was a unique man in many ways. His nature was without guile; he hated cant, spurned pretense, and despised hypocrisy. He was the friend of the Constitution, and no argument, no sophistry, could persuade him from the path of duty. He did his work bravely and fearlessly in the face of obstacles that would appall a weaker and a more timid man.

In the great battle for the people's rights he never wearied, and the marshaled hosts of error never conquered him. Year in and year out he fought the good fight; he kept the faith. He lived truly, he thought truly, and he spoke truly. His life was as placid as a summer stream, and made him loved by all who knew him. His words uttered here for the defenseless were always respectfully listened to by admiring friends and doubting opponents, and were read and reread by innumerable millions. He spoke the truth for the countless who were robbed and oppressed for the enrichment and the benefit of the few, and he knew the truth would ultimately triumph and that his efforts for the rights of the people would sooner or later be crowned with success.

Think truly, and thy thought
Shall the world's great famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A grand and noble creed.

Such a man was RICHARD PARKS BLAND—a truly great, a truly good, a truly honest man in all things.

The great and immortal truths he uttered were not uttered in vain. They have borne and will continue to bear abundant fruit. His cause will live, and, in my opinion, the day is not far distant when the principles he contended for will be written on the statute books of America, an everlasting monument to his wisdom, his foresight, and his unerring judgment. The martyr dies, the cause survives. Man goeth to his long home, but his works live after him.

Mr. BLAND was a faithful public servant. He never betrayed a friend, a trust, or a principle. He always fought fair and open and aboveboard. He never resorted to trickery, to device, or to chicanery. He had no tricks of speech. He was a plain, blunt man, who never used words to conceal thoughts. He told the truth and told it in the simplest and most direct way. He went to the root of the subject. His heart was in all he did, in all he said, and he was great and eloquent and impressive because he was simple, honest, and sincere, and every word he uttered had the genuine ring of truth. He never despaired. He had the rectitude and patience of the rocks, the hope of the stream rushing to meet the ocean, the fidelity of the sun.

He believed in equal opportunity, encouraged worth, applauded manly effort, and wanted man to be free and stand erect. He was a great commoner; he sympathized with those who toil and struggle; he believed in the love of home, the sanctity of the hearthside, and his great responsive heart went out to comfort the sad, the sorrowing, and the disconsolate. He was the foe of tyranny, the enemy of bigotry, the eternal adversary of oppression. He was the champion of the masses, the friend of the downtrodden, the pioneer and the leader of the reform forces of the Republic against the serried ranks of the predatory classes.

Humanity was his constituency, to do good his political creed. He stood for the weak against the strong, for the lowly against the powerful, for the oppressed against the oppressor, for the right against the wrong, for truth against error, for every cause that lacked assistance, and, above all and beyond all, he stood, in all places and at all times, for the rights of man. When he died a great tree in the forests of the people fell and a great light in the Republic went out. We who follow after him, imbued with his noble example and inspired by his civic virtues, will heroically take up his burden, push forward his cause, and continue his fight until the battle is won and the mighty principles he contended for are forever triumphant. I believe if he were here to-day this would be his message, his wish to us, and that he would say to all as the poetess of America has so truly said to the world:

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his ranks are strong, if he be in the wrong,
The battle is not yet done.
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

O man bowed down with labor,
O woman young, yet old,
O heart oppressed in the toiler's breast
And crushed by the power of gold,
Keep on with your weary battle Against triumphant might,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Late Representative Sydney P. Epes.

REMARKS
OF
HON. R. C. DE GRAFFENREID, OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, March 24, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. SYDNEY P. EPES, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Virginia.

"Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

"Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased"—

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Seldom, if ever, in the history of this House has it been moved by the death of a member with such profound sorrow and grief as that which manifested itself in the hearts of all by the demise of the Hon. SYDNEY P. EPES, late Representative of the Fourth district of Virginia. Sudden and unexpected, in the full flush and vigor of manhood, with a career opening before him which gave promise of great and glorious things, the spark of life went out, but his memory lives, and will live orever, in the hearts of those who knew and loved him.

Nature had endowed him with fine physique and stamped upon his brow and every clear-cut feature strength, grace, and dignity of bearing, which would have marked him as distinguished in any assembly of men.

Born in the grand old State of Virginia, of an honored family, cradled in the lap of liberty, reared amid its surpassing scenery and picturesque environment, educated in the schools of our Republic, by profession a journalist, always a student, his mind was a magazine of knowledge. He was a gentleman of the old Virginia type—brave, noble, generous, affable alike to all with whom he came in contact. "As particles of iron are drawn to the magnet," so he drew his fellows to him, and always to cheer by a genial and sunny nature.

As an editor he wielded a facile pen, his style clear and cogent, his diction pure, and in the broad sweep of his intellectual vision no question of public moment escaped him, and no subject was presented to his versatile mind which he did not illumine.

I knew him to love and respect him, and will ever honor and cherish his memory, and I shall ever regard myself fortunate indeed to have been brought in contact with him. His presence carried with it an atmosphere so pure, so enobling, that all who came within its sphere were enriched and inspired to nobler manhood. His fellow-countrymen were not slow to detect the sterling traits of his character, the intellectual force and vigor which preeminently fitted him to become a leader among men; hence from the quiet walks of like, surrounded by a host of friends and neighbors, who vied with each other in doing him homage, he was called upon to take upon him one public trust after another in the Commonwealth of Virginia, which he discharged with such care and efficiency that he was finally selected as the standard bearer of his party to represent his district in Congress; elected by a fair majority to the Fifty-fifth Congress, his seat was contested and lost to him by a party vote on the floor; his constituents, stung by the injustice of the procedure, rallied to his support with renewed energy and unanimously declared him their candidate for the Fifty-sixth Congress, and swelled his majority at the polls to such proportions that his opponent did not dare to again contest. And, though his active Congressional life was of brief duration, it was marked by a high order of statesmanship, industrious, alert, courageous, looking ever to the interests of his constituents, no duty was left undone, no service seemed small, no task, however arduous, was ever shirked. He held close to his heart the interests and general welfare of his State, and every national question was carefully weighed in the balance; and, when called upon, as he was frequently, for counsel and advice, he was ever ready with clear answer and argument, showing conclusively that he had fully digested and mastered the subject in question; and it is not too much to say had he lived he would have been returned again and again by his loyal and faithful people to the post of honor and duty, and each new session of Congress would have found him nearer and nearer the goal, and other honors in his State and the nation's gift would have been his, and history would finally have placed him among that galaxy of stars which proud Virginia may well boast and which a grateful nation claims for her own.

He was comparatively a poor man in worldly possessions, but rich in intellectual, moral, and social endowments; his heart was centered in his home; his wife, children, and aged parents were all in all to him; those who had the privilege of the welcome and hospitality of his home saw him at his best in the family circle—a dutiful son, a faithful brother, a devoted and loving husband, an affectionate father.

No words of mine can give a just estimate of his life and character—a manly man, equable in disposition, matchless in bearing, the personification of honesty, integrity, and truth. No greater tribute can be offered than that around the open grave. Thousands had gathered there from every section of his district; State and nation were there represented; all the pastors of his town, men, women, and children from every station in life were there; garlands of flowers, chaplets of roses intertwined with evergreen exhaling their fragrance, which rose like incense; tears that fell from sad eyes, sighs from broken hearts in attestation of tender affection and devoted love, which speak more eloquently of his worth than tongue, or pen, or brush.

Tell me not that SYDNEY P. EPES is dead; he lives in the hearts of those who knew and loved him; he lives in the deeds of mind and muscle; he lives in the thoughts conceived and uttered; he will live again in lives inspired by his undying example, yea, he lives in the realms beyond the sunset glory of death, or rather what we call death, for death is not an extinction of being, it is but an epoch, an event in the grand eternal march of existence. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." His body sleeps in the bosom of mother earth, but his soul sweeps on in unbroken continuity to larger, grander life and usefulness.

And thou, who o'er thy friend's low bier
Sheddest the bitter drops like rain,
Hope that a brighter, happier sphere
Will give him to thy arms again.

Of him not eulogy, but truth, may say:

Earth never pillowed upon her bosom a truer son, nor heaven opened wide her portals to receive a manlier spirit.

Government for the Territory of Hawaii.

SPEECH
OF
HON. JAMES M. ROBINSON,
OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 6, 1900,

On the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Under the privileges accorded by the action of the House during the consideration of the Hawaiian bill, I embrace the opportunity of presenting to Congress and to the country an address by Hon. William J. Bryan, which speaks sentiments good when they were uttered in Washington a year ago and highly appropriate at this very hour:

[Extract from speech delivered at Washington Day banquet given by the Virginia Democratic Association at Washington, D. C., February 22, 1899, by William J. Bryan.]

AMERICA'S MISSION.

When the advocates of imperialism find it impossible to reconcile a colonial policy with the principles of our Government or with the canons of morality; when they are unable to defend it upon the ground of religious duty or pecuniary profit, they fall back in helpless despair upon the assertion that it is destiny. "Suppose it does violate the Constitution," they say; "suppose it does break all the Commandments; suppose it does entail upon the nation an incalculable expenditure of blood and money; it is destiny and we must submit."

The people have not voted for imperialism; no national convention has declared for it; no Congress has passed upon it. To whom, then, has the future been revealed? Whence this voice of authority? We can all prophesy, but our prophecies are merely guesses, colored by our hopes and our surroundings. Man's opinion of what is to be is half wish and half environment. Avarice paints destiny with a dollar mark before it; militarism equips it with a sword.

He is the best prophet who, recognizing the omnipotence of truth, comprehends most clearly the great forces which are working out the progress not of one party, not of one nation, but of the human race.

History is replete with predictions which once wore the hue of destiny, but which failed of fulfillment because those who uttered them saw too small an arc of the circle of events.

When Pharaoh pursued the fleeing Israelites to the edge of the Red Sea he was confident that their bondage would be renewed and that they would again make bricks without straw, but destiny was not revealed until Moses and his followers reached the farther shore dry-shod and the waves rolled over the horses and chariots of the Egyptians.

When Belshazzar, on the last night of his reign, led his thousand lords into the Babylonian banquet hall and sat down to a table glittering with vessels of silver and gold he felt sure of his kingdom for many years to come, but destiny was not revealed until the hand wrote upon the wall those awe-inspiring words, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." When Abderrahman swept northward with his conquering hosts his imagination saw the Crescent triumphant throughout the world, but destiny was not revealed until Charles Martel raised the cross above the battlefield of Tours and saved Europe from the sword of Mohammedanism.

When Napoleon emerged victorious from Marengo, from Ulm, and from Austerlitz he thought himself the child of destiny, but destiny was not revealed until Blücher's forces joined the army of Wellington and the vanquished Corsican began his melancholy march toward St. Helena. When the red coats of George the Third routed the New Englanders at Lexington and Bunker Hill, there arose before the British sovereign visions of colonies taxed without representation and drained of their wealth by foreign-made laws, but destiny was not revealed until the surrender of Cornwallis completed the work begun at Independence Hall and ushered into existence a Government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed.

We have reached another crisis. The ancient doctrine of imperialism, banished from our land more than a century ago, has recrossed the Atlantic and challenged democracy to mortal combat upon American soil.

Whether the Spanish war shall be known in history as a war for liberty or as a war of conquest; whether the principles of self-government shall be strengthened or abandoned; whether this nation shall remain a homogeneous republic or become a heterogeneous empire—these questions must be answered by the American people. When they speak, and not until then, will destiny be revealed.

Destiny is not a matter of chance; it is a matter of choice. It is not a thing to be waited for; it is a thing to be achieved.

No one can see the end from the beginning, but everyone can make his course an honorable one from beginning to end by adhering to the right under all circumstances. Whether a man steals much or little may depend upon his opportunities, but whether he steals at all depends upon his own volition.

So with our nation. If we embark upon a career of conquest no one can tell how many islands we may be able to seize or how many races we may be able to subjugate; neither can any one estimate the cost, immediate and remote, to the nation's purse and to the nation's character; but whether we shall enter upon such a career is a question which the people have a right to decide for themselves.

Unexpected events may retard or advance the nation's growth, but the nation's purpose determines its destiny.

What is the nation's purpose?

The main purpose of the founders of our Government was to secure for themselves and for posterity the blessings of liberty, and that purpose has been faithfully followed up to this time. Our statesmen have opposed each other upon economic questions, but they have agreed in defending self-government as the controlling national idea. They have quarreled among themselves over tariff and finance, but they have been united in their opposition to an entangling alliance with any European power.

Under this policy our nation has grown in numbers and in strength. Under this policy its beneficent influence has encircled the globe. Under this policy the taxpayers have been spared the burden and the menace of a large military establishment and the young men have been taught the arts of peace rather than the science of war. On each returning Fourth of July our people have met to celebrate the signing of the Declaration of Independence; their hearts have renewed their vows to free institutions and their voices have praised the forefathers whose wisdom and courage and patriotism made it possible for each succeeding generation to repeat the words—

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of Liberty,
Of thee I sing."

This sentiment was well-nigh universal until a year ago. It was to this sentiment that the Cuban insurgents appealed; it was this sentiment that impelled our people to enter into the war with Spain. Have the people so changed within a few short months that they are now willing to apologize for the War of the Revolution and force upon the Filipinos the same system of government against which the colonists protested with fire and sword?

The hour of temptation has come, but temptations do not destroy, they merely test the strength of individuals and nations; they are stumbling-blocks or stepping-stones; they lead to infamy or fame, according to the use made of them.

Benedict Arnold and Ethen Allen served together in the continental army, and both were offered British gold. Arnold yielded to the temptation and made his name a synonym for treason; Allen resisted and lives in the affections of his countrymen.

Our nation is tempted to depart from its "standard of morality" and adopt a policy of "criminal agression." But, will it yield?

If I mistake not the sentiment of the American people, they will spurn the bribe of imperialism, and, by resisting temptation, win such a victory as has not been won since the battle of Yorktown. Let it be written of the United States: Behold a Republic that took up arms to aid a neighboring people struggling to be free; a Republic that, in the progress of the war, helped distant races whose wrongs were not in contemplation when hostilities began; a Republic that, when peace was restored, turned a deaf ear to the clamorous voice of greed, and to those borne down by the weight of a foreign yoke spoke the welcome words, "Stand up; be free." Let this be the record made on history's page, and the silent example of this Republic, true to its principles in the hour of trial, will do more to extend the area of self-government and civilization than could be done by all the wars of conquest that we could wage in a generation.

The forcible annexation of the Philippine Islands is not necessary to make the United States a world power. For over ten decades our nation has been a world power. During its brief existence it has exerted upon the human race an influence more potent for good than all the other nations of the earth combined, and it has exerted that influence without the use of sword or Gatling gun.

Mexico and the Republics of Central and South America testify to the benign influence of our institutions, while Europe and Asia give evidence of the working of the leaven of self-government. In the growth of democracy we observe the triumphant march of an idea—an idea that would be weighted down rather than aided by the armor and weapons proffered by imperialism.

Much has been said of late about Anglo-Saxon civilization. Far be it from me to detract from the service rendered to the world by the sturdy race whose language we speak. The union of the Angle and the Saxon formed a new and valuable type, but the process of race evolution was not completed when the Angle and the Saxon met. A still later type has appeared, which is superior to any which has existed heretofore; and with this new type will come a higher civilization than any which has preceded it. Great has been the Greek, the Latin, the Slav, the Celt, the Teuton, and the Anglo-Saxon, but greater than any of these is the American, in whom are blended the virtues of them all.

Civil and religious liberty, universal education, and the right to participate, directly or through representatives chosen by himself, in all the affairs of government—these give to the American citizen an opportunity and an inspiration which can be found nowhere else.

Standing upon the vantage ground already gained, the American people can aspire to a grander destiny than has opened before any other race.

Anglo-Saxon civilization has taught the individual to protect his own rights; American civilization will teach him to respect the rights of others.

Anglo-Saxon civilization has taught the individual to take care of himself; American civilization, proclaiming the equality of all before the law, will teach him that his own highest good requires the observance of the commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Anglo-Saxon civilization has, by force of arm, applied the art of government to other races for the benefit of Anglo-Saxons; American civilization will, by the influence of example, excite in other races a desire for self-government and a determination to secure it.

Anglo-Saxon civilization has carried its flag to every clime and defended it with forts and garrisons; American civilization will imprint its flag upon the hearts of all who long for freedom.

To American civilization, all hail!

"Time's noblest offspring is the last!"

The Insincerity and Dishonesty of Imperialism.

I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that "honesty is always the best policy."—George Washington.

Hanna, McKinley & Co. say to the Filipinos, Unless you submit to our rule we shall shoot you to death; and to the Porto Ricans, If you do submit we shall tax you to death.

OF
HON. JOHN J. LENTZ,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 27, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. LENTZ said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: We are discussing a bill appropriating $112,000,000. The estimate of the War Department was $128,000,000, and we have scaled this bill $16,000,000 in the committee. Last year an appropriation bill was brought to this House from the Military Committee for $80,000,000, and before we had finished the year's work it was necessary, as you remember, to bring in a war deficiency bill for $37,000,000, making in the aggregate $117,000,000.

To-day we start with $112,000,000, having cut it down $16,000,000; and if the present policy of imperialism, extravagance, and Presidential commissions is to continue, I am willing to go on record predicting that by the time we get through with next winter's session we shall bring in at least $28,000,000 more of deficiency instead of the last one of $37,000,000. In round figures, we shall tax the people of the United States in the neighborhood of $140,000,000 for the next year's Army expenditure. Two years ago we were going down into the pockets of the masses for about $23,000,000 to $25,000,000 for the Army.

To-day, "according to our code of morals," we are asking the people of the United States for five times as large an appropriation to carry on our work of "criminal aggression." Is this "our plain duty?" Are we not already on the career of imperialism and militarism? Is our taxation of the Porto Ricans without representation anything less than the criminal aggression of George the Third? How shall we maintain this system of taxation without representation, this violation of the laws of decency and humanity, without imperialism and militarism? This appropriation of $112,000,000 is not for the present. This is for next year. From the 1st day of July, 1900, to the 1st day of July, 1901, we shall be expected to deliver out of the Treasury for the military establishment alone one-fifth, at least, of the entire gross expenditures of the Government.

What else can this be except militarism? It is time that we stop and consider whither we are drifting. It was once asked of James Russell Lowell, by Guizot, the French historian, "How long may the Republic of the United States reasonably be expected to endure?" And Mr. Lowell replied, "So long as the ideas of its founders continue dominant."

Are these the ideas of the founders? Are these the figures of the founders? Study the summaries of the receipts and expenditures of our Government from the beginning of the Republic down to the beginning of the empire and you will find that we are now assessing upon the people of the United States for the purposes of the National Government, in round figures, $10 per capita for every man, woman, and child in the Union, while in the days of Thomas Jefferson this Government carried on its business, maintained its defenses against foreigners, reduced its national debt, and all this with an assessment of $1.50 per capita, or rather a taxation only one-seventh as large as we propose to put upon the people to-day. What a contrast between the days of the beginning of the Republic and the beginning of the empire!

Militarism in the United States means more than the extravagance of this appropriation. It means permanently saddling upon this country an army of 100,000 men. When we came to Washington at the opening of this session it was confidently expected by the majority side of this House, and fully believed by the minority side, that an Army bill would be brought in providing for a permanent military establishment of 100,000 men.

Knowing, however, that we are about to go into a Presidential election, it was evidently assumed that it was not advisable to bring such a measure in at this term, and I venture the prediction that no such bill will now be brought forward until after the November elections. But the appropriation is being made on that scale, and the purpose is quite manifest to continue such a military establishment as must be contemplated in the appropriation of $112,000,000.

It does not become us to waste our time differentiating about a million or half a million at one place or another in this bill. The great, persistent, and apparently irresistible tendency of the whole Republic toward imperialism ought to be the question and concern of every philanthropic and philosophic mind in the American Congress. What will it lead to? Who will profit by this expenditure of $112,000,000? Let us review the history of the past two years. In March, 1898, it was common on this floor to have thrown back to us the statement that this Government was for "peace at any price." To-day with this appropriation it is apparent that the Government is now for "war at any sacrifice."

We have in two years changed our policy absolutely. Two years ago we declared to the world that our purpose in going to the relief of Cuba was not conquest, that it was not the acquisition of territory. In the resolutions that were passed the night we stayed in session here until 3 o'clock in the morning we declared to the world that the people of Cuba "are and of right ought to be free."

That was our declaration and promise to all humanity. That was the promise to the Philippine Islanders; that was the promise to the people of Porto Rico; that was the promise to the people of Cuba, and to every human being upon the face of the earth. That was when we were still fighting for the principles of the Declaration of Independence. We were still copying the language of Thomas Jefferson; we were still within the spirit of the Constitution of the United States; we were still permeated and animated by the principles of the Monroe doctrine.

Two years have gone by, and now what do we see? Servile, cringing, humble followers, imitating the European monarchies. Such seems to be the order of the day. How sadly we have degenerated, and how rapidly we have fallen. The Monroe doctrine, what has become of it? If this military policy is to be perpetuated, the Monroe doctrine is absolutely blotted out. Up to the last three months we believed that the Monroe doctrine was

A PART OF THE UNWRITTEN CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

From 1823 down to this hour it had stood substantially unchallenged by any American patriot or any American statesman. Under that Monroe doctrine and its benign influence 17 republics have been established south of the Rio Grande River. Under that Monroe doctrine there is not a monarchy left south of our southern line. Under that Monroe doctrine 47,000,000 people now live and govern themselves, all of them permeated more or less with the same Spanish ideas and Spanish thought and Spanish blood that permeates the Philippine Islanders, the Cubans, and the Porto Ricans. Yet these seventeen republics to-day flourish.

Now and then it may be they have some little insurrection or rebellion; but those are soon quieted, and the governments go on. Those people are working out their own salvation. Until recently no man in America has been dishonorable enough to repudiate the Monroe doctrine or repudiate the products of the Monroe doctrine on the American continent. We said to the world, "You on the other side of the sea believe in the divine right of kings; we believe in vox populi, vox Dei."

We believe that God speaks through the masses and not through the princes or the plutocrats of the earth. We said to the monarchs of Europe: "Stay on the other side of the sea and work out your theory and policy of government under the proposition of the "divine right of kings;" but we shall insist on reserving the American continents for the experiment of government by the people, of the people, for the people." That was, in substance, the language and the challenge of Jefferson, Monroe, Franklin, and Washington, and all the other patriots and philosophers from the early days of our Republic; reenforced, ratified, and confirmed by Abraham Lincoln, and never abandoned or questioned until the beef trust and the Standard Oil bank took possession of the Government at Washington. Our ancestors said the American continent shall be reserved for the experiment of government by the people, and it was Lincoln's fondest hope "that government by the people should not perish from the face of the earth."

If we mean to follow the teachings of the fathers; if we mean to adhere to the principles of the fathers; if we have any respect left for the Monroe doctrine; if we are in earnest in going around to the other side of the earth with our theories of government and planting the Stars and Stripes in the Philippine Islands and in Porto Rico, then it becomes us to say at least a word or two of sympathy in behalf of all republics on the face of the earth wherever they may be, whether in Europe or Asia or South Africa. [Applause.]

You can no longer limit the Monroe doctrine. The man who says that the Monroe doctrine is to be limited to the South American continent, at the same time that he prates and boasts about our duty and our destiny to carry the Stars and Stripes into the Orient, is a coward unless he has manhood enough within him to express sympathy and hope for all those who are struggling for the right of self-government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hear it said on the majority side of this House that the Philippine Islanders are expecting their sympathy and their support from the Democrats in this House. I might say, in answer, that Mr. Taylor, of the Boston Globe, has just been in the Sulu Islands, and he reports that

THE SULTAN OF SULU EXPRESSES HIS DESIRE AND HOPE THAT WILLIAM M'KINLEY WILL BE REELECTED.

I take it from what I know of the Boston newspapers and what I have been told of Mr. Taylor that the statement is as reliable as any statement in any of the most worthy newspapers can be.

So much for what they are looking for in the Philippine Islands. Senator HOAR has been good enough to say that the decline of the American Republic will begin with McKinley's reign. There are men, like John Sherman, who have been honest enough to say that this war in the Philippine Islands is an uncalled-for war. That is a pretty severe arraignment. Not many Democrats have said more.

But Mr. Sherman went further than that in his speech to the old soldiers at Mansfield last August, and in addition to the words "uncalled for" he added the word "unnecessary." Not stopping with the statement that it is an unnecessary war, John Sherman added another adjective and said that it is an "unjust" war. This Nestor of the Republican party, this man who has studied statecraft from his boyhood until his old age, says that you are carrying on an "unnecessary," "uncalled-for," and an "unjust" war.

But John Sherman, speaking as a philosopher in statecraft, is not the only man who finds it "an unnecessary, uncalled-for, and unjust war." Recently we were invited to attend the funeral of one of the heroes of the Philippine war, General Lawton, and in this connection I wish to read an extract from an interview given out by General Lawton, so that all may know what he thought of this Philippine war. The interview appeared originally in the Congregationalist, of Boston, Mass., and was reproduced in the Anti-Imperialist, as follows:

GENERAL LAWTON'S PROTEST—"WE WANT TO STOP THIS ACCURSED WAR."—THE FILIPINOS INDOMITABLE—ALL THEY WANT IS JUSTICE—IT IS TIME FOR DIPLOMACY AND MUTUAL UNDERSTANDINGS.

In the current number of the Congregationalist, Boston, Rev. Peter MacQueen, who has been in the Philippines for the past year in service with the army, quotes Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton as saying:

"The Filipinos are a very fine set of soldiers. They are far better than the Indians. The latter never fight unless they have the absolute advantage. The Tagals are what I would call a civilized race. They are good mechanics, imitative; they manufacture everything. They have arsenals and cartridge factories and powder mills. They can manufacture everything they need. There is a rude arm they are getting the knack of making. Taking everything into consideration, the few facilities they have, the many drawbacks, they are a very ingenious and artistic race. And taking into account the disadvantages they have to fight against in arms, equipment, and military discipline, without artillery, short of ammunition, powder inferior, shells reloaded until they are defective, inferior in every particular of equipment and supplies, they are the bravest men I have ever seen.

"The Filipinos are not military by nature. They are rather domestic in tastes and habits, peace loving and industrious. Nine-tenths of the people of the islands will strongly favor peace, even at the expense of some of their theories, wishes, and hopes. I believe that with a liberal government, such as the United States can and will establish, they will be a peaceable, thrifty, happy people. I believe that it was a great misfortune that we were not able to give them a chance to sample our government before hostilities opened. The only thing we have to fear is from ambitious youths, who want to obtain control for financial reasons, that they may practice what the Spanish have taught them.

"Among the Filipinos there are many cultured people who would ornament society anywhere in the world—ladies who have studied and traveled, men who have had a good education and a fine brain. Take them as a class, there can as many of them read and write as the inhabitants in many places in America. As for their treachery, you would not have to come so far as this to find that. There is plenty of it in North America. All nations are treacherous more or less. Some men and nations have treachery trained out of them more than others. What we want is to stop this accursed war. It is time for diplomacy, time for mutual understandings.

"These men are indomitable. At Bacoor bridge they waited till the Americans brought their cannon to within 35 yards of their trenches. Such men have the right to be heard. All they want is a little justice. I established a civil government at Belinag, with the government entirely in the hands of the natives. It worked to perfection. All these people need for self-government is the protection of our troops till affairs have quieted, and then they will, I have no doubt, advance as rapidly as the Japanese, perhaps more rapidly. I am very well impressed with the Filipinos."

This interview was given to the public through the Congregationalist, of Boston, Mass., and repeated through many papers as the judgment of General Lawton. Immediately certain Administration papers stated that this was not a true interview and that it was a falsified statement. To get at the truth of the matter a few weeks ago I wrote Rev. MacQueen the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, 9th February, 1900.

Rev. PETER MACQUEEN,
Care of the Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR SIR: Some time ago my attention was called to an article in the Anti-Imperialist, crediting you with a quotation from General Lawton. I am told that General Lawton himself denied your statement, but in these days when falsehood, blasphemy, and sacrilege are resorted to to bolster up imperialism I am not prepared to believe that you were misquoted until I have something from you direct.

I shall greatly appreciate it if you will kindly tell me over your own signature, and permit me to make use of your statement. I am discussing the Philippine question before the public, and shall within a short time have occasion to discuss the question on the floor of the House, and I want to know I am right, before I go ahead, in every statement I make.

Hoping you will give me at your earliest convenience a statement as to these alleged denials of Lawton's, because naturally you have considered them and weighed them and know the source of the denial and the purpose of the denial, I remain, Yours, faithfully,

JOHN J. LENTZ.

In answer to this inquiry came a prompt and positive reply, in such plain terms that he who runs may read, and I send the letter to the Clerk and ask him to read to the American Congress and the American people what Rev. MacQueen says of the Lawton interview.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Peter MacQueen, pastor
Day Street Congregational Church.]

WEST SOMERVILLE, MASS., February 11, 1900.

Mr. JOHN J. LENTZ, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 9th instant, addressed to Mr. MacQueen, Mr. MacQueen directs me to say that the interview which he had with General Lawton, as published in the Congregationalist of some months ago, is absolutely authentic.

He wrote the article from notes taken at the time of the interview, and General Lawton was quoted verbatim, with the exception of the word "damnable," which Mr. MacQueen, in writing for a religious paper, changed to "accursed."

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

HERMAN TRUE VAN DUSEN.
Secretary to Mr. MacQueen.

Now, gentlemen, the only change made by Rev. MacQueen was to soften down one word. He says in his own letter that he wrote this interview from his notes as he took them down in the conversation with General Lawton. Now, reading General Lawton's statement as to the conditions in the Philippine Islands by restoring the word "damnable" and eliminating the word "accursed," we find his judgment of the President's war summed up in these words: "What we want is to stop this damnable war. It is time for diplomacy, time for mutual understandings."

Such is the sacred decree of the patriot and hero of three wars, whose death came in a war which John Sherman says is uncalled-for, unnecessary, and unjust. And hence it follows that had our imperial Administration accepted General Lawton's advice as to diplomacy and mutual understandings, General Lawton's widow and children and thousands of others would not now be sorrowing and weeping because their loved ones will never return. General Lawton never withdrew a line or a word of the MacQueen interview, although he was serving as a loyal soldier under an Administration which was giving orders for a censored press and doing other acts of tyranny in keeping with those who are carried away with the vainglory of conquest and empire.

It has been demonstrated to every reading American citizen that these Philippine Islanders were our friends during the war with Spain. There was no hostility on their part. They supposed that the great American Republic meant what it said when it said that the Cubans "are and of right ought to be free." They knew that Admiral Dewey had testified in his report that the people of the Philippine Islands were superior to the people in Cuba and that he had said, "I am familiar with both races." If they are superior to the people in Cuba, then they are entitled to the same freedom; and even if they are not superior, they had helped us and we had helped them defeat the Spaniards, and honors were even. No charter for the American Republic has yet been written declaring that it is our mission to go out upon the face of the earth with battle-ax and spear to make other men our equals. We have declared that "all men are born equal."

It is common among the Administration supporters and cuckoos to say, "God has not been preparing the English-speaking people for a thousand years for nothing. He has made us master organizers of the world to establish system where chaos reigns. He has made us trustees of the world's progress, guardians of its righteous peace." Rome, in all her greed and gluttony, could have said the same! The Saracen, with his sword and fire, promulgated the same buncombe, and the Spaniards for three hundred years, with arrogance and vainglorious pretense, never claimed any other mission than that of "benevolent assimilation."

But let us come down to the earth among plain, honest men, men whose highest ability was their integrity and sincerity, men whose loftiest ideal was to promote liberty through self-government, and who never dreamed of a republic whose sole purpose was to promote the profits of plutocracy and trusts. Let us study the language of the men whose is guaranteed by their prayers at Valley Forge and the sacrificial offerings of their heart's blood at Bunker Hill and Yorktown. Let us search their Declaration of Independence, their Constitution of the United States, and the Monroe doctrine, all three of which are democratic instruments.

The Declaration of Independence does not say "we are created for the purpose of making others our equals," but it does say "all men are created equal." The Declaration of Independence does not say "some men are to be the trustees of the unalienable rights of others." The Declaration of Independence does not say "we are to pursue the life, liberty, and happiness of others." The Declaration of Independence does not say "governments are instituted among men in order that a part of them may secure their governmental powers from the consent of the others."

Thomas Jefferson, John Hancock, John Adams, and Benjamin Franklin never subscribed to the proposition that it is your business or my business to decide what is the form of government for another people with entirely different history and environments. Many of you are older than I am, and may think you have a right to resent all I have said, but I must insist that it is not so many years since I learned my lessons of American patriotism from the great charters of human rights, and therefore it is possible that I have not had so long a time to forget so much as you seem to have forgotten, and believing, as I do, that there is no such thing as total depravity, I am still hopeful of redeeming you at the eleventh hour.

I believe that the doctrine of imperialism, as promulgated and promoted by HANNA, McKinley & Co., is the beginning of dry rot; that it means eventually the prostitution of every American sentiment and principle to the purposes of greed, and that to tolerate this thing which is now being perpetrated on the other side of the earth under the American flag is merely playing with fire which is very much in danger of becoming a conflagration. Witness the inconsistency and insincerity of this new doctrine of imperialism as administered by HANNA, McKinley & Co., who say to the Filipinos, "Unless you submit to our rule we shall shoot you to death," and to the Porto Ricans, "If you do submit we shall tax you to death." And while mentioning the subject of Porto Rico, let me ask the Republicans of this House and the President to tell us why you changed from "Our plain duty" to "Taxation without representation;" and while answering why you changed, please tell us when you changed and where you were at the time and who was present.

But, my friends, when will you know how to govern the Philippine Islands? Why, this Congress does not know enough to govern the city of Washington as it ought to be governed. [Laughter.] Govern a country 10,000 miles from home! Most of you who come from cities know that your own neighbors, yourself included, do not know enough to govern the city you live in as it ought to be governed.

Many of you who are here do not know enough to govern your own boys as they ought to be governed, much less minding the business of people on the other side of the earth. [Laughter.] The trouble is that since the 1st of December we have run along through December, January, February, and March—four full months—and almost that entire time has been taken up without legislating for or even considering the interests of our 80,000,000 of people. We shall have more than enough to do if we do our duty at home, and I insist upon it that he who neglects his own family is worse than a heathen.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You have good Scripture authority for that.

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; there is Scripture for that and there is Scripture that teaches nations, as well as individuals, that we shall not bear false witness, and that we shall not steal; but we are doing both in the Philippines and in Porto Rico, although in Porto Rico we are only to steal at the rate of 15 per cent. And speaking of false witnesses reminds me that the War Department is deceiving the President or the President the people, but I am here to defend the President. The President has been imposed upon. He has been deceived. There are a number of men over in the War Department who must have been falsifying the reports to the President. Listen to what the President has said under his constitutional duty to the American people in his message sent to this Congress at the beginning of this session.

The noble self-sacrifice with which our soldiers and sailors whose terms of service had expired refused to avail themselves of their right to return home as long as they were needed at the front forms one of the brightest pages in our annals.

You know that you learned through the press associations that we offered these men $500 travel pay as a bounty if they would reenlist and remain to assist in the war against our friends and allies in the Philippine Islands. On the 19th of April, 1899, a telegram came from General Otis to the War Department of which the President must have been ignorant, or he would not have put that statement in his message. In that telegram, of the 19th of April, 1899, General Otis said, "Volunteers will not reenlist; volunteers will render willing service until return transports available."

In other words, the Department had the information before it that the volunteers were not willing—that they had absolutely refused to remain there after their term of service had expired. Yet the President says that they were willing to remain, and that they refused to avail themselves of their right to return home. Otis said they were only willing to wait until the boats got there; but "They will render willing service until the transports are available." Who would not have waited until the boats got there? It has been two thousand years since it was fashionable for men to walk upon water. [Laughter.] You and I would have waited until the boats came to bring us home.

IT IS NOT EASY TO SWIM 7,000 MILES

from Manila to San Francisco. Of course the men would wait until the boats were available.

But that is not the only evidence. I myself, writing to the War Department last September, asked that Peter Francesco, of Company D, Seventeenth Regulars, be discharged—a mere poor, humble private, whose mother needed him at home—and received from the War Department this answer:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, September 15, 1899.

Hon. JOHN J. LENTZ, M. C., Columbus, Ohio:

The best interests of the military service will not make it possible to comply with your request to discharge Private Peter Francesco, Company D, Seventeenth Infantry. The Department is flooded with requests of this character, and all are treated alike.

W. A. SIMPSON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Here it appears that those who were still in the service were "flooding" the Department with appeals that they might return home instead of rendering willing service long after their terms had expired.

A little later on, in October, I applied for the release of Joseph J. Otto, Company K, Fourth United States Infantry, and received a letter, dated on the 6th of October, 1899, the original of which is here in my hand and open for inspection by anyone. The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 6, 1899.

Hon. JOHN J. LENTZ, Columbus, Ohio.

SIR: Referring to your request for discharge from military service of Cook Joseph J. Otto, Company K, Fourth United States Infantry, the Assistant Secretary of War instructs me to inform you that the best interest of the military service will not make it possible to comply with your request for the reasons given in this case. The Department is flooded with applications of this character, and all are treated alike.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS WARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

On the 22d of January I received another reply to a request for the discharge of a young man whose record shows that he had been lying bedridden for four months, reduced in weight from 195 pounds to 125 pounds, and after having been in this condition for four months is still unable to get a physician's certificate of discharge. I propose to read a part of the answer to my application for the discharge of this poor invalid—and the only wonder is that he could live at all at that weight after falling from the weight I have mentioned. In fact, I wonder whether he is living now or whether this infernal war has not only murdered General Lawton, but also my friend, who is a college graduate and one of the best young men in central Ohio. I read that part of the letter showing that very few seem willing to remain in the Philippines, which is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1900.

Hon. JOHN J. LENTZ, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your inquiry, I would state that some time since the number of discharges of enlisted men of the Regular Army had grown so numerous as to seriously interfere with the discipline and effectiveness of the service. Many Senators and Congressmen complained that numerous applications were made to them, and the officers of the Army complained that their men were dissatisfied and unsettled because of the prevailing idea that they could secure discharges by obtaining the intervention of their friends—members of Congress and others. The applications by gentlemen who were entitled to consideration mounted up into the thousands, and it became necessary to adhere firmly to the rule and grant no discharges by way of favor, and none have been so granted for the past three months.

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Does this look as if our boys are rendering willing service long after their terms have expired, when the Department is "flooded" with petitions and prayers that they may be brought home from this "unnecessary and unjust" war against a people who could be reduced to quietude and peace by mutual understandings, according to General Lawton, if a little diplomacy were exercised instead of saying that "we are in it and we can not stop; we admit that we are wrong, but we must go on in the wrong to the grim end."

Now I read from a clipping found in the Washington Star of the 24th of February, a month later than this letter of the Assistant Secretary of War, as to these men who are rendering willing service long after their terms had expired. It shows again how the officers of the Administration are fooling the President.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LENTZ. I can not yield now; I want to read this clipping and will yield to the question later.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to put the question in this connection.

Mr. LENTZ. I can not yield now, for I want to read this clipping in connection with this other evidence. The Evening Star of the 24th of February, 1900, says:

SHIRKING SUSPECTED—PRACTICE OF SELF-MAIMING AMONG THE TROOPS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

According to the recent mail advices from the Philippines, it seems that the practice of self-maiming has prevailed to a greater or less extent among the troops in the Philippines.

The matter was brought to the attention of General Otis by Col. A. A. Woodhull, deputy surgeon-general and chief surgeon of the Department of the Pacific, in a letter in which he said:

"Self-inflicted wounds of the hand and occasionally of the feet, claimed to be accidental, usually occurring on outpost, are so frequent that I have the honor to suggest that all such cases be carefully investigated by a board of survey similar to that called for in case of desertion, to determine the circumstances under which they actually occurred, and especially in relation to line of duty. All of these men become disabled for military duty, with usually a minimum amount of maiming for civil occupation, and thus secure discharge."

General Otis incorporated this letter in a general order to the troops and directed that all cases of the character referred to and all cases where there was reason to believe that the wounds were self-inflicted be promptly investigated and reported to the headquarters of the Department of the Pacific.

I fail to see how the War Department could have deceived the President without the President rebuking the War Department, and particularly three or four of his assistants in the War Department. I hope he will not remain ignorant of these facts after to-morrow, or a week hence, because I shall continue to call his attention to the falsehoods which have been imposed upon him by the assistants in the Adjutant-General's Department and the assistants in the office of the Secretary of War. General Otis wired that they would not reenlist, and in the Adjutant-General's Office is the evidence showing that by the thousands the boys are "flooding" the Department with their appeals and prayers, their petitions and supplications, to be allowed to return home to the flag of the Stars and Stripes, to the land of self-government instead of government by force which they are compelled to inflict upon innocent men, women, and children. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You talk about supporting these soldiers. Aye; more than 30,000 of them are already petitioning to be placed upon your pension rolls. Hurry along with your 600,000 applications of the soldiers of the civil war for pensions, so that you can take care of these boys and their mothers and their fathers, who are already for just treatment; the boys whose health was injured in the war with Spain are not yet getting a hearing. Treat them with some consideration; treat the boy who has wasted from 195 pounds down to 125 pounds with some honest consideration.

If you have men who are willing to stay long after their term of service has expired, substitute them for the boys who are flooding the Department with their prayers that they be permitted to come home. Substitute those who are willing to remain for some who have been bedridden for four months and want to come home to recover their health or die receiving the gentle tone and loving touch of relatives and friends.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Call their attention to the fact that there are hundreds of insane soldiers.

Mr. LENTZ. I have been advised to call your attention to the insane. I have no definite information about that. I have only a newspaper account. Some of the statements I have seen about the insanity of the men in the Philippine Islands are so extravagant and large that I refuse to believe them. I would require the affidavits of a number of men before I would believe the statements of the papers made a few days ago—that a thousand sets of handcuffs and leg cuffs had been sent for the purpose of restraining those who are insane. I do not believe that, and therefore I dismiss it without further comment.

But I was surprised and inclined to discredit the following statement, which I found in the Philadelphia North American and there credited to the New York Evening World:

BY THEIR OWN HANDS.

These twenty-nine officers and men of the United States Army have committed suicide in the Philippines:

Bernard, A. E., private, Hospital Corps, October 9, 1899.
Bowman, D. T., lieutenant, Thirty-seventh Volunteers, January 9, 1900.
Brereton, J. J., lieutenant-colonel Thirty-third Volunteer Infantry, December 2, 1899.
Briggs, George, private, First Wyoming Volunteer Infantry, April 11, 1899.
Craddock, P. B., private, Fourth Cavalry, January 6, 1900.
Crawford, E. C., private, Twenty-third Infantry, July 21, 1899.
Curtis, George W., private, Eighteenth Infantry, January 11, 1900.
Dickelman, F., private, Hospital Corps, August 29, 1898.
Durham, Fred A., hospital steward, August 3, 1899.
Gregory, W., private, Eleventh Volunteer Cavalry, January 23, 1900.
Hiatt, Charles, sergeant, Fourth Cavalry, July 4, 1899.
Hillis, M. A., corporal, Thirty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, December 15, 1899.
Hudson, John G., private, Twenty-third Infantry, February 2, 1900.
Kehoe, J. J., private, Second Oregon Volunteer Infantry, June 5, 1899.
Kellerman, A., private, Fourth Infantry.
Knox, George N., private, Sixth Artillery, February 23, 1900.
Lov, Christof, private, Twentieth Infantry, May 12, 1899.
McDowell, H. A., private, First Colorado Volunteer Infantry, December 4, 1898.
McHenry, M. R., private, Fourteenth Infantry, August 2, 1899.
Montag, G., private, Thirty-fifth Volunteer Infantry, December 2, 1899.
Moore, J. L., lieutenant, Fifty-first Iowa Volunteer Infantry, July 19, 1899.
Moran, P. E., sergeant, Sixth Infantry, October 20, 1899.
Pearce, F. A., lieutenant, Sixth Artillery, June 6, 1899.
Rock, Thomas, private, Twentieth Infantry, May 31, 1899.
Sell, J. H., private, Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, August 2, 1898.
Scorknecht, August, musician, Seventeenth Infantry, March 26, 1900.
Waugh, John R., lieutenant, Thirty-ninth Volunteer Infantry, February 27, 1900.
Weber, Louis P., lieutenant, Forty-second Volunteer Infantry, March 9, 1900.
Zaisser, C. A., private, Sixth Infantry, October 31, 1899.

I went to the War Department and submitted this list of names, and was there informed that the list is correct; and the entire list was corroborated by giving me the date of the death of each, which they added, and to that extent I have modified the original account as it appeared in the North American.

And while at the War Department I also asked for a list of all the deaths from all causes among our boys in the Philippines, and was advised that we have lost 43 officers who were killed or died of wounds, and 26 officers who died of disease, and that we have also lost 539 privates, who were either killed or died of wounds, and 1,077 privates who died of disease.

In the aggregate we have sacrificed 69 officers and 1,616 enlisted men, a grand total of 1,685 men, almost every one of whom has been sacrificed to a war of conquest and criminal greed. Was ex-Congressman John Sherman, ex-Senator John Sherman, ex-Secretary of the Treasury John Sherman, ex-Secretary of State John Sherman right when he said, "This war is uncalled for, unnecessary and unjust?" If he is right, then upon whose head rests the responsibility for this blood and this ruin and the responsibility for these tears of the mothers and wives, of the sisters and daughters, who refuse to be comforted because their loved ones are not.

Verily, the times are out of joint. The great immediate need of the hour is a Chief Executive who will not translate "criminal aggression" into "benevolent assimilation" and who will not convert in a day and a night "our plain duty" to the Porto Ricans into the imperialism of George III, demanding taxation without representation. Verily, verily—

> The time is ripe and rotten ripe for change.
> There is more force in names * * *
> Than most of men dream of; and a lie will keep > Its throne a whole age longer if it skulk
> Behind the sound of some fair seeming name.
> Let us call tyrants, tyrants; * * *
> For men in earnest have no time to waste
> In patching fig-leaves for the naked truth.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. LENTZ. I will now yield for the question.

Mr. LACEY. I understand the gentleman claims that the service of the soldiers there is an unwilling service.

Mr. LENTZ. I made no such claim. I said that the War Department said so. But the President said: "Our soldiers and sailors whose terms had expired refused to return home as long as they were needed at the front."

Mr. LACEY. But you say that some are unwilling.

Mr. LENTZ. The War Department tells me that it is flooded with applications of those in the service who are unwilling to remain.

Mr. LACEY. One other suggestion——

Mr. LENTZ. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that I say our good President has been deceived. He has been imposed upon, and I want him to take Simpson and Ward and Meiklejohn and the Evening Star to task. I want him to reduce these men to telling the truth, so they will agree with him in the statement that the men are willing to remain "as long as they are needed." They say, and I read from the official records, that the War Department is flooded with applications of men who want to be brought home.

If the President's statement in his message is correct, that he has men there willing to remain after their terms of enlistment have expired, why not put those men in the place of the boys that are

FLOODING THE WAR DEPARTMENT WITH THEIR PRAYERS TO BE BROUGHT HOME?

I am not responsible for these statements. I only offer them that Congress and the people may know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth and that the great American jury may bring in a proper verdict at the next trial.

Once in a while the President goes off on a campaign tour, and makes statements there which I certainly have a right to answer and correct here.

Last October the President went off to Chicago to lay a corner stone for a post-office. It was the most laid corner stone ever laid in the history of the world. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] It was laid for half a month several times every day. The press associations say that 100 speeches were made laying that corner stone. [Laughter.] There were not that many speeches made in laying all the corner stones of all the pyramids of Egypt. [Laughter.]

In connection with that Chicago corner stone, one of the corner-stone speeches was made at Quincy, Ill., another at Madison, Wis., another was made at Evanston, Ill., and one at Youngstown, Ohio, all the while laying the corner stone for the post-office in the city of Chicago. [Laughter.] In laying that Chicago corner stone, in the speech made at Youngstown on the 18th day of October, as reported by the Associated Press in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the President is reported to have said, with reference to the boys in the Philippine Islands:

> They are there because in the providence of God, who moves mysteriously, that archipelago has been placed in the hands of the American people.

I challenge that statement—that God had anything to do with it. I do not believe that the Deity is in any closer communion with the President of the United States than he is with a justice of the peace. [Laughter.] At least, not when he is laying corner stones in Youngstown for the city of Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Is the gentleman authorized to speak for the Almighty?

Mr. LENTZ. Well, no; I will leave that prerogative to the gentleman from Indiana. I want now to call attention to the fact that on the 13th day of August, 1898, we have the official record as to who was responsible for our being in the Philippine Islands, and I want to compare it with the Youngstown-Chicago corner-stone speech.

You will bear with me when I remind you that the 13th of August, 1898, is the day when Manila was surrendered. Here is a telegram sent by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, directed by the President of the United States to be sent according to this report, and I read from page 122 of the operations of the Asiatic station, a report given out by the Secretary of the Navy.

Remember, Manila had just surrendered:

WASHINGTON, August 13, 1898.

DEWEY (care American consul), Hongkong:

The President desires to receive from you any important information you may have of the Philippines; the desirability of the several islands—

Now, if God was in the real estate business, why could He not know all about that without wiring through William McKinley and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. I read again—the character of their population—

Do not you suppose that Deity knew something about that without a cablegram to Dewey? But I read again—coal and other mineral deposits.

Think of Deity asking the President of the United States to ask Dewey about the coal and other mineral deposits in the Philippine islands!

For the life of me—and I have been reading this cablegram month after month—up to this hour I am unable to understand what Deity wanted with coal in the hot month of August. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] If the gentleman in charge of the government below had been looking for a coaling station, getting ready for some of the members of the American Congress and the Cabinet, I could understand why he wanted more coal. [Great laughter.] I might say that the chairman of the Republican National Committee is the man that knows more about coal and pig iron than any man in the American Congress, and I suspect that he had more to do with sticking that sentence into that telegram than Deity had.

I can not escape the thought that somebody who was in the coal or other mineral business was the fellow who wrote that telegram on the announcement of the surrender of Manila. But that is not all. Admiral Dewey, and not Deity, on the 20th of August replied:

Luzon is in all respects the most desirable to retain.

Why did not Deity tell us which of the islands to retain if we are to go into the real-estate business?

And Dewey further answered:

Luzon produces all the good tobacco.

Was Deity interested in the good tobacco of Luzon, or was it the American tobacco trust?

And Dewey further answered:

Iloilo second commercial port; center of sugar trade.

Tobacco, sugar, and coal. But Deity did not know whether we wanted the islands or not until the Navy Department secured the information from Admiral Dewey as to what products we could rely upon in that country.

That is not all. In a speech made in Evanston, Ill., in connection with this corner-stone business, the President said:

The boys who carry our flag in that distant possession will be sustained by our people.

IF THE BOYS WHO CARRY OUR FLAG ARE TO BE SUSTAINED

by our people, then the War Department, which is flooded with their prayers to be brought home, will bring them home to America in time to vote for William Jennings Bryan next November. [Applause.]

But not stopping here, the President, when laying the Chicago corner stone in Evanston, said:

The flag the boys carry there is the flag we carry here.

And when the President says, "The flag the boys carry there is the flag we carry here," I take issue with him. If you take out of this flag its history and its meaning, then you reduce it to the low grade of a common rag. These Stars and Stripes speak a language to the American people that neither William McKinley nor any of his imperialistic partners intends shall ever be spoken to the Filipinos. Some tell us that this flag represents free thought, free speech, free press, free schools, and a free ballot.

The poet tells us the stars and field of blue were taken from heaven's own dome, that its stripes of white were taken from the Milky Way, and its stripes of red from the morning dawn; but the faithful historian will tell you that these red stripes were painted with the hearts' blood of martyrs from the sacrificial offerings of the patriots of Bunker Hill and Yorktown; and under every red stripe are the two simple and unmistakable words "self-government," and when you take out of these Stars and Stripes the two words "self-government," you repudiate the messages burnt with sword and fire by George Washington into the very hide of George III of England. When you take out of the Stars and Stripes the two words "self-government," you obliterate and deface the name of Abraham Lincoln from the world's lexicon of fame.

Our flag in the Philippines means bullets; here in America it means ballots. There it is a flag of blood and government by force; here it is the flag of peace and government by consent. The flag that we carry here is not the same flag that we carry there, and that is why the "boys" are flooding the War Department with their petitions to be allowed to come home. The very best witnesses in the world, the very best jury in the world, are testifying in that flood of appeals that we ought not to carry on this war, which

GENERAL LAWTON SAID WAS DAMNABLE.

Poor General Lawton sacrificed his life like a hero and a soldier, obeying the command of men who had sent him in the wrong direction, in a wicked cause. General Lawton's life, General Lawton's words, are the greatest condemnation of the present policy; and I insist upon it that had General Lawton been listened to the Administration could have avoided war by any one of three courses:

First. If the Filipinos had been told that they were to be independent, or were told to-day that they should have their independence, the war would be at an end.

Second. If the Filipinos were told that they were to have our friendly interest and protection without interference, except upon failure to establish law and order within a reasonable time by their own efforts at self-government, the war would be at an end.

Third. If they had been or were now assured that the intention of this Government is to give them like treatment with that promised to the Cubans, the war would be at an end.

If we should say to these people that the world should keep its hands off, that they should be a neutralized archipelago, corresponding to the condition of Switzerland in Europe, the war would be at an end to-day, and we would save hundreds of millions of treasure, and tens of thousands of lives would be saved from disease and death.

But there are the Sulu Islands. We expelled Mr. Roberts from this House because he was a polygamist. We needed him here to help us legislate for the Sulu Islands, for he and the President's polygamous postmasters in Utah are the only men in this country who know how to govern harems. [Laughter.] Why, sir, I am in favor of creating a secretary of harems, so that the President may have Orson Smith, of Logan, or John C. Graham, of Provo City, Utah, to help him run the polygamous establishment which we have taken under our care over in the Orient. I know of no man so well trained and equipped to occupy the position in the Cabinet which I have just named as John C. Graham or Orson Smith, of Utah.

But, my friends, not only have we done this for the Sulu Islanders, but we have placed the flag over Mohammedanism and polygamy; and we are pensioning certain polygamist Mohammedans nearly $10,000 a year for running that establishment, and at the same time we are refusing to make proper provision for the thousands of old soldiers and widows of honest soldiers of our civil war.

Listen to the names of the men who signed that agreement. I wish we could get the lawyer who drew the Sultan part of that agreement to draw an agreement for us with England in reference to the Nicaraguan Canal. The lawyer who drew that agreement for the Sultan of Sulu so framed it that they got everything and we got nothing. We plant the flag there and pay $10,000 a year for the maintenance of those officials, with their institutions of Mohammedanism and polygamy, while we are shooting down Christians in Luzon who are fighting for liberty.

Bear with me while I read this Sulu agreement and pronounce the names of your new cousins:

ARTICLE 1. The sovereignty of the United States over the whole archipelago of Sulu and its dependencies is declared and acknowledged.

ART. 2. The United States flag will be used in the archipelago of Sulu and its dependencies on land and sea.

ART. 3. The rights and dignities of His Highness the Sultan and his datos shall be fully respected; the Moros shall not be interfered with on account of their religion; all their religious customs shall be respected, and no one shall be persecuted on account of his religion.

ART. 4. While the United States may occupy and control such points in the archipelago of Sulu as public interests seem to demand, encroachment will not be made upon the lands immediately about the residence of His Highness the Sultan unless military necessity require such occupation in case of war with a foreign power, and where the property of individuals is taken, due compensation will be made in each case.

Any person can purchase land in the archipelago of Sulu and hold the same by obtaining the consent of the Sultan and coming to a satisfactory agreement with the owner of the land, and such purchase shall immediately be registered in the proper office of the United States Government.

ART. 5. All trade in domestic products of the archipelago of Sulu, when carried on by the Sultan and his people with any part of the Philippine Islands and when conducted under the American flag, shall be free, unlimited, and undutiable.

ART. 6. The Sultan of Sulu shall be allowed to communicate direct with the Governor-General of the Philippine Islands in making complaint against the commanding officer of Sulu or against any naval commander.

ART. 7. The introduction of firearms and war material is forbidden, except under specific authority of the Governor-General of the Philippines.

ART. 8. Piracy must be suppressed, and the Sultan and his datos agree to heartily cooperate with the United States authorities to that end and to make every possible effort to arrest and bring to justice all persons engaged in piracy.

ART. 9. Where crimes and offenses are committed by Moros against Moros, the Government of the Sultan will bring to trial and punishment the criminals and offenders, who will be delivered to the Government of the Sultan by the United States authorities, if in their possession. In all other cases persons charged with crimes or offenses will be delivered to the United States authorities for trial and punishment.

ART. 10. Any slave in the archipelago of Sulu shall have the right to purchase freedom by paying to the master the usual market value.

AND I WILL SHOW LATER ON THAT SLAVERY EXISTS IN ITS WORST FORM.

ART. 12. At present Americans or foreigners wishing to go into the country should state their wishes to the Moro authorities and ask for an escort but it is hoped that this will become unnecessary as we know each other better.

ART. 13. The United States will give full protection to the Sultan and his subjects in case any foreign nation should attempt to impose upon them.

ART. 14. The United States will not sell the island of Sulu or any other island of the Sulu Archipelago to any foreign nation without the consent of the Sultan of Sulu.

ART. 15. The United States Government will pay the following monthly salaries:

To the Sultan	$250
To Dato Rajah Muda	75
To Dato Attik	00
To Dato Calbe	75
To Dato Joakanain	75
To Dato Puyd	60
To Dato Amir Haissin	60
To Habji Buter	50
To Habib Mura	40
To Serif Saguin	15

Signed in triplicate, in English and Sulu, at Jolo, this 20th day of August, A. D. 1899 (13th Arakuil Akil 1317).

The SULTAN SULU.
Dato RAJAH MUDA.
Dato ATTIK.
Dato CALBE.
Dato JOAKANAIN.

Signed:
J. C. BATES,
Brigadier-General, U. S. V.

And with it all we have ratified polygamy, Mohammedanism, and piracy. No; they agreed to give up piracy. That is the only thing that they have agreed to do; and this Government protects the harems of that institution and shoots down the congress of the Christians in the island of Luzon. I think we are departing from the ideas of the founders. The ideas of the founders are radically different from the ideas that permeate the practices of the Government to-day.

This Sulu agreement reminds me of an old German police judge who had a fellow brought up before him for polygamy. The German had been elected from wood sawyer to judge. While he was holding his court, a man was accused of having a plurality of wives. They could not call it bigamy, for he had seven wives, as the evidence showed. The arguments were in and the case was concluded, and the judge said, "Vell, the evidence is very blain. You got too many vimmins. Und under the law I must find you guilty of pleurisy. [Laughter.] Now you git right out of here."

The lawyers saw the man walk out of the court-house, and the prosecutor got up and said: "Why do you let him go when he is guilty. Why do you not bind him over? The evidence is very plain." So the old German said, "Yes; the evidence is wery blain. This man has got too many vimmins. I only got von and dat poor devil has got seven. He has trouble enough. Let him go." [Laughter.] And so the President thinks the Sultan of Sulu has trouble enough and too much; hence he pensioned him, and all the while allows the Hon. H. Clay Evans to withhold pensions from the American soldier.

Let us be one nation not like the heathen, interfering with everybody's business and neglecting our own.

Let us, as American citizens, demand that if this Republic is to spend its hundreds of millions and sacrifice the lives and health of tens of thousands of its young manhood, it shall be done in irrigating the great continent that lies west upon the Rocky Mountain watersheds of our Republic; that it shall be done in constructing magnificent and adequate levee systems for the Mississippi and other rivers, redeeming richer soil for a happier climate, and for the hundreds of millions of American citizens yet unborn.

Let us construct not only the Nicaragua Canal, but our ship canals, connecting our Great Lakes with the ocean on the east and the great rivers of the Central States. Let us add to our postal system a governmental telephone and telegraph, and thus bring our Government in line again with the principles of the founders, and not make it a military, European-imitation government, carrying fire and blood and ruin to the homes of weak and defenseless patriots struggling for liberty on the other side of the earth.

Let us be honest with ourselves and with the world. If our real purpose in the Philippines is to carry home as the spoils of war their cheap labor and their cheap commodities, let us be manly enough to say so. If our real purpose is to use the Philippines as a fulcrum upon which to rest our crowbar and pry up the commerce of the Orient, let us have the courage to say so, and not with hypocrisy and cant add to the sacrilege that has already disgraced nearly every generation of humanity by pretending that we are doing God's service. But, my friends, if we are in the Philippines on the low, sordid basis of speculation and peculation, then I insist upon it that we stop long enough to see whether this is the best possible business proposition in sight.

If we are going to war, like the Romans of old, for the sake of booty and spoils, if we are to invest gunpowder and human blood simply because there are millions in it, then let us choose the best possible investment. Let our energies and resources be directed where the least expenditure of money and human life will secure the largest return and profit. England has taught us and encouraged us in this thirst for blood.

WHY NOT TURN OUR 13-INCH GUNS UPON CANADA and reduce that country to our possession?

The roar of the very first cannon will be met with words of welcome. It would be a matter of only a few days or a few weeks until we should be in possession of every foot of territory from the Gulf of Mexico to the North Pole and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. There is an additional reason why this work should be begun at once. Just at this time England has her hands full and, according to the latest returns, has more than she can well care for, fighting the little Dutch Republic in South Africa, and this would make it easy and quick work to bring into our own family 6,000,000 people who are already entitled to fellowship and all the rights of self-government, and who would come to us bringing with them billions of property already carved out and billions more in prospect.

Is it possible that the President's Philippine policy is promoted by the vainglorious thought that he is not only to be President of the United States, but emperor of islands on the other side of the earth, so that he may make the vain boast of Philip II of Spain, who said over three hundred years ago: "I am accredited to be the richest man in the baptized world; the sun never sets on my possessions."

SOME LESSONS OF EMPIRE.

In our effort to imitate and pattern after Europe let us not forget that the Empire of the Romans has come to naught, and let us not forget that the Mohammedan advanced from province to empire with sword and fire, and yet came to naught. Spain in all her pomp and in all her wealth weakened herself, destroyed herself, when she became vainglorious, and to-day we see Great Britain in her decline.

Commercially Germany and America are taking away from her millions of trade which until recently she had monopolized. If any other evidence is necessary to show her decline, it is sufficient to remind you that while Great Britain has boasted for hundreds of years that she is the proud mistress of the seas, yet we have seen her for many weeks, with battering-rams and Krupp guns, so weak and impotent as to be unable to break even so much as a window in the humblest little home in the land of the Boers.

Let us hope that this first taste of blood in the Philippines will not turn us to brutish beasts, with an unquenchable thirst, and lead us into all manner of foreign complications in our greed, into every clime and every nation. If commercial greed and trade justify our course in the Orient, why not look after additional trade in Europe also? Why not offer England $20,000,000 for Ireland, telling her we need the island as a coaling station, in order to extend our commerce and to carry our flag across Great Britain and the Continent? If England refuses to accept the $20,000,000, let us shoot benevolent assimilation into her and all the while increase our prosperity.

CARRYING OUR BATTLE-AXES AND SPEARS, LIKE THE ROMANS,

No, my friends; let us not become a nation of savages; let us not become a nation of liars; let us remain true to the principles of the fathers; let us have higher and holier ideals; let us be ambitious that the Stars and Stripes may some day wave over China and India, Russia, Germany, and Great Britain, but let our flag be placed there by the people themselves taking new hope, new courage, and new inspiration, by the example we set them and by the lessons and precepts we give them.

Let us remember the lesson of our Bartholdi statue, the gift and jewel of France, our statue of Liberty Enlightening the World. Let us expand America and promote the cause of the Stars and Stripes by the example and precept of the purest, the best, and the most ennobling Government on the face of the earth, hoping that some day Old Glory may be the emblem of "peace on earth and good will to men," and that even Great Britain may yet become a republic, and that an Irishman may be elected her president.

I agree with Senator HOAR when he says:

"WE HAVE DISHONORED OUR GREAT HISTORY."

I agree with Senator HOAR'S resolution, introduced in the Senate weeks ago, which nearly all of the Administration papers of the country were too cowardly and too unjust to their readers to print. I insist upon it that our imperialistic policy is a policy that requires a censored press, requires a suppression of the truth and the facts, and therefore that imperialism is a shameful policy that resorts to falsehood and secrecy, fit instruments and emblems of all those who work in the dark and are guilty of criminal aggressions.

And now, my friends, in closing, it seems to me there can be nothing more appropriate than the poem and prayer of Dr. Howard S. Taylor, of Chicago, the poet laureate of the reform forces:

THE CONFESSIONAL.

God of our sires who hither fled
  Across a strange and stormy sea,
Who suffered exile, toiled and bled
  To make themselves and children free—
God of the Pilgrims! Smite us not!
We have forgot! We have forgot!

How runs the story? Far away
  We hear the epoch opening gun
Fired by our minute-men at bay
  Upon the green at Lexington.
But far and faint, we heed it not;
Lord God of Hosts, we have forgot!

The Bill of Rights our fathers signed,
  And sealed with shot and saber stroke,
Their just appeal to all mankind,
  Their prayers sent up through battle smoke,
Their faith humane, without a blot—
Lord Christ, forgive—we have forgot!

Ah, if where sunset islands lie
  Thy brave brown men their blood shall spill—
Shall strike for liberty and die,
  Slain by the heirs of Bunker Hill—
Thou wilt remember, wilt thou not,
Though we, thy people, have forgot?

We have forgot! A Roman lust
  Profanes our ancient holy things;
We trample justice in the dust;
  We have the rabies of the kings—
The scarlet rage of gun and sword!
Have mercy on thy people, Lord!

Thou wilt remember, wilt thou not,
Though we, thy people, have forgot?
God of the Pilgrims! Smite us not!
We have forgot! We have forgot!

OF

HON. EDWARD T. NOONAN,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 13, 1900.

The House having under consideration the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1) entitled "A bill to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes"—

Mr. NOONAN said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The House is about to adopt the report of the conference committee and enact into law the pending bill as amended.

The bill has already been engrossed and awaits the immediate signature of the Speaker when the vote shall have been announced, and the Treasury Department has anticipated the schedule time for final legislative action by making the necessary arrangements to comply with the provisions of the new law.

Therefore, at this late hour, it would be idle for me to presume to add to the diffusion of knowledge which the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD discloses regarding the causes and effects of this bill.

In my humble judgment many of its provisions are pernicious, and some are fraught with grave potential evils, the discussion of which at this time will subserve nothing more than to leave a record.

The first section of the amended bill declares that the gold dollar shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and the Secretary of the Treasury is charged with the duty of maintaining such parity.

I am satisfied as to the fallacy of such a proposition and the futility of such a permanent policy.

I believe the purchasing power of money is determined by the quantitative law, and that the quantitative law is affected by natural and artificial supply and demand. In fact, my observation has been that in all avocations for pecuniary profit the tendency is to combat, with more or less success, the operation of the so-called immutable laws of supply and demand.

For stability as a standard of value and as a medium of exchange I am opposed to a single standard and favor bimetallism.

I appreciate the influences which have operated for a third of a century to establish by legislation the single gold standard throughout the commercial world, and am aware of the temporary favorable conditions which render it expedient for its advocates to enact the single standard into the law of this country, and thus include the accumulated wealth and property, the existing debts, the domestic and foreign commerce of this great debtor nation in that hazardous financial experiment. For, in my opinion, it is on more than a forced experiment, prejudicial and disastrous in many parts of the world (notably in Russia and India) where it has been adopted, which even the present favorable conditions do not relieve its acuteness.

The experiment is dangerous in itself, but the manner in which it is sought to render it effective makes it doubly so.

While the business and values of this country are always more or less affected by external and internal disturbances, this bill increases the jeopardy from foreign sources and presents opportunities for financial shocks by domestic influences.

The effect of the gold standard is to enhance the purchasing power of gold and lessen the exchange price of all other commodities.

Its beneficiaries are the holders of gold, the creditor class, which holds evidences of debt, and holders of outstanding contracts, and those persons skilled in the arts of finance, whose trade is to buy and sell money, whose wealth and power enable them to made loans to nations, to undertake the flotation of gigantic enterprises, and to absorb or control, by concerted action, sufficient of the world's stock of gold to create an artificial demand, resulting in a trust of all trusts, a trust of the world's redemption money.

Its sufferers are the holders of property, the debtor class, which owes public or private debts, and the great mass of mankind, being the industrial classes, whose only property or capital is labor, who patiently bear the burden of unequal taxation, who pay all the profits of class legislation, which circumscribes their opportunities, and whose inertia and indifference are of "The Man with the Hoe."

The financial centers of this country have not yet recovered from the shock occasioned last December by the effect on the commerce of the world of the war between the great British Empire and the little African Republic (whose total population is less than my district), which produced a panic in London, Frankfort, Paris, Berlin, Wall street, Beacon street, Chestnut street, and La Salle street; which, in spite of the enormous balance of trade in our favor, presented the singular spectacle of the United States shipping gold to Europe.

When such a war by Great Britain with a small republic produces such a result, I fear to speculate upon the potential financial disasters which would arise from a war between any of the Great Powers.

The Bank of England replenished its stock of gold from the United States and the Bank of France. The Bank of France exercises its option to pay in coin, either gold or silver.

Arbitrage brokers of Wall street will take advantage of difference in the rate of European exchange of one-eighth of 1 per cent profit to ship gold to Europe.

WORLD'S STOCK OF GOLD INADEQUATE.

In my opinion, the world's stock of gold, even with the increased production thereof, is inadequate to meet the demand and requirements of its use as redemption money for the commerce of the world. And that fact will be demonstrated by foreign political disturbances serious enough to impair international commercial confidence whereby a demand for redemption money will result.

With the discovery of new mines and the invention of new processes in chemistry and electricity for working low-grade ores and cheapening the cost of production, it is estimated that the world's stock of gold in 1899 was $312,000,000.

The increase in the population of the world and the progress of commerce and civilization render the production of more gold imperative so long as it is the redemption money of the world. On the other hand, we know that mines become exhausted.

While it is a matter of speculation whether the production of gold will increase commensurate with its demand, there is no uncertainty as to the development of trade and commerce.

Only an ardent Utopian can conceive of the metaphysical possibility of altruistic nations guaranteeing to mankind the blessings of arbitration and perpetual peace.

Even if the peace conference of The Hague had stipulated a treaty of perpetual peace and disarmament, and thereby opened to the arts and marts of peace the war chests of Europe, in which the hoarded hundreds of millions of gold are now kept intact by the Great Powers for self-preservation from the imperialism of their sister nations, separated from the correlative premise of peace, in my opinion, the release of this hoarded gold would be a tonic to industry of temporary advantage, and of no more value in affording a permanent solution of the financial question than would an increase in the production of gold to an equal amount.

The accumulated wealth of this country is estimated by statisticians to be $65,000,000,000. The total debt of this country is estimated to be $20,000,000,000.

It is almost impossible to estimate the domestic trade of this country. Only a partial idea can be obtained from the total clearing-house transactions of 72 cities of the United States, which for the year ending September 30, 1899, were the enormous aggregate of $88,909,661,776. The total stock of money in the United States was estimated, March 1, 1900, by the Department to be $2,267,626,865. The total stock of gold, upon which all rests by this bill, was estimated to be $1,025,825,162. The estimated population of the United States is 77,395,000; circulation per capita, $26.12.

This great debt and the great commerce of this country rest upon a comparatively small amount of gold. How utterly impotent that small amount of gold would be can be readily appreciated if all the creditors were to insist upon payment in redemption money, which is 20 to 1. Particularly is this true when the greater part of our debt is held by foreigners.

I have seen no estimates of the accumulated wealth of the world, the existing debts of the world, or the volume of commercial transactions of the world for any given year.

In 1899 the total population of the world was estimated at 1,318,100,000. The world's stock of money was estimated as follows:

[Report of Bureau of the Mint January 1, 1900.]

The total stock of gold	$4,631,700,000.00
The total stock of silver	3,836,100,000.00
The total paper money	2,836,300,000.00
Total stock of all money	11,304,100,000.00
Per capita of money	8.57
Per capita of gold	3.51

How slender is the proportion of gold in the world must be readily recognized.

The United States, with one-twentieth of the population of the entire world, owns about one-fourth of the entire stock of gold in the world.

Our per capita circulation of $26.12 is less than many other nations, and the issue of bank-note circulation, encouraged by this bill, is an admission that this country needs more money in circulation.

As the rest of the world progresses in civilization it will require more money in circulation, and in crises the redemption money will be demanded. Then what will become of our gold? Such a disproportion can not continue permanently.

I hope that the production of gold will continue to increase in the future as it has in the past, and in that event sooner or later the objection on the part of the money power of the world will be, not to bimetallism, but to the single standard of gold, and in favor of a single silver standard, or some new standard more susceptible to their influence and control.

FOREIGN TRADE.

The producers and manufacturers of this country are making greater strides for foreign trade than ever before. The Philadelphia Commercial Museum is entitled to great credit for its efforts in this behalf.

The economics of the fields for their greatest opportunities—the Orient and South America—in my opinion, are arguments in favor of bimetallism.

Our newly acquired possessions bring this economic question closer to home, and its importance to this country is now more fully realized.

Mr. Edward W. Harden, special commissioner of the United States on financial and industrial conditions of the Philippines, in his report says:

> The question of the future currency of the Philippines is one which is of vital importance to all business men of the islands. The best informed men in Manila are unanimous in their opinion that under present conditions a silver currency is the only one suited to the islands. A great deal of the trade of the Philippines is with China, Japan, the Straits Settlements, India, and Australia. In China, Japan, and India the whole trade is on the silver basis. Though Japan has adopted the gold standard, it has, however, as the basis of its currency the gold dollar, which is approximately worth only 50 cents, and its currency, therefore, in effect is on the silver basis, the same as China and India. (Report Comptroller, 1899, Volume I, page 42.)

The per capita of money in the Philippines is about $2.50; China, $1.96; India, $2.07; Japan (metallic), $1.75; Central American States, $3.65; South American States, $2.67; Cuba (metallic), $1.94; Mexico, $9.12.

India and China, with an estimated population in 1899 of 683,400,000, have no gold to speak of and a stock of silver estimated at $1,318,400.

The foreign commerce of the Pacific is estimated by statisticians to aggregate $2,000,000,000 annually, of which our Republic enjoys less than one-tenth.

The doors of commerce of Asia and Oceania are now only partially open to the world. When the material and moral progress of civilization develops the physical and mental wants of the untold hundreds of millions of people of the Orient and dark continent, what will be the aggregate of their accumulated property, and what will be the aggregate of their domestic and foreign commerce, all of which it is sought to measure and exchange by the single standard of gold?

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

The necessity of a uniform currency of the world has been the subject of discussion by financiers and statesmen for centuries, but more particularly of recent years. Political parties of this country have made it a subject of planks in their platforms.

The Republican platform of 1888 is, in part, as follows:

> The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

The platform of the Republican party in 1896 is, in part, as follows:

> We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained, the existing gold standard must be preserved.

The bill now pending is, in part, as follows:

> SEC. 14. That the provisions of this act are not intended to preclude the accomplishment of international bimetallism whenever conditions shall make it expedient and practicable to secure the same by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world, and at a ratio which shall insure permanence of relative value between gold and silver.

In 1888 the Republican party condemned the unfriendliness of the Democratic Administration to silver. In 1896 it pledged itself to promote an international agreement for bimetallism. It now withdraws from its pledge and enacts, the mere surplusage, that this new law is not intended to forever preclude an international agreement establishing bimetallism.

The international conferences of 1878 and 1881 accomplished nothing because of the opposition of England, whose statesmen frankly avowed that as the creditor nation it would be unwise for it to lessen the purchasing power of the money in which her credits were paid.

The commissioners who went to Europe in 1897, under the resolution of Congress, were seriously retarded in their efforts to obtain a conference because of the cold water thrown upon the matter by the Administration.

European financiers and statesmen at the present time are unanimous in the opinion that the initiative for international bimetallism should be taken by this country.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

Banking associations, within the range of legitimate operation of deposit and discount, subserve a useful function of industrial economics.

But national banks enjoy special privileges as banks of issue, and exercise in some respects the functions of the Government, and truly become, as the name would imply, banks of the nation for deposit and circulation.

At the time the Constitution was ordained the power of the Government of the United States regarding national banks was the subject of controversy between the two schools of constitutional construction.

In 1791 Alexander Hamilton, notwithstanding Jefferson's opposition, secured the enactment by Congress of a bill creating a bank of the Union.

In 1811, when a bill was introduced to recharter the bank, Jefferson was successful in his opposition, and the bill was defeated.

Again, in 1816, another act was passed by Congress to establish "The Bank of the United States." It enjoyed a checkered career, first, because of mismanagement, then with the difficulties and opposition by the various State legislatures.

The controversy between the bank and the States was settled in 1819 by the Supreme Court in the elaborate opinion handed down by Chief Justice Marshall, in the celebrated case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, Daniel Webster appearing for the bank, in which it was held that the act chartering the bank was constitutional (4 Wheaton, 316).

From 1825 to 1829 the bank and its 25 branches began to exert a controlling influence in industrial affairs throughout the nation. Nevertheless President Andrew Jackson, in December, 1829, in his annual message to Congress, stated:

> The charter of the Bank of the United States expires in 1836, and its stockholders will most probably apply for renewal of their privileges. In order to avoid the evils resulting from precipitancy in a measure involving such important principles and such deep pecuniary interest, I feel that I can not in justice to the parties interested too soon present it to the deliberate consideration of the legislature and the people.
> Both the constitutionality and the expediency of the law creating this bank are well questioned by a large portion of our fellow citizens; and it must be admitted that it has failed in the great end of establishing a uniform and sound currency.

This resulted in the memorable political struggle between Andrew Jackson and the money powers of that time, in which Jackson was reelected, and his veto of the bill passed by Congress to extend the charter of the bank was sustained. In February, 1836, thirteen days before the expiration of its charter, the bank received a charter from the State of Pennsylvania. During the panic of 1837 its stock sold at a premium of $37 per share. The bank closed its doors in 1843, and its capital of $28,000,000 was lost to its stockholders.

Thus ended the career of the second and last Bank of the United States.

STATE BANKS.

From time to time since 1782 the legislatures of the respective States authorized banks of the State, State banks, and savings banks.

The Government influences, at the time of the civil war, discriminated against banks of the States and State banks.

Secretary of the Treasury Chase, afterwards Chief Justice, in his report for 1861, said:

> It has well been questioned by the most eminent statesmen, whether a currency of bank notes, issued by local institutions under State laws, is not, in fact, prohibited by the national Constitution. Such emissions certainly fall within the spirit, if not within the letter of the constitutional prohibition of the emission of bills of credit by the States, and of the making by them of anything except gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts.

The State banks were first taxed 2 per cent, then the tax was divided into monthly installments, in order that the volume of circulating notes would be ascertained.

The act of March, 1865, provided that every national bank shall pay a tax of 10 per cent on the notes of any person or State bank used for circulation or paid by them.

The act of July, 1866, provided that State banks should pay 10 per cent on the amount of their notes, all notes of any person or other State bank used for circulation and paid out by them.

This resulted in the conversion of about 1,000 State banks into national banks.

The Supreme Court of the United States declared these acts constitutional in 1869, in the celebrated case of Bank vs. Fenno (8 Wall., 533).

While the Federal tax is prohibitive in the issuance of bank notes by State institutions, nevertheless, the various legislatures have enabled the establishment of trust companies which have fiduciary powers and privileges in addition to that of banking not enjoyed by national banks.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1899 contains a table showing that statements of the condition were submitted by 9,732 incorporated and private banks for the year ending June 30, 1899. And, by a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it was found that 12,804 banks and bankers paid war tax on capital stock and surplus.

From the statements submitted, and the estimate on the tax of those not submitted, the total deposits of said banks and bankers are $4,264,162,361.

NATIONAL BANKS.

In the exigencies of the civil war and the necessity of the Federal Government to secure a better market for its bond issues is found the cause for granting franchise to the private corporation known as a national bank.

Secretary Chase, in his report for 1861, recommended the gradual issue of national-bank notes secured by Government bonds, and stated the following to be its advantages:

A currency of uniform security and value, protection from losses in discounts and exchanges, increased facilities to the Government in obtaining loans, a diminution in the rate of interest, or participation by the people in the profits of circulation, an avoidance of the perils of a great money monopoly, and a distribution of the bonds of the nation to the leading monetary associations of the country, thus identifying their interests with those of the Government.

In his report for 1862 Secretary Chase earnestly advocated the passage of the national-bank bill. He said—

That the United States bonds would be required for banking purposes, a steady market would be established, and their negotiation greatly facilitated, a uniformity of price for the bonds would be maintained at a rate above funds of equal credit, but not available to banking associations.

Congress in 1863 and 1864 authorized the establishment of national banks, with a franchise for twenty years, authorizing the issue by them of national-bank notes to the amount of $300,000,000, to be secured by Government bonds.

These acts were replete with restrictions and limitations upon the powers granted to national banks. From time to time new acts of Congress have tended to enlarge the powers and lessen the restrictions imposed upon these financial institutions.

The act of 1865 limited the amount of circulating notes furnished to banks in proportion to paid-up capital. Associations whose capital does not exceed $500,000, 90 per cent; between $500,000 and $1,000,000, 80 per cent; whose capital exceeds $1,000,000, but less than $3,000,000, 75 per cent; whose capital exceeds $3,000,000, 60 per cent.

The act of 1870 increased the authorized issue to $354,000,000. One hundred and fifty millions shall be apportioned according to representative population; one hundred and fifty millions shall be apportioned by the Secretary of the Treasury with due regard to existing banking resources, capital, and business. The remaining fifty-four millions shall be apportioned to those having, under the apportionment above prescribed, less than their full proportion.

In December, 1874, the amount issued reached $352,000,000.

No bank organized after 1870 shall have a circulation in excess of $500,000.

The acts of 1875 and 1882 repealed all previous laws restricting the aggregate amount of circulation, and since that date all banks have had the right to increase and decrease their circulation at their pleasure, subject to certain restrictions of those acts.

From the report of the Comptroller it appears that on December 2, 1899, the number of national banks was	3,602
Capital stock paid in	$606,725,265
Surplus fund	250,367,691
Undivided profits	113,958,857
Individual deposits	2,380,610,361
Due State banks and bankers	293,721,662
National-bank notes outstanding	204,925,357
United States deposits	73,866,941

The interesting facts as to the national banks of the large cities and sections of the country are as follows:

	Capital stock.	Aggregate resources.
New York	$47,700,000	$352,231,515
Boston	39,000,000	272,626,773
Chicago	18,450,000	236,451,153
Philadelphia	19,505,000	217,652,461
Pittsburg	13,250,000	115,091,144
St. Louis	11,400,000	84,705,899
Baltimore	11,058,280	66,630,563
Cleveland	9,900,000	57,237,953
The 11 Eastern States	191,113,115	1,906,650,783
Southern States	64,123,430	366,220,594
Middle States	159,661,880	1,165,001,649
Western States	29,919,100	215,310,003
Pacific States	19,307,000	127,01[illegible],633

The national banks of the city of New York hold about one-fourth of the aggregate assets of the national banks of the country. The trust companies and State banks and bankers of that city hold an equal share of the aggregate assets of those institutions. And I have no doubt that within the next twenty years the city of New York will be the financial center of the world.

The 11 Eastern States own one-half of the national-bank resources of the country and more than one-half of the assets of trust companies, State banks, and private bankers.

The greater part of the profits of these institutions come from the rest of the country; hence the necessity of governmental limitation and regulation of their powers.

RESERVE FUND.

Section 2 of the bill as amended provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall set apart as reserve fund $150,000,000 of gold coin and bullion to redeem in gold the outstanding United States notes, aggregating $346,681,016, and the Treasury notes of 1890, aggregating $87,198,000, said notes, when redeemed, to be used—

1. By exchanging for any gold coin in the general fund.
2. By accepting deposits of gold coin in exchange for said notes.
3. By purchasing gold with any bonds or notes of the United States at such and upon such terms as the Secretary may deem most advantageous.

If, for any reason, the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to restore or to maintain the reserve fund by these three methods, and that the amount of gold in said fund shall fall below $100,000,000, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to restore the fund to $150,000,000 of gold by selling 3 per cent gold bonds.

The present law requires the reserve of $100,000,000 in gold. There is no reason, in my opinion, why this reserve fund should be increased to $150,000,000. There is no necessity for impounding and withdrawing from circulation $50,000,000 in gold. The law would operate just as well between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 as between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000.

ANOTHER ENDLESS CHAIN.

By reason of the practices of the Treasury Department, and the construction of existing law by previous Secretaries, the endless chain was established. To remove that evil is one of the objects in which the present bill found its first excuse.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I raise the point that the endless chain is not broken. By the provisions of section 2 of the conference report, the United States notes of $346,000,000 and the Treasury notes of $87,198,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be exchanged for gold, or they may be exchanged to purchase or redeem any of the bonds of the United States, or they may be used for any other lawful purpose which the public interest may require, except not to be used to meet deficiencies in current revenues.

It further provides that when any of the United States notes ($346,000,000) are redeemed they shall be reissued, but held in the reserve fund until exchanged for gold. When more than $50,000,000 of the United States notes and Treasury notes are in the reserve fund, whereby the gold in the reserve fund is below $100,000,000, it is the duty of the Secretary to sell 3 per cent bonds to replace the reserve.

In the event of a bond sale the gold received therefor is placed in the general fund, and then drawn therefrom with the United States and Treasury notes in the reserve fund, and the general fund receives the United States notes and Treasury notes, and in the course of events they are paid out of the general fund in the ordinary expenditures and appropriations of the Government. Greenbacks and Treasury notes in circulation which are presented for redemption for gold go into the reserve fund, from the reserve fund into the general fund, and from the general fund into circulation again, which is another endless chain.

Again, they may go into circulation to purchase or redeem any of the bonds of the United States, or they may again go into circulation for any lawful purpose which the public interest may require, in the discretion of the Secretary. The only limitation is that the Secretary shall not use them to meet deficiencies in the current revenue.

This provision is ambiguous. I am not aware that the Secretary was ever authorized to use any given fund to meet deficits in the revenue.

REFUNDING OF BONDS.

The bill further provides that certain outstanding bonds of the United States becoming due in 1904, 1907, and 1908 may be refunded for thirty-year gold bonds bearing interest at 2 per cent at a valuation equal to an income of 2½ per cent.

The bonds provided for by this provision, according to figures I got from the Department, are as follows:

Fives of 1904	$95,000,700
Fours of 1907	545,345,200
Threes of 1908	198,791,440
Total	839,146,340

Premium, of which the payment will be in cash, to make them bear 2½ per cent to maturity, was, February 1, 1900, $86,495,821.

The Treasury Department points with pride that it is refunding these bonds at a premium to make the bond worth 2½ per cent, and that it is giving in lieu thereof a 2 per cent bond, and therefore saving to the Government the difference of one-fourth of 1 per cent for the remaining term of the bond, amounting to $22,695,609.

I see no occasion for the Department to point with pride for such a so-called saving. It is merely a premium of 1 per cent on the bonds which expire in 1904, 1½ per cent on the bonds which expire in 1907, and 2 per cent on the bonds which expire in 1908 for the privilege of having same extended as gold 2 per cent bonds twenty-six, twenty-three, and twenty-two years, respectively. In other words, a saving of $22,695,609 to pay $343,992,000 interest in gold for the extended time, and the additional privilege to national-bank holders to use same for deposit upon which to issue an equal amount of bank-note circulation at an expense or taxation of one-half of 1 per cent per annum.

The bonds of the United States not included nor authorized to be refunded by this bill are the twos, past due, $25,364,500, and the fours of 1925, $162,315,415. The reason these bonds were not included is that the twos are past due, and to refund the fours to pay 2½ per cent would require an advance of about $60,000,000 cash.

BANK CIRCULATION.

The act of 1882 extended the national-bank charters for twenty years. At that time it was charged that the national banks were attempting to perpetuate and protract the national debt merely to furnish security for national-bank circulation.

The Comptroller of the Currency in his annual report for 1882 strongly opposed the continuance of the national-bank circulation after the public debt shall have been paid off.

Based on any other security, banks would not receive each other's notes.

The discontinuance of the national-bank system was then the subject of public discussion.

The issuance of national-bank notes based upon municipal or corporate bonds or bank assets was deprecated.

That distinguished writer on finance, Horace White, said:

At all events, it would be a great mistake for us to perpetuate or prolong the national debt merely to furnish security for bank notes. While the debt exists, while the Government has not the means of paying it off and relieving the taxpayers of an annual interest charge, it may be usefully employed as security for the holders of bank notes; but to tax the people longer than is necessary for this purpose would be indefensible and would furnish good ground for the charge made against national banks that they oppress the community.

The purpose of this bill in refunding the bonds of the Government is to furnish a basis for profitable circulation by the national banks.

Under the provisions of this bill, the National City Bank of New York, which has a capital of $10,000,000, and which holds $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 of Government deposits, can use the Government deposits to buy $10,000,000 of these new Government twos, deposit the Government twos with the Treasury Department, and thereupon receive authority to issue $10,000,000 circulation. The $10,000,000 circulation will restore its Government deposits (less the premium which it will acquire by sinking fund); and it will thereafter, for thirty years, receive $200,000 a year interest on the bonds, and after paying the tax and sinking fund and charges, will have a net profit of $140,000 a year without the expenditure of any money of its own except the temporary advance of the premium on the bonds.

The difference between the profits it enjoys from the Government deposits secured by bonds and the bank circulation secured by bonds is that the deposits may be withdrawn on demand by the Secretary, while the bank circulation is at the pleasure of the bank for thirty years. And there can be no criticism as to discrimination in the bank circulation.

LIMITATION UPON WITHDRAWAL OF CIRCULATION REPEALED.

Section 12 of the conference report, which is about to be agreed to, is that part of the bill which provides for the national-bank circulation, and contains, among other things, the following clause:

And so much of an act entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1882, as prohibits any national bank which makes any deposit of lawful money in order to withdraw its circulating notes from receiving any increase of its circulation for the period of six months from the time it made such deposit of lawful money for the purpose aforesaid, is hereby repealed, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed.

This clause expressly repeals the prohibition on national banks from receiving circulation. The first part of the clause expressly repeals the limitation imposed by the act of 1882, that when national banks deposit money for the purpose of withdrawing circulation said national banks can not receive any increase in circulation for the period of six months from the time of the said deposit to withdraw.

The distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee [Mr. ALDRICH], in explaining this clause, says that "it is repealed in order to render the circulation elastic."

And certainly the effect of this repeal is to permit national banks to withdraw and reissue circulation at their pleasure.

The last part of the repealing clause of section 12 is as follows:

And all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed.

The construction of the repealing clause is important.

The section in question is section 12, which relates to national-bank circulation. The national-bank act of 1882 contains the following provision regarding the deposit of lawful money for the purpose of withdrawing circulation:

Provided, That not more than $3,000,000 per month shall be deposited for this purpose.

I contend that this limitation of $3,000,000 per month in the withdrawal of bank circulation is expressly repealed by the foregoing clause of section 12, for the following reasons:

By the simple rules of statutory construction, this limitation is repugnant to, in conflict with, contrary to the scope and intent of, and inconsistent with the effective operation of this last expression of the legislative will relating to the issue of circulation by national banks.

Section 12 authorizes circulation to the extent of $839,000,000. It authorizes the reissue of circulation, and encourages the reissue of circulation by expressly repealing the six-months' limit.

The amount of circulation outstanding last December was $204,000,000. It is expected that under the provisions of this bill four times that amount will ultimately be issued.

This $3,000,000 per month limit of the act of 1882 operates on the authorized circulation and reissued circulation.

The purpose of this section of the bill is to increase the national-bank circulation by increasing the profits to be derived therefrom by national banks and to reduce the burdens and restrictions imposed regarding same. It repeals the limitation of 90 per cent of the par value, and authorizes banks to issue to the par value of the bonds. It reduces by one-half the tax imposed by the Government on the circulation of national banks. It provides for the increase in the number of national banks by authorizing organization of small banks. It encourages the withdrawal and reissue of circulation by removing former restrictions thereon.

If this limitation in the act of 1882 be not repealed by this new law, it defeats the operation of the new law in the increase and withdrawal from circulation under the new law.

The franchise of existing national banks is for the term of twenty years from the date of their organization, or the time of their extension under the act of 1882.

Section 12, which authorizes the issue of circulation to the extent of $839,000,000 and the reissue of circulation of national banks, necessarily gives the right to said banks to make the necessary deposits and withdrawal from circulation during the term of their respective franchises. With the limitation of $3,000,000 per month in withdrawals, this could not be effected.

I contend that the repealing clause sweeps away every limitation, and in my contention I am sustained by some of the high officials of the Department.

The national banks issue circulation because it is profitable to them. They will withdraw the same if conditions make it unprofitable.

They may expand or contract the volume of the money of the nation in circulation to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Financiers hold that elastic currency is desirable for business, but it may be used as a source of profit to the business of the bank and as potential evil to the community when that elasticity is controlled by the banks themselves.

POTENTIAL EVILS.

National banks constitute no part of the Government. They are private corporations, organized for private gain and managed by officers of their own selection.

While the Comptroller of the Currency exercises supervision over them and the national-bank acts circumscribe their corporate powers, yet the Government is in no wise responsible for their acts.

While a national bank may be designated as a national depository of the Government funds, that does not change the character of its organization or convert its managers into public officers.

The present economic evolution of centralization, with the advantage of profit and power accruing therefrom, has also been felt and appreciated by banking corporations. In financial centers national banks of large capital have consolidated.

Clearing-house associations have time and again adopted rules and practices to subserve the self-interest of its members, to the loss of other financial institutions and the public in general.

The large corporations and trusts are represented in the directory of the large national banks, or as depositors or borrowers influence their policy.

The stock exchanges of the country are associations subserving public good wherein they afford an immediate market for known securities. The stock exchanges have the power to regulate the corporations of the country whose stocks and bonds are sold on their floors.

The rules governing these exchanges are more honored in the breach than in the observance.

The failure of their governors to restrict and regulate trading in unlisted securities; their permission to corporations whose securities are listed to issue new stock, to issue bonds, to declare dividends of 100 per cent, or to pass dividends without the record or the publicity to the exchange or the public of facts and figures justifying same; the toleration of bear raids and bull pools of unlimited capital for the purpose of artificially controlling the market to wreck unprotected corporations on the one hand, or to exploit others to the public on the other hand; and the toleration of the manipulation of call money to 186 per cent per annum by the call-loan crowd, are matters of constant recurrence worthy of the investigation of the lawmakers in the respective States and of this House.

The consolidated national banks which, with affiliated corporations, stock-exchange and clearing-house influences, are potential of evil to the business community of the country by the arbitrary exercise from time to time of powers and functions properly governmental beyond the control or regulation of the people or the legislative will.

With the present trend of events such powers and privileges should be restricted rather than enlarged. The purpose of this bill is to enlarge such powers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, whenever this House grants special privileges to one class by legislation, it imposes special burdens upon another class by legislation. This bill, from the caption to the last word, is fraught with special privileges, except in one place, which provides that greenbacks redeemed in gold may be reissued for lawful purposes which the public interest may require.

That is the only place in the bill where the public interest is mentioned, and even there the public interest reposes in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

It grants special privileges to the money trust of the world, special privileges to the bondholders, and special privileges to national banks.

Its fallacies and weaknesses will be disclosed in the first panic. It will be sadly shattered by the domestic financial turmoils which it promotes, and will not survive serious international disturbances, which it courts.

And I hereto set my hand and seal this day to be able to say, "I told you so." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Agricultural Appropriation Bill.

OF

HON. BURLEIGH F. SPALDING,

OF NORTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10338) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture—

Mr. SPALDING said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: As a new member of this House, and, I trust, possessed of some of the modesty becoming in a new member, I have occupied very little of the time and attention of this body.

I have the honor to attempt to represent a constituency numbering in the vicinity of 300,000 people, and I apprehend about as large a constituency as any member from a district represents on the floor of this House.

My people occupy a vast empire, 250 by 350 miles in extent, and are probably more exclusively agricultural in their pursuits than the people of any district in the Republic. It is a prairie land, beautiful and fruitful as any that greets the rays of the morning sun. Its people, coming not only from every State in the Union, but from Scandinavia, Germany, Russia, Great Britian—in short, from all the civilized countries of the Old World—and intermingling for one common purpose, have developed a wonderful unanimity of thought and opinion, uncommon in those States of widely diversified industries and interests.

They are not only educated, intelligent, and cultured, but practical and fully equipped with common sense, that greatest of all endowments.

The State has hardly been settled twenty years and has been a member of the Union of States barely ten years, but its people believe in education, not only for the rest of the world, but for themselves. They are progressive and liberal, yet at the same time conservative.

EDUCATION.

I find that Vermont, with 82,370 children of school age, expended for schools in 1898, $933,000; Virginia, with 582,100 children, spent $1,927,000; South Carolina, with 473,200 children, spent $697,000, and North Carolina, with 620,000 children, spent $931,000; while North Dakota, with 96,180 children, expended $1,280,000, or, with a little more than one-seventh of the number of children, spent about one-third more for education than North Carolina.

The interests of the State of Mississippi are protected on the floor of this House by seven members, who in 1898 received a combined vote of 22,365 out of a total Congressional vote of 27,187, yet the people of North Dakota showed sufficient interest in the issues of the day to visit the polls and cast 27,776 votes for its one Representative, or 5,411 more than the total for the seven Mississippi members and 589 more than the total Congressional vote of the seven districts of that State.

I mention this not to boast, but to show that the people of North Dakota are not only capable of exercising their right of suffrage intelligently, but that they take enough interest in the welfare of the nation to exercise it, even with less than one-seventh the object for doing so possessed by the people of Mississippi.

LEGISLATION FOR AGRICULTURE.

Mr. Chairman, much is said and printed in these days about special legislation and special privileges, and it is repeatedly urged that Congress has never done anything for the farmer. I am interested in the farmer. I am a farmer myself, and my neighbors and friends are farmers. Let us see what this bill does. It appropriates more than $66,000 for editors and their assistants to prepare documents and compile statistics for the benefit of the farmer; about $37,000 for chemists, surveys, pomology, and kindred scientific investigations for his benefit; about $12,000 for forestry and gardens.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

It appropriates $1,078,830 for the Bureau of Animal Industry, to which we are indebted for experiments and information regarding diseases of farm animals and the distribution of vaccine and other preventives of and remedies for diseases of stock. The beneficent results of the work of this Bureau are very apparent in my own State, from which I have lately received hundreds of letters testifying to the great resulting benefits.

This Bureau has done a great work for the animal industry. Its results can not be estimated. Fifty thousand dollars are set aside to quarantine diseased animals; $100,000 for making investigations, collecting statistics and other like work, and for investigation as to the feasibility of extending the demand for our agricultural products in foreign lands; $20,000 to investigate and test seeds, fiber, and purposes incidental thereto; $20,000 to investigate the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture and horticulture, etc., and ascertaining the best means to destroy those found to be injurious, and similar experiments; $28,000 to investigate diseases of fruits, fruit trees, grain, cotton, vegetables, etc.; $40,000 for investigation and information as to forests and how to preserve them, and experiments in growing trees in treeless regions; $20,000 for experimental garden; $25,000 to investigate relation of soils to climate, texture and composition of soils, how to reclaim alkali lands, etc.; $17,000 to experiment with grasses, forage plants, and animal foods, for the purchase of seeds and grasses.

EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

It gives $780,000 for agricultural experimental stations. Mr. Chairman, the late Senator Morrill, when he made provision for these stations, builded better than he knew. By reason of longer existence some of the stations may be more effective than that in my State, but the benefits derived from that station alone are inestimable. Last year through the courtesy of one of our railroads more than 1,700 farmers from distant parts of the State saw its work and thereby an interest was created that is most effective in disseminating the results of the work of this Department and improving the methods of farming. It gives $14,000 to investigate system of road management and making and the best road-making materials for different States, and publishing and distributing reports on the subject; $37,500 for publication of farmers' bulletins containing the results and conclusions from the different investigations; $47,500 for publishing and distributing other documents and reports.

SEEDS.

It appropriates $17,000 for purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, plants, etc. Here I may say that I understand this feature to be intended, not to supply any farmer with all the seeds he may need, but rather to give an opportunity to test and experiment with a few different varieties and give the rest of the world the benefit of the results through the Department. I have distributed my quota on this plan.

These, Mr. Chairman, with items of a similar nature in the bill, make a total of $4,116,800 for the direct benefit of the farmer, who, if he profits by the results of the experiments and investigations, is saved time and expense without measure.

The newly settled States will derive the greater benefit from this measure. Mr. Chairman, after seeing only the little I have seen of the work of this Department, it will give me great pleasure to cast my vote for this appropriation.

Gentlemen may sneer at some parts of this bill and may read poetry on "the seeds that never grow," but I suspect they may be more interested in cultivating the muse or the risibilities of the House than in cultivating the soil.

OTHER MEASURES OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

But there are other measures in which the farmer is interested, even though they omit any direct reference to him.

It is said that there resides in an Eastern State—we have none such in the West—a lawyer whose faculty of generalization is so cultivated that when engaged in the preparation of a brief he examines the various digests and law dictionaries and cites every case containing the name of the subject under consideration—that is, if briefing a question under contracts refers to every case found containing the word "contract." I suppose the persons who so persistently contend that there has been no legislation for the farmer proceeds on the same principle as does this lawyer, and because the word farmer is not in the act, in large letters, conclude it can not benefit him.

Yet there are many laws now on our statute books in which no direct reference is made to agriculture by which it is benefited beyond measure. Oftentimes only the certainty that some measure will be enacted into law works to the immediate advantage of the agriculturist; on the other hand, the fear that some existing law will be repealed or some measure enacted proves equally detrimental.

RELATIONS OF THE FARMER TO THE LABORER.

We are dependent one on the other. Whatever benefits the laborer and the merchant benefits the farmer, and whatever uplifts the farmer elevates the rest of the community. The surplus of the artisan supplies the market for the farmer, and his profits make employment for the mechanic. It is only another statement of the old principle that supply and demand, other things being equal, regulate the price. The mechanic uses the wheat and the farmer the boots and shoes and machinery. If there is no mechanic the produce will rot on the farm, and without the farmer the product of skilled labor accumulates in the warehouse; and without a stable measure of value all is uncertainty.

THE TARIFF.

The protective tariff, primarily intended to encourage manufactures, has proven of untold benefit to the workman by furnishing him employment, and at the same time has supplied consumers for the products of the farm and increased the price. With a low tariff all manufacturing industries have languished and the farmer has been the greatest financial sufferer. With a high tariff all is changed, labor is employed, capital invests, manufactories flourish, agriculture finds a ready market for its products, and the whole country revels in prosperity.

THE CURRENCY.

A sound and stable currency, good at par in all countries, is likewise beneficial to agriculture. With different standards and uncertain values the farmer suffers both in selling and buying. With certainty and confidence combined, certainty of a market and confidence in the measure of value, he reaps the greatest reward.

ATTITUDE OF THE PARTIES.

We find the two great political parties in conflict on these propositions in the past. The people remember with sorrow and bitterness the record of Democratic rule. They now experience with delight and satisfaction the results of Republican administration. Compare the ruin and disaster during the last Democratic Administration with the prosperity and contentment everywhere seen to-day. It is equally apparent in every form of industry—the shop, the store, and the farm—like conditions have resulted in every branch of industry.

BENEFITS OF REPUBLICAN RULE.

Three years ago I passed through the manufacturing cities of Ohio and Pennsylvania. The machinery was idle; the fires out; men unemployed and their families hungry and naked. A short time ago I passed through the same States. Smoke was issuing from every chimney, and they number thousands; no idle men were seen; all were employed at paying wages; their children were in school, and happiness reigned everywhere. I visited one establishment with 3,000 men in its employ, and was told that it had been weeks since a man had presented himself seeking employment.

On the farms, in the cities and villages, where, under Democracy, men by the dozens applied at each house daily for employment or food, now, during Republican administration, it has become impossible to get a man to saw your wood or make a garden. Where formerly great armies encamped along the highways seeking work or some way to earn a living, and without means to pay for a lodging, the camping grounds are now deserted and their former occupants are finding employment at remunerative wages wherever sought.

Statistics show that the value of farm products in the United States was $1,600,000,000 more in 1890 than in any year of Democratic depression. Live stock increased in value $700,000,000 and crops $600,000,000. Agricultural real estate in 1890 was worth $1,220,000,000 more than in 1889. During this period mortgages on farms occupied by owners decreased $800,000,000, and millions were saved to the farmers by decrease in interest rates. Such are the blessings of Republican doctrine when put in operation by a President who has the confidence of the business world and the affection of the common people.

This is not all. While accomplishing these vast changes of conditions, which alone would have caused this Administration to pass into history as among the most efficient in all time, it has fought a foreign war and achieved more speedy and bloodless victory than history elsewhere records.

While, Mr. Chairman, maintaining that the Administration of William McKinley has been well-nigh perfect, I do not consider that the only criterion by which to judge any Administration. When such vast interests are involved and such gigantic transactions are daily occurring in the conduct of this nation, rendering it impossible to give each detail the full and calm consideration which might be given it if no others were pressing, the proper view is from the standpoint of comparison, and what would have resulted with our opponents in power, putting into effect the theories for which they have contended?

We should then have seen war declared without ammunition for one conflict with the enemy; we should have seen money withheld for carrying on the war, after urging it upon the Administration; we would have seen our flag held in contempt by every nation, from the mightiest to the weakest; and not satisfied with this, we should have become involved in entangling alliances with foreign powers, the result of which no man can surmise. We should have seen our promises to pay at a discount instead of at a premium, our rates of interest increased, and our currency debased. Distress and humiliation everywhere would abound.

SMALL BANKS.

But notwithstanding the unparalleled prosperity and glory and honor which have attended this Administration, the Democracy is not satisfied; the offices are held by the Republicans, and the only hope of success lies in finding errors of omission or commission; so since this Congress convened not one subject, explored or unexplored, has escaped attack from the Democrats.

They occupied weeks in discussing the money question, free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, expressing their horror of being in the power of the national banks and their detestation of the banking system; yet, Mr. Chairman, that bill contained one feature which from their standpoint is more dangerous than all others. The power to organize national banks with a capital of $25,000 can, in my judgment, have no other effect than to double the number of national banks within five years and increase the strength of their grasp at the throats of the American people, as they term it, beyond measure. This feature of the bill was passed over lightly by the Democrats.

Did they attack this provision and direct the country to its dangers? Did they fail to see that it would in the near future result in placing banks where none now exist? Did they warn the farmer and the common people of the approaching danger? No, Mr. Chairman; to have done so would have totally obliterated this law as an issue. They know that the agricultural States, and the South especially, want more banks rather than less. National banks do meet with their approval in use, though they condemn them in stump speeches.

They constantly inquired who were asking for the enactment of a sound-money law. I can tell them, so far as my part of the country is concerned. It was the farmer and the laborer, the German, the Scandinavian, and the Russian, educated, intelligent sons of toil all, and not a millionaire among them.

Mr. Chairman, the subject of free coinage was first discussed in my State by two eminent Senators of the United States, who visited the capital as a committee on irrigation during the session of the convention which framed our constitution in 1889. They were invited by that convention, of which I had the honor to be a member, to become its guests and address its members on the subject of irrigating arid lands. They accepted the invitation, and while doing so imposed upon their hosts to exploit the doctrine of 16 to 1. From that day it was talked on the farm, in the store, and on the street.

It is related that if, in passing through the State in 1892-1896, you approached a town of any considerable size you would hear a confused murmur, which would grow louder and louder as you approached nearer, until on entering the place you would discover that it was a street orator discussing 16 to 1, and the burden of his song would be, "Millions, millions, millions, billions, billions, and billions," until his audience became entranced by the accumulation of figures and came to the conclusion that where there were so many figures there must be some reason to vote against the Administration, and, accordingly, the electoral vote was divided equally among the three parties, each securing one elector.

But these figures and theories did not bear scrutiny, and in 1894

the Republicans had 2,500 majority; in 1896, 6,000, and in 1898, 10,000 to 12,000. In 1900 we confidently expect it will be unanimously Republican. The greater the consideration of the subject the greater became the demand for sound money, and if I was sent here with any one instruction it was to cast my vote in its favor.

DEMOCRATIC DESPERATION.

But, Mr. Chairman, this was not the only disclosure of the motives of the opponents of the Administration, nor did their defeat on this bill result in their only discomfiture. They investigated the Secretary of the Treasury; they insisted on inspecting the mail of little Macrum, and in attempting to create many other issues to detract from the glory of the Administration; but each and all were dismal failures, from which they retired as gracefully as their anger and exhaustion would permit.

But to carry the comparison further, these same patriotic legislators and statesmen cry out against our government of the Philippines. They contend that the Constitution, immediately upon our acquiring these islands, extended over them and made each one of their inhabitants a citizen of the United States. If this be so, they can not withdraw, neither can we drop them from the Union; but in the same breath they say we should let them go.

They cry for free trade with Porto Rico. Do they favor it on account of their consideration for the Porto Ricans? Not at all; but simply because they want free trade everywhere, and must have an issue. Do they favor it out of consideration for the poverty and helpless condition of those people, and on account of their color are they so solicitous for their welfare? If they are, let them first show their generosity and their desire for justice nearer home. I recently heard a distinguished Democratic Senator state that they bulldozed them (the negroes), they shot them, they stuffed the ballot boxes, and are not ashamed of having done so.

In all its history what act has the Democratic party performed or what policy advocated that hasshed one ray of light upon mankind or in any way tended to lighten the burdens of the farmer and the producer? I will concede to it all the greatest examples of expansion under prior Administrations, and these are the only bright spots in its history. But they turn their backs upon Jefferson and Jackson and seek to efface and ignore their precepts, all for the purpose of raising an issue on which they hope to fool the people.

They deplore the evils of expansion, yet glory in the Louisiana purchase. They contend that it is unconstitutional to acquire territory. If this were true, we must confine our wars with foreign countries to the mere destruction of life and property. There are only three methods by which we can conquer an enemy—by destroying life and property and by capturing his territory. If we eliminate this last and most powerful factor, we place ourselves on the lowest plane of barbaric warfare. This is utterly absurd.

It is unnecessary for me to enter into further details. The people of the United States are familiar with the history of both great parties. They know that every prediction of the Democratic party in 1896 has proven false, while every promise of the Republican party has been fulfilled and its every prediction come true.

In view of this knowledge, Mr. Chairman, is it to be feared that the Democratic party on false and flimsy issues, raised by members of this House, can fool the people of the United States in 1900 as it fooled them in 1892? For my part of the country, Mr. Chairman, I can say that while it fooled many then, it can fool very few now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Does the Constitution Follow the Flag?

OF

HON. CHESTER I. LONG,

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes—

Mr. LONG said:

Mr. SPEAKER: In my remarks on this bill on February 21, 1900, I referred to a number of documents and orders showing that Jefferson and other Democratic leaders prior to John C. Calhoun did not consider that the Constitution went into acquired territory of its own force without an act of Congress, and carried with it uniformity of duties.

I now give some of the documents to which I referred.

LOUISIANA.

The treaty with France for the purchase of Louisiana was ratified October 21, 1803.

The act of October 31, 1803, authorized the President to take possession of Louisiana. Section 2 of that act was as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil and judicial powers, exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same, shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner, as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property and religion.

On November 14, 1803, Albert Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury, issued the following order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, November 14, 1803.

H. B. TRIST, Esq., Collr, Fort Adams.

SIR: The President of the United States having decided that until otherwise provided for, you shall immediately after the occupation of New Orleans by the United States, exercise the powers heretofore vested in the administrator or Collector, Treasurer of the Revenues at New Orleans, and authority for that purpose is transmitted to you by this mail. You will therefore be pleased immediately to proceed to New Orleans, appointing a deputy to act during your absence in the Mississippi district, or remaining at Fort Adams yourself, you will appoint a deputy to proceed to New Orleans.

In the exercise of this temporary authority, it is impossible to prescribe from this Department any precise rules of conduct and much must necessarily depend on your zeal & judgment, on both which perfect confidence is placed.

You will only be pleased to observe—

1st. That the taxes & duties to be collected under your direction are precisely the same which by the existing laws or regulations of Louisiana were demandable under the Spanish government at the time of obtaining possession.

2d. That in those taxes & duties are included specially those on imports, exports, transfer of shipping, &c., which were collected under those officers whose powers are vested in you & generally all other taxes and duties which made part of the general revenue of the province.

3d. That taxes raised for local purposes, such as those collected in the city of New Orleans, on meat, flour, markets, &c. for the purpose of lighting & watching and other City objects, are not included amongst those which you are to collect or superintend, unless they should by the laws of the place, be placed under your authority in which case those amounts must be stated and applied for the purposes of their appropriation.

4th. That you are only to secure or collect duties accruing after possession obtained by the United States and not to collect or receive any debts due on account of duties accrued whilst the Spanish government was in possession of New Orleans.

5th. That in the exercise of your office, you are perfectly independent from the person in whom the powers of Intendant have been vested by the President, anything in the Spanish regulations to the contrary notwithstanding; it being the intention of the President that you should be alone responsible for whatever relates to the collection of the Revenue, in the same manner as if you were under a law of the United States regularly appointed Collector of the Port of New Orleans.

6th. That you shall be accountable to the Treasury for all monies received by you in the same manner as for those you received as Collector of the Miss. district; and must therefore, make in every respect as far as practicable, similar returns to the several offices of this department.

7th. That you have the same powers to remove from & appoint to all the subordinate offices of Searcher, Weigher, Measurer, guards, Inspectors, &c. which by law you might exercise as collector; as also that of consolidating any of such offices as you shall think proper; and you may also abstain from filling any vacancy which may happen to any of them.

8th. That the said subordinate officers shall be entitled to receive allowances not larger than those heretofore authorized; and that you will yourself receive no salary, but the same commission on all monies received by you, which by the laws of the United States, is allowed to Collectors of ports not specially enumerated, viz: three per cent.; and also such fees corresponding with those allowed to collectors by the laws of the United States as may be demandable under the existing revenue regulations of Louisiana; out of which allowances you shall, as other collectors of the United States, defray the expenses of clerk hire, stationery, rent and other contingencies.

9th. That you may defray those several expenses from the revenue collected by you at New Orleans and also may with the monies arising from the said revenue purchase the Bills which the Department of State has authorized the officer exercising the powers of Governor & Intendant to draw to an amount not exceeding Ten thousand dollars; taking for that purpose triplicate Bills which you will make payable to the Treasurer of the United States and remit to him.

10th. That until otherwise provided for, the same duties are to be collected on the importation of goods, in the Mississippi district from New Orleans and vice versa, as heretofore.

I am very resp y Sir Yr obt Sert—

ALBERT GALLATIN.

On February 24, 1804, Congress passed an act abolishing all duties on goods, wares, and merchandise coming into the United States from the territory acquired by the treaty with France and on all goods going into the territory from the United States. The act provided that it should not go into effect until thirty days after its passage.

On February 27, 1804, the Secretary of the Treasury issued the following order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Feby. 27th, 1804.

H. B. TRIST, Esq.,
Collectr, New Orleans.

SIR: You will herewith receive the transcripts of two laws entitled "An Act for laying and collecting duties and imports and tonnage within the territories ceded to the United States by the treaty of the 30th of April 1803, between the United States and the French Republic and for other purposes" and "An Act relating to the recording, registering and enrolling of ships or vessels in the district of New Orleans."

You will perceive that by the sixth section of the first mentioned act, it is provided that vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, coming from France or Spain and their colonies and laden with the produce of those countries are not permitted to unlade at any other port within the ceded Territories than that of New Orleans—and that they are therefore precluded from unlading at Bayou St. John the other port of delivery in the district.

This provision was inserted in order to place vessels of that description, in conformity with the treaty of cession, on the same footing with French or Spanish vessels coming from the same countries with similar cargoes. But as Natchez which is made a distinct district does not lie within the ceded Territories, vessels of the United States coming from any country on this side of the Cape of Good Hope, and bound to that port, must be permitted to proceed there: whilst no foreign vessel whatever can be allowed that privilege: Natchez not being one of those districts in which foreign vessels are admitted.

As to the period of time preceding the 25 day of March 1804 on which the above mentioned act commences to operate, I have only to observe that in conformity with the Spanish laws heretofore in force, articles exported before that day from New Orleans to the United States, and to any other country, Spain excepted, were liable to pay the export duty; that articles imported before that day into New Orleans from any country whatever and even from the United States unless deposited under the privilege of deposit, were liable to pay the import duty; and that articles exported before that day from New Orleans to Spain, ought not to have paid the export duty. In case where that duty may have been levied on such exportations to Spain, it must therefore be refunded.

Should Mr. Morgan, who is appointed naval officer refuse to accept, you will be pleased to give immediate notice of such refusal to this Department. Should Mr. Garland who is appointed Surveyor of New Orleans, decline his appointment, you will give a similar notice and by virtue of the general powers vested by law in collectors, fill the place by a temporary appointment.

No person having yet been appointed Surveyor of the port of Bayou St. John, you will place an Inspector at the landing place near the mouth of said Bayou to perform such duties as that situation may require.

It is presumed that the laws will be sufficient guides in the execution of your duties except on one point of great importance and delicacy which requires particular instructions.

The United States claim as part of Louisiana under the treaty of cession, all that tract of country which formerly made part of the British province of West Florida and which lies south of the 31 degree of latitude between the Mississippi on the West and the river Perdido on the East. It is however understood that owing to instructions received from Spain, the officers of that government have not delivered possession of that Territory. This subject being considered as proper matter of negotiation between the two countries, it is not the intention of the President of the United States to occupy the same by force; and you are therefore to exercise no act of Territorial jurisdiction within the said limits, though part of your district, nor to commit any act which may endanger the peace of the U. States. But in the meanwhile the inhabitants on both sides should enjoy the advantages of a friendly intercourse; and some regulations are necessary for the protection of the revenue and to prevent the sufferance of possessions in Spain from being abused for purposes injurious to the United States. With that view the following rules must be observed.

1st. All articles of the growth, produce or manufacture of the said disputed Territory may be freely imported into the ports of New Orleans and of Bayou St. John as American produce and without paying any duty.

2d. Boats and vessels of less than —— tons burthen which are employed solely in the River or Lake trade, and owned by persons residing within the said Territory, may when coming direct from the place where owned and laden solely with articles not liable to pay duty, be admitted without paying Tonnage duty in the ports of New Orleans and Bayou St. John. And Boats and vessels not decked or if decked not masted, thus employed, owned and laden may in the River Mississippi and Lake Ponchartrain respectively be considered as American Boats and Vessels of the same description.

3d. That part of the said Territory which lies east of the entrance into Lake Ponchartrain from the sea, is in every other respect, so far as relates to the revenue laws, to be considered at present, as a Spanish Colony.

But the intercourse between it and that part of the same territory which lies on the Lakes Ponchartrain and Maunpas, in boats or vessels of less than Fifty tons, employed, owned, and laden as above mentioned, must not be interrupted.

4th. That part of the said Territory which lies on the Mississippi between the Iberville and the 31 degree of latitude, is in every respect, except that you shall commit no act of Territorial jurisdiction therein, to be considered, so far as relates to the revenue laws, as part of the United States and within your district. No foreign vessel either armed or unarmed must therefore be permitted to proceed there, nor higher than New Orleans which is the sole port of entry; and duties must be collected at New Orleans on any goods wares and merchandise liable to pay duty which are destined therefor, in same manner as if they were destined for any other part of your district. It would be highly expedient to apply the last mentioned rule to the part of the said territory which lies within the lakes between the Ibberville and the eastern entrance into Lake Ponchartrain from the sea. For the admission of armed Spanish vessels in the Lake may endanger the safety of New Orleans and if Spanish unarmed vessels or even the coasting vessels from Mobile, the admission of which is permitted by the 3d Rule, shall be allowed to introduce into that part of the said territory goods liable to pay duty, a system of smuggling across the Lake and by the way of Baton Rouge may take place which would be destructive of the revenue of the United States. On the other hand not being in actual possession of both banks at as New Orleans, such vessels may not be prevented by a mere act of the civil authority nor have we the necessary information respecting the present force of Spain and our own on the Lake.

You are therefore vested with a discretionary power on that subject, which you will exercise according to circumstances and on which you will consult the Governor.

The two objects which you must keep in view, are, on the one hand, to prevent any gross attempt to smuggle, and on the other, to abstain from any act, which might be considered as hostility, or might endanger the peace of the United States. And you will be pleased to lose no time in communicating every information to enable the President to form a proper decision on that subject, together with your own opinion on the best plan that can be adopted.

As connected with that subject, I will also thank you to communicate your ideas on the propriety of having any other port of delivery established in the district; on the proper station for a Revenue Cutter and the species of vessel best calculated for that service, and on the measures generally, which from the peculiar situation of your district, seem necessary for the security of the Revenue.

You are authorized in the meanwhile, to appoint and station a sufficient number of Inspectors and other subordinate Custom house officers, and to employ one or two Boats or Barges on the Mississippi and Lake Ponchartrain. And you are also in conformity with the seventh section of the act to repeal the internal taxes, designated to prepare and furnish the certificate, accompanying foreign distilled spirits, wines and teas.

It being considered important to conciliate the minds of the inhabitants of Louisiana, by every reasonable measure, you will be pleased to give the most liberal construction to the Act allowing registers, &c. to vessels owned by them.

For the same reason whilst you execute the Revenue laws with substantial strictness, so as effectually to prevent frauds of any kind; deviations from mere forms arising from ignorance and not essentially injurious to the revenue, must be overlooked, and every opportunity embraced to inform, satisfy and reconcile persons who have business at the Custom house. It is necessary also to impress the people with a high sense of the justice, honor and strict integrity of the officers of government; and for that purpose great care must be taken in selecting Inspectors and other subordinate officers and their conduct should be watched with strict attention. Indeed on this subject the President of the United States has directed me to say that he expects particular vigilance and energy shall be used by the Collector, Naval officer and Surveyor, for the purpose of eradicating the shameful and systematic corruption which has heretofore prevailed at New Orleans: that every subordinate officer who shall connive at any fraud, be guilty of extortion, or accept bribes or extra fees, ought to be immediately discharged and punished; and that every legal means should be adopted to bring to condign punishment every individual who shall offer a bribe or attempt to commit any fraud on the revenue.

I perceive two mistakes in the two above mentioned acts—The title of the act relative to registers uses the words, "District of New Orleans instead of "district of Mississippi". As the operative words of the Act in that respect are, "the territories ceded to the United States" &c., you need not attend to the mistake in the title, and as those words embrace that part of the British Province of West Florida claimed under the treaty of cession by the United States, you are to give them that construction, and permit vessels owned by persons residing there at the time mentioned by the act, to be registered, recorded, enrolled, or licensed, provided that the owners shall request it, and shall take the oath of allegiance and in other respects comply with the provisions of the act. It is also proper to observe that although the words "French or Spanish registers" are used in one part of the act, yet as in a subsequent part of the act the words "Register and other papers", &c. are used, it will not be necessary in order to entitle a vessel to the benefit of the act, that she should have had a register; but that any vessel which was navigated under Spanish or French papers and coming in other respects within the purview of the Act, shall be entitled to those benefits.

The other mistake is in the act "for laying and collecting duties, &c." The proviso at the end of the first section, which proviso relates to the registering of vessels owned in Louisiana, was as I am informed, struck out in Congress, and a distinct law, which is the other act now transmitted has actually passed for that purpose.

It is presumed that the proviso was nevertheless inserted in the enrolled Bill by the transcribing clerk. But as the act passed for that special purpose goes further than the proviso, and being passed one day later than the act which contains the proviso, virtually repeals any contradictory provision which might be contained in it, you will be directed in the execution of the laws, by the said special act of the 25 inst., and not by the proviso, on the same subject, of the act of the 24 instant.

For the sake of perspicuity you will be pleased to keep a distinct account of the revenue accrued between the 20 Decr., 1803, and the 25 March 1804, and of the monies received and paid on account of that revenue. You will receive from the Comptroller's office the usual forms in relation to subsequent transactions.

Permit me to request the favour of your opinion, which shall be considered as perfectly confidential and may be communicated in a private letter, respecting the most proper characters to fill the places of Naval officer and Surveyor, if any of the gentlemen who have been appointed should decline. Will it be good policy to give one of the offices to one of the French inhabitants? And is there any such who unites the proper qualifications of integrity and intelligence to a competent knowledge of the English language? Mr. D'Herbigny has been recommended. If he is qualified what is his standing amongst the French inhabitants?

I have the honor to be, Very respectfully Sir Yr obt. Sert

ALBERT GALLATIN.

On March 19, 1804, the following order was issued modifying the above order of February 27, 1804:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1804.

H. B. TRIST, Esq.,
Collec'r of New Orleans.

SIR: The President of the United States having taken into consideration the instructions respecting the disputed territory with Spain, contained in my letter of the 27 ulto, has thought fit to direct that so much of the said instructions as prohibited Spanish vessels bona fide bound to Baton Rouge & other settlements on the east side of the Mississippi yet in the possession of Spain from proceeding higher up than New Orleans, should for the present be rescinded.

You will therefore consider all the said territory whether on Lake Ponchartrain or on the Mississippi in the same light as that part of it which lies east of the P. Lake; that is to say, that with the exception prescribed in the two first rules laid down in my letter of the 27th ulto in relation to the produce and shipping of the said disputed territory, you are to consider Baton Rouge & other settlements now in possession of Spain whether on the Missi. Iberville, the Lakes, or the sea coast, as foreign ports.

If therefore Spanish vessels bound to Baton Rouge or other settlements on the Missi., in the possession of Spain, shall arrive at New Orleans they may be permitted to proceed to their place of destination under the regulations and restrictions of the 3d Section of the Collection law, that is to say without securing the duties, if they shall have in the manifest first delivered to any officer receiving the same, been reported as destined for such place, but giving bond as directed by the P. Section. It will be proper also to place an inspector on board such vessels till they reach their destination, and to have an inspector placed at the Iberville, another at Fort Adams, and if from numerous such importations any danger of smuggling is entertained, a barge or boat leave the Iberville to watch & examine boats coming down the river.

In no instance however you are to allow drawbacks for goods which have been landed & may afterwards be reported to such places; and Spanish vessels which may be employed in that trade; must be strictly watched & without hesitation seized in case of any attempt to smuggle or otherways infringe the Revenue laws.

I have the honor to be with respect Sir Yr Obt. Sert.

ALBERT GALLATIN.

On February 28, 1804, the Secretary of the Treasury issued the following circular:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 28, 1804.

SIR: As it may be some time before you can be furnished with a printed copy of an Act entitled "an Act for laying and collecting duties on Imports and Tonnage within the Territories ceded to the United States by the Treaty of the thirtieth of April, One Thousand eight hundred and Three, between the United States and the French Republic and for other purposes," passed on the 24th of the present month, I have deemed it proper for your government therein, to inform you, that by the third Section of the said Act, so much of any law or laws imposing duties on the Importations into the United States of Goods wares and Merchandize from New Orleans, which is the only port of entry in the said Territories has been repealed. But as the Act in question does not commence to be in force until thirty days after its date, Articles which have been or may be thus imported before the 25th of March ensuing, must pay the same duties as heretofore.

I am, very respectfully, Sir, your Obed^{t} Servt,

A. GALLATIN.

TEXAS.

On March 1, 1845, Congress passed a joint resolution for the annexation of Texas.

The President of the United States was officially notified that the convention of Texas, as well as the Congress of the republic of Texas, had sanctioned and adopted the joint resolution, yet after receiving this notification, R. J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury, on July 29, 1845, issued the following order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 29, 1845.

To Collectors and other Officers of the Customs.

The President of the United States has received official intelligence, that the Convention, as well as the Congress of the Republic of Texas, have sanctioned and adopted the joint resolution of the Congress of the United States of the first of March last, for the admission of Texas as a State of the Union.

By the 24th section of the act of Congress of the United States of the 30th August, 1842, it is provided: "That it shall be the duty of all Collectors and other Officers of the Customs to execute and carry into effect all instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the execution of the Revenue laws; and in case any difficulty shall arise as to the true construction or meaning of any part of such Revenue laws, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be conclusive and binding upon all such Collectors and other Officers of the Customs." In conformity with this provision of the law, it becomes my duty to communicate the views and instructions of this Department upon various important questions arising out of the new relations between Texas and the United States.

First. Although there is now a solemn compact obligatory upon both parties for the admission of Texas as a State of the Union, yet, until further action of the Congress of the United States upon this subject, and instructions founded thereon from this Department, you will collect duties, as heretofore, upon all the imports from Texas into the United States.

A similar question arose in relation to exports from Florida into New Orleans in 1819, when it was decided by the Treasury Department "that all goods which have been, or may be, imported from Pensacola, before an act of Congress shall be passed, erecting it into a collection district, and authorizing the appointment of an officer to reside thereat, for the purpose of superintending the collection of duties, will be liable to duty."

If, then, as is apprehended, imports should now be made from foreign ports into Texas, with a view to introducing here free of duty from Texas, upon her formal admission by Congress as a State of the Union, such exemption from duty, in conformity with the decision before quoted in relation to Florida, could not be permitted, "before an act of Congress shall be passed erecting it (Texas) into a collection district." When Congress shall pass such an act, ample provision can be made therein to prevent the sacrifice of our Revenue by the evasion of our laws, as now believed to be contemplated.

Second. In all cases where application is made to enter goods with the privilege of drawback of duties on exportations into Texas, before granting the debenture certificate, you will diligently inquire into the circumstances of the case, with a view to ascertain whether this exportation is intended for the consumption of the cargo in Texas, or for reimportation into the United States; and any attempt to obtain a drawback of the duties, where the goods are really designed for consumption within our limits, is a manifest fraud on our Revenue laws, which will be prevented by all the lawful means within the power of this Department.

After the acquisition and occupation of Louisiana, by an order of the Treasury Department, the Collector at New Orleans was directed "to consider Baton Rouge and other settlements now in possession of Spain, whether on the Mississippi, Iberville, the lakes, or the sea-coast, as foreign ports." In the same order it was declared: "in no instance, however, you are to allow drawbacks for goods which have been landed, and may afterwards be exported to such places." This order was issued by one of my predecessors, Albert Gallatin, and was sanctioned by Mr. Jefferson, then President of the United States.

By the 80th section of the act of Congress of the 2nd March, 1799, it is provided: "That the Collector aforesaid may refuse to grant such debenture or debentures, in case it shall appear to him that any error has arisen, or any fraud has been committed; and in case of such refusal, if the debenture or debentures claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars, it shall be the duty of the said Collector to represent the case to the Comptroller of the Treasury, who shall determine whether such debenture or debentures shall be granted or not." An entry for drawback, with a view to reimportation, free of all duty, into the United States, is a fraud within the meaning of this act: and in all such cases it is the duty of the Collector to refuse the debenture certificate. In all cases where the debenture shall not exceed one hundred dollars, the Collector will judge for himself, whether such fraud as is before designated is contemplated; and, in the language of the law, "if the debenture or debentures claimed shall exceed one hundred dollars, it shall be the duty of the said Collector to represent the case to the Comptroller of the Treasury, who shall determine whether such debenture or debentures shall be granted or not."

By the 76th section of the act of 2d March, 1799, it is provided as follows: "And the said exporter or exporters shall likewise make oath that the said goods, so noticed for exportation, and laden on board such ship or vessel, previous to the clearance thereof, or within ten days after such clearance, are truly intended to be exported to the place whereof notice shall have been given, and are not intended to be relanded within the United States, otherwise the said goods, wares, and merchandise shall not be entitled to the benefit of drawback."

If, then, in point of fact, the goods thus exported to Texas, are "intended to be relanded within the United States," they are not entitled to drawback, and if relanded, are subject to seizure and forfeiture, as well as the vessel in which they are thus introduced.

Great vigilance will be required in obtaining ample security upon all export bonds, as those bonds may not be cancelled in any case of exportation of goods to Texas, with the privilege of drawback, until the numerous and important questions arising under such bonds shall have been fully adjudicated.

You will in no case omit to publish in the newspapers, as now required by law, the names of all persons who shall be found guilty of the violations of the Revenue laws therein prescribed, as well as to seize, for forfeiture, the goods, vessel, tackle, apparel, and furniture, in all such cases.

As the speculations referred to would diminish the Revenue, and affect injuriously the interests of the people of the United States, and of Texas as a part of the Union, the utmost vigilance and the most cordial co-operation are expected from all Officers of the Customs in carrying these instructions most fully into immediate effect.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. J. WALKER,

On December 29, 1845, Congress passed an act the first section of which was as follows:

That all the laws of the United States are hereby declared to extend to and over, and to have full force and effect within, the State of Texas, admitted at the present session of Congress into the Confederacy and Union of the United States.

Why was this necessary if the Constitution and laws extended into acquired territory by their own force?

Up to and including the admission of Texas it had been uniformly held that the constitution and laws were not in force in acquired territory until made so by act of Congress.

This construction of the revenue laws has been uniformly given by the administrative department of the Government in every case that has come before it. And it has, indeed, been given in cases where there appears to have been stronger ground for regarding the place of shipment as a domestic port. For after Florida had been ceded to the United States, and the forces of the United States had taken possession of Pensacola, it was decided by the Treasury Department that goods imported from Pensacola before an act of Congress was passed erecting it into a collection district, and authorizing the appointment of a collector, were liable to duty.

That is, that although Florida had by cession actually become a part of the United States and was in our possession, yet under our revenue laws its ports must be regarded as foreign until they were established as domestic by act of Congress; and it appears that this decision was sanctioned at the time by the Attorney-General of the United States—the law officer of the Government. And although not so directly applicable to the case before us, yet the decisions of the Treasury Department in relation to Amelia Island and certain ports in Louisiana, after that province had been ceded to the United States, were both made upon the same grounds.

And in the latter case, after a custom-house had been established by law at New Orleans, the collector at that place was instructed to regard as foreign ports Baton Rouge and other settlements still in the possession of Spain, whether on the Mississippi, Iberville, or the seacoast. The Department, in no instance that we are aware of since the establishment of the Government, has ever recognized a place in a newly acquired country as a domestic port from which the coasting trade might be carried on, unless it had been previously made so by act of Congress.

EXTENSION OF SLAVERY COMPELS CHANGE.

On February 19, 1847 (Congressional Globe, volume 17, second session Twenty-ninth Congress, page 455), Mr. Calhoun introduced the following resolutions in the Senate:

Resolved, That the territories of the United States belong to the several states comprising this Union, and are held by them as their joint and several property.

Resolved, That Congress, as the joint agent and representative of the states of this Union, has no right to make any law, or do any act whatever, that shall directly, or by its effects, make any distinction between the states of this Union, by which any of them shall be deprived of its full and equal right in any territory of the United States acquired or to be acquired.

Resolved, That the enactment of any law which should directly, or by its effects, deprive the citizens of any of the states of this Union from emigrating, with their property, into any of the territories of the United States, will make such discrimination, and would, therefore, be a violation of the constitution and the rights of the states from which such citizen emigrated, and in derogation of that perfect equality which belongs to them as members of this Union, and would tend directly to subvert the Union itself.

Resolved, That it is a fundamental principle in our political creed, that a people, in forming a constitution, have the unconditional right to form and adopt the government which they may think best calculated to secure their liberty, prosperity, and happiness; and that, in conformity thereto, no other condition is imposed by the federal constitution on a state, in order to be admitted into this Union, except that its constitution shall be republican; and that the imposition of any other by Congress would not only be in violation of the constitution, but in direct conflict with the principle on which our political system rests.

These resolutions went no further than to deny the power of Congress to prohibit slavery in the territories. When New Mexico and California were acquired, their soil was already free, and these resolutions prohibiting Congress from legislating against slavery in the territories did not answer the purpose. An effort was made to extend the constitution to these territories by act of Congress but failed. Mr. Calhoun then asserted the dogma for the first time that the constitution of its own force, without an act of Congress, was in force in the territories.

On June 27th, 1848, he thus announced the doctrine:

But I deny that the laws of Mexico can have the effect attributed to them, (that of keeping slavery out of New Mexico and California). As soon as the treaty between the two countries is ratified, the sovereignty and authority of Mexico in the territory acquired by it becomes extinct, and that of the United States is substituted in its place, carrying with it the constitution, with its overriding control over all the laws and institutions of Mexico inconsistent with it.

Following this doctrine, and showing how fully Calhoun dominated the administration of Polk on this question, and how quickly the same Secretary of the Treasury who made the order about Texas could change his position, R. J. Walker, on October 7, 1848, issued the following order, announcing that the constitution was in force in California:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 7, 1848.

On the 30th of May last, upon the exchange of ratifications of our treaty with Mexico, California became a part of the American Union, in consequence of which various questions have been presented by merchants and collectors for the decision of this Department.

By the Constitution of the United States is declared that "All treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." By the treaty with Mexico California is annexed to this Republic, and the Constitution of the United States is extended over that Territory and is in full force throughout its limits. Congress, also, by several enactments subsequent to the ratification of the treaty, have distinctly recognized California as a part of the Union, and have extended over it in several important particulars the laws of the United States.

Under these circumstances the following instructions are issued by this Department:

First. All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of California, shipped therefrom at any time since the 30th of May last, are entitled to admission free of duty into all the ports of the United States.

Second. All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States are entitled to admission free of duty into California, as are also all foreign goods which are exempt from duty by the laws of Congress, or on which goods the duties prescribed by those laws have been paid to any collector of the United States previous to their introduction into California.

Third. Although the Constitution of the United States extends to California, and Congress have recognized it by law as a part of the Union and legislated for it as such, yet it is not brought by law within the limits of any collection district, nor has Congress authorized the appointment of any officers to collect the revenue accruing on the import of foreign dutiable goods into that Territory. Under these circumstances, although this Department may be unable to collect the duties accruing on importations from foreign countries in California, yet, if foreign dutiable goods should be introduced there and shipped thence to any port or place of the United States, they will be subject to duty, as also to all the penalties prescribed by law when such importation is attempted without the payment of duties.

R. J. WALKER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

There has been considerable discussion in the last few months in regard to the authorship of the expression, "The constitution follows the flag." No living statesman can rightfully claim to be the author of this expression. John C. Calhoun, in the debate with Daniel Webster in the United States Senate on February 24, 1849, first used the expression in these words:

Then the simple question is, does the Constitution extend to the territories, or does it not extend to them? Why, the Constitution interprets itself. It pronounces itself to be the Supreme Law of the land.

Mr. WEBSTER: What land?

Mr. CALHOUN: The land. The territories of the United States are a part of the land. It is the Supreme law, not within the limits of the states of this union merely, but wherever our flag waves—wherever our authority goes, the Constitution in part goes, not all its provisions certainly, but all its suitable provisions.

To this Mr. Webster made the following reply:—

The Honorable Senator from South Carolina argues that the Constitution declares itself to be the law of the land, and that therefore it must extend over the territories. "The land," I take it, means the land over which the Constitution is established, or, in other words, it means the states united under the Constitution. But does not the gentleman see at once that that argument would prove a great deal too much. The Constitution no more says that the Constitution itself shall be the Supreme law of the land than it says that the laws of Congress shall be the supreme law of the land. It declares that the Constitution and the laws of Congress passed under it shall be the Supreme law of the land.

The Porto Rico Bill.

OF
HON. JAMES R. MANN,
OF ILLINOIS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, with Senate amendments—

Mr. MANN said:

Mr. SPEAKER: There has been a vast amount of agitation and misrepresentation in regard to this Porto Rico bill. Newspapers of all classes have assailed it with an indignation and fury seldom equaled in recent years. This has been particularly true in the great city of Chicago. There this measure has been attacked by the newspapers with a bitterness usually reserved for local Chicago affairs and Chicago men. It were easy for me to have been with the popular tide in my own city by siding with the press and opposing the bill. But I was one of the earnest believers in this legislation at the outset and have never faltered in my personal support of it. I have and shall favor it because I thoroughly believe it to be right. I express no doubt of the sincerity of those who have so denounced it, though I have never yet seen any argument against the bill which commended itself to my judgment, nor have I ever seen in any newspaper opposed to the measure a fair statement of what it provides.

HISTORY OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Let us look into the history of the proposed legislation.

By the treaty of Paris between the United States and Spain the island of Porto Rico was ceded by Spain to this country. That treaty was ratified April 11, 1899. Prior to that time our Army had been in possession of the island for many months. After the ratification of the treaty the island continued to be governed through the military occupation of the United States.

The rates of duties imposed between Porto Rico and the United States remained as they were before the war with Spain began—that is, articles coming to this country from Porto Rico during our military occupation there have paid the regular Dingley tariff rates, and articles going from here to Porto Rico have paid the regular tariff rates established by the military commanders there, except in some cases where preference has been granted to articles imported from the United States.

The duties which have been collected in Porto Rico have been retained there for expenditure, and the duties which have been collected here on articles imported from Porto Rico have been retained here and covered into the general Treasury, except so far as affected by the law recently enacted by Congress.

POSITION OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

Such was the situation when President McKinley prepared his message, which was sent to Congress at the opening of the session in December, in which he declared it to be our "plain duty" to provide by law for free trade between Porto Rico and the United States. We have used the term "free trade" in this country for many years to describe the doctrine of a tariff for revenue as distinguished from a tariff for protection to industries.

I have no doubt that was the idea of the President, the greatest living exponent of the protective principle, when he penned his message. He wished to do away with the Dingley protective tariff law as applied against Porto Rico. And he did not have in mind absolute free trade to the extent of raising no revenue on articles shipped between the United States and Porto Rico. I do not think, therefore, that President McKinley can fairly be accused of inconsistency in advocating the present proposed legislation, as he has heartily and openly done.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

The tariff provisions of this Porto Rico bill which have excited so much hysterical and unfavorable comment are short and easily understood, though I have never seen them stated in any of the newspapers denouncing the bill. It is provided that upon merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico, or coming into Porto Rico from the United States, there shall be collected 15 per cent of the amount of duties to be collected upon like articles of merchandise coming from foreign countries. This would make the duties to be collected about one-seventh of what they now are.

The bill provides that all food products and other articles now admitted free of duty into Porto Rico from the United States under orders of the Secretary of War shall continue to go in free. The bill further provides for the organization of a local civil government for the island of Porto Rico and that whenever the Porto Rican legislative assembly shall have put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government there, then all tariff duties between the United States and Porto Rico shall absolutely cease and that in no event shall duties be collected after March 1, 1902.

It is further provided that all of the duties and taxes collected in Porto Rico in pursuance of the proposed law, less the cost of collection, and the gross amount of all collections of duties and taxes in the United States upon articles coming from Porto Rico, shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, to be held as a separate fund, which is placed at the disposal of the President to be used for the government and benefit of Porto Rico until the civil government provided for by this legislation shall have been organized in Porto Rico, when all of such funds then unexpended shall be transferred to the local treasury of Porto Rico, and all future collections paid directly thereto.

Under this legislation no internal-revenue taxes will be collected in Porto Rico by the United States—that is, the National Government will not collect any revenue from the manufacture or sale of rum or beer or other spirituous or malt liquors, or even any of the war-revenue taxes.

The other numerous provisions of the act relate to the organization of a civil government in the island of Porto Rico. I do not propose now to discuss the character of the local government thus to be instituted. In my opinion, the provisions of this measure upon that subject are ideal. They give a broad latitude for local self-government, with sufficient restraints to prevent undue indebtedness and corruption and to insure stable, orderly, intelligent, and progressive government, and to inaugurate a system of liberal school education.

THE TARIFF IMPOSED IS IN THE INTEREST OF PORTO RICO.

Every line of this measure is distinctly favorable to the people of Porto Rico. No such liberal legislation was ever proposed before in the interest of a dependent Territory. Those persons who have denounced this law as a grievous burden imposed by us upon Porto Rico have been quite devoid of either facts or reasons to support their denunciations. Those who say that by this act we violate the promises made by General Miles in Porto Rico certainly can not have read either those promises or this bill, though I for one do not admit that a general commanding our army in a hostile country can by his proclamation settle the character of the government or laws to be granted by Congress to that country if it comes under our control. That notion may be defended by Democrats, but it is quite too imperialistic to suit me.

There is to-day no government in Porto Rico except the purely military government. It becomes the duty of Congress to enact legislation for that island and to raise money for proper expenditure there in purely local matters. The objection does not lie to such legislation that it is taxation without representation, such as produced the war of the Revolution and caused the Declaration of Independence. The situations are entirely different. England was seeking to strike down the colonial governments already in existence, and override the charters previously granted, and tax the colonies to raise money for the English treasury and not to be expended by the local colonial governments.

Now, there is no local government in existence in Porto Rico. It is the duty of Congress to institute one and also to raise immediate revenue for use there. There is no other way to do it. Congress is the only legislative body which can act in the matter.

But it is charged that Congress has discriminated against Porto Rico. That charge is foolishly false. Foolishly so because as soon as the people read the law itself they will immediately see the falsity of the charge and turn against those who have attempted to excite their indignation by such a base and palpable untruth.

The people of the United States have been somewhat excited and alarmed because they have been persistently told by Democratic leaders and some Republican papers that, in addition to the other trials and tribulations of the people of Porto Rico, Congress was proposing to place new burdens upon them by exacting tariff duties. I honor the people for their feeling of indignation in this matter. They desired that liberal treatment and more than mere justice should be accorded to the Porto Ricans. And that is just what this bill in fact proposes. The indignation of the people has been misplaced.

It has become necessary to raise money to carry on the local affairs of that island. Manifestly there are but three ways of obtaining such funds:

First. Congress might have appropriated the money out of the National Treasury either as a gift or as a loan. That course would not have been a good precedent for our country or a good example for Porto Rico. How the Democratic leaders and followers all over the country would have charged that our new possessions were to be a great expense instead of commercial benefit if we had adopted such a method of providing money. How it would have been charged that the war-revenue taxes remained as burdens upon our people in order to let the peoples of the newly acquired territories go scot free from taxation.

Second. Congress could have borrowed money to spend in Porto Rico, to be paid out of the future revenues of that island. This was what the self-styled and so-called delegates from Porto Rico desired to have done. Such action by Congress would have been vicious. To put a burden of bonded debt upon a people without any form of consent upon their part is contrary to our theories of government and ought never to be done, if done at all, except in the most extreme and extraordinary situation.

Third. Congress could raise money by some method of taxation.

(a) A method of taxation on lands and personal property could have been inaugurated, such as the ordinary method of collecting State taxes in the several States. This plan, however, could have produced no actual revenue for a considerable period of time, and was unavailable to raise immediate revenue, for reasons which must be manifest to everyone.

(b) By a system of licenses and internal-revenue taxes, which could not easily have been put in force except by an organized local civil government, and which would have been very burdensome at this time to the people there.

(c) Or by the plan which has been adopted in this measure—that is, import-duty taxes. The indirect taxation method of raising governmental funds by import duties is the one generally recognized the world over as the best and least burdensome manner of raising money for governmental expenditure. It is the way in which the major share of the money for our National Government has always been raised.

In my opinion, Congress would have been justified while acting temporarily as the legislature for Porto Rico if it had provided that all the money to be expended for local affairs in that island should be raised by import duties levied on articles entering there from abroad. But we propose to be much more liberal. This measure gives to Porto Rico not only all the import duties collected at the ports of Porto Rico, but also all the duties collected in the United States on goods coming from there here without even deducting the cost of collection. Where in all history is there another such liberal treatment of a Territory? Nowhere. This great liberality has never been duplicated.

THE SUGAR AND TOBACCO TRUSTS.

But why should there have been objection to such liberal legislation by people of Porto Rico? The answer is easy. There has accumulated there considerable quantities of tobacco and raw sugar waiting to be sent to this country as the best market, but held back on account of the present high tariff in the expectation that the present duties would be much lowered or abolished altogether. Much of that sugar is now owned by the sugar trust; much of that tobacco is now owned by the tobacco trust. A few people own all the remainder of it. It is to the interest of these owners to have absolute free trade in order that they may not be compelled to pay any duty when those products are shipped here.

For that purpose they caused to be sent here from Porto Rico certain gentlemen who called themselves delegates and who demanded free trade. The interest of these men has been a purely selfish interest. They have labored in the interest of the sugar and tobacco trusts and other sugar and tobacco owners, and not in the interest of the island or people of Porto Rico. They have persistently misrepresented the situation and the proposed legislation, because that was their business here. It is true that many people to-day believe that it was the influence of the sugar and tobacco trusts which caused this tariff legislation to be brought in here in place of the free-trade bill.

The Democrats have persistently so insisted, and even the trusts themselves have been glad to encourage such belief. The trusts are perfectly willing to be cursed if they can escape the payment of the taxes. The idea that they prefer to pay as import tax on the raw material coming to them from Porto Rico instead of having it come in free is almost too silly and absurd to require a denial. But it is not true. The tariff provision is not in the interest of the trusts. Their only interest has been to have the tariff made as low as possible. They prefer free trade with Porto Rico.

CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS INVOLVED.

Mr. Speaker, most of the debate which has been had in this House upon this bill has been along the lines of the constitutional power of Congress to levy a tariff between Porto Rico and the United States. I do not propose to discuss that question. In a speech delivered by me on this floor on the 13th of February, 1899, I discussed that general question at considerable length.

I endeavored to show them, both by the history of our acquisition of new territory and the legislation in connection therewith, as well as by the opinions of the great jurists and statesmen, and also the Supreme Court, that in accordance with the terms of the Constitution the legal power of Congress over acquired territory not made into States was practically absolute and unlimited, and also that the provisions of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, providing that—

All duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

And of section 9 of Article I, providing that—

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another—did not in any manner control Congress in legislating for territory not yet admitted as a State into the Union. I do not think that the argument made by me at that time has been or can be successfully controverted. I do not propose to repeat it now. I was considering then my vote on the proposition to complete the acquisition of the Philippine Islands by paying to Spain the $20,000,000 provided by the treaty of peace. If I had not reached the conclusion which I then did I should not have been in favor of appropriating the money to complete that acquisition. I summed up my opinion at that time on our constitutional power in these words:

My position, Mr. Chairman, is that when the ratifications of the treaty shall have been exchanged and our country shall have acquired from Spain her title of sovereignty over the Philippine Islands we shall hold them as a common possession, province, colony, Territory, or whatever it may be called, belonging to the States which, in their confederate capacity, constitute the national Union. We may deal with and govern these new possessions as we please, unrestricted except by our intelligent ideas of humanity, civilization, liberty, and good government. We shall have the authority, if we wish, to sell the Philippines, because they have not become by the treaty a constituent part of our country.

We may exchange them if that is desirable. We may govern them with a government absolutely despotic in its character, or we may give to them such form of local self-government as will appeal to our best judgment, as will be in line with the history of our country, as will tend to educate the inhabitants of those islands for more complete government by themselves. The mere fact that we may have absolute and autocratic power is no reason against our taking the islands. Within its constitutional limits the power of Congress is already autocratic and despotic. Within their constitutional limits the powers of the different officers of our country are autocratic and despotic. We rely somewhat upon the good judgment of the men who are elected to office, and we also rely upon the right of the people, in their discretion, to correct an exercise of ill judgment by electing other and different officials.

I still adhere to that opinion. It was the opinion entertained by Jefferson and Monroe and Madison, by Chancellor Kent and Justice Story, by Daniel Webster and John Marshall, and by nearly all the statesmen and constitutional expounders of the early years of our Republic. I do not doubt that it will be sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States when the question is squarely presented before that court, as it can be under this proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican contention is that Porto Rico and the Philippines have not become incorporated as a part of our Union and that Congress may control and legislate for them as may be desirable; that Congress may give to them limited self-government or complete local self-government or complete independence, as may seem for the best according to the developments in the future.

The Democratic contention is self-contradictory. The Democrats insist in one and the same breath, first, that Porto Rico and the Philippines are now part and parcel of our Union over which the jurisdiction of the Constitution has already extended, and second, that we ought to cease exercising control over the Philippines and grant to them independent government absolutely outside of our jurisdiction. The Republican view is the one in the interest both of our country and humanity. The Democratic views contradict themselves and have no precedent except in the doctrine of secession. If the Constitution be already extended over the Philippines, there is no way provided in the Constitution for withdrawing its full jurisdiction. But consistency is not a Democratic jewel.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is both constitutional and proper. It is more than just to Porto Rico. It is liberal to an extreme. I do not think it is so good now as it was when first reported in the House from the Ways and Means Committee. It has been trimmed some to meet the views of faltering members. But it will be a great blessing to the little island which it concerns. It marks another constructive era in the history of Republican legislation. The Republican party has never failed the people. It has always lightened the burdens of humanity by its enactments. It does now. As Republicans, we fully believe that we are doing what is right morally and constitutionally; and so believing, we shall act, leaving time to justify us, whether the present does or not.

We propose to deal fairly and liberally with those peoples who have come to us with our newly acquired territory. We propose to grant to them a broad latitude of self-government, giving to them every power which they are capable of properly exercising. We are not striking down but are building up self-government. We are extending the sphere and increasing the influence of liberty. We are standing by the precepts and examples of our forefathers. We are broadening the scope of human capacity.

We are not depriving a people of government or liberty. We are conferring both liberty and government upon a people. We have not become tyrants or oppressors, and we never will. We behold the greatness of our country and the greatness of its people, and we have no fear that it will breed tyrants and oppressors. We have faith in the people and in the destiny and future of the Republic.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Democratic party ought to be treated as a common scold and ducked accordingly in the waters of oblivion. It is never happy except when engaged in bitter denunciation. It scolded about the civil war and scolded about Lincoln and his associates. It scolded about reconstruction and denounced General and President Grant without reserve.

For years it scolded about the protective tariff and denounced that great economic system as legalized robbery and oppression. On that issue it won the President and both Houses of Congress in 1892, and for the first time in a generation became responsible for the policies of our Government. But its leaders did not possess the genius of constructive statesmanship and at once commenced to engage in common scolding about each other, and the party, with the usual ingratitude of common scolds, turned with revengeful hate against those leaders whose frightful prophecies of the evils to result from Republican rule had never equaled the actual disaster and distress which their political success brought upon the country.

The real cost of Democratic success in 1892 can never be computed. It cost billions in money, and it cost hollow cheeks and wan faces, empty stomachs and cold firesides, happy hearts and warm clothing. It drove the rich to poverty and the poor to despair and often death. It was more expensive than famine and more destructive than plague.

At length, appalled by the ruin they had wrought and in helpless confusion over the panic they had brought, the Democrats turned in wild stampede from the tariff issue and, with unreasoning impulse, dashed toward the folly of 16 to 1. They regained their self-control only when they had settled themselves to scold about the gold standard and the damage caused and to be caused by our refusal to go on a cheap silver basis.

They grew red in the face and hoarse in the throat denouncing the era of falling prices and cheap goods caused by the demonetization of silver. They had nominated and elected Cleveland, knowing him to be a strong gold-standard and anti-silver advocate; but they now turned upon him with the fury of wild beasts to rend the idol before whom they had prostrated themselves in three national conventions. Out of the many common scolds in their midst they selected for their new leader the one best gifted by nature. They may preserve and follow him as leader so long as he can see only evil in the acts and legislation of the present and only dangers and pitfalls in the road on which we travel toward the future. If the time shall come when Bryan's heart shall swell with pride because of the prosperous greatness of our country, and he shall speak forth a word of praise for the contentment of the people, he will be cast overboard as leader and some other common scold selected for the position.

They gave our country the hard times, but they could not stop the warmth of the sun, the fertility of the soil, the richness of the mines, or the pluck of the people. They left us our hearts and our hands. They destroyed confidence, broke banks, ruined business, and pauperized labor, but they could not take our country away from us. Under a Republican Administration we have again become a happy and prosperous people; and now they tell us we propose to subvert the liberties of the people, and that we have become monstrous oppressors in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Anti-imperialism is their cry. Liberty and freedom have suddenly become their watchwords.

They who would have broken the prosperity of this country by free trade are now shedding tears over the dangers of the Porto Ricans. They who would have destroyed honor and wealth and labor by silver coinage are now tearing their hair over the threatened tyranny over yonder. The Democratic party, which stamps under its feet the amendments to the Constitution, which deprives the colored people of the South of their legal right to vote, and which denies to them participation in self-government in the South, which looks with complacency and without punishment upon the lynching and horrible burning by mob violence of blacks in the South, so as to better keep them in a state of subdued subjection, now has the traditional idiocy and monumental hypocrisy to pose as the special champion of freedom and the right of the colored peoples of the Philippines to self-government, and to accuse President McKinley and the Republican party of treason to the fundamental principles of our Republic.

Why, sirs, it was the Republican party which carried our Government successfully through the civil war for liberty's sake; which freed the blacks in the South for liberty's sake; which upheld the payment of our national debts for honor's sake; which stamped out polygamy in Utah for decency's sake; which enacted tariff laws for prosperity's sake; which drove Spain out of Cuba for liberty's sake. What has the Democratic party done for liberty or country during all this time? Nothing but scold.

Have no fear of the attitude of the Republican party toward the Philippines or Porto Rico. They will never be oppressed by Republican leadership or a Republican Administration.

The islands are ours, and we shall keep them in the interest of civilization, trade, and liberty, notwithstanding the common scolding indulged in by the Demmies, the aunties, and the grannies. The Republic is not doomed. The sphere of its liberty is enlarging.

The Democrats seem to have lost faith in our people, but then that is reciprocated. The Republicans still have supreme faith in our country and in the honor, honesty, intelligence, and good motives of the people, and that, too, seems to be reciprocated. Poor old Democracy. Its past is without merit. Its future is without hope. Its leaders apologize for their followers, and its followers apologize for their leaders. Both apologies are appropriate.

Election of Senators by the People.

OF

HON. NICHOLAS MULLER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 12, 1900.

The House having under consideration House joint resolution No. 28, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States—

Mr. MULLER said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill now before the House to amend the Constitution of our country is worthy of every consideration.

It is a sacred instrument and has served for many years the purpose of the greatest of all republics.

The veneration of the people for it is the greatest monument to our life and individual liberty.

Our forefathers saw the necessity for amendments, as is evidenced by Article V of the Constitution, and it is proposed by the majority report to follow this course in this emergency.

Your committee in charge of the bill, Mr. Speaker, unanimously agreed that a change should be made in the manner of electing United States Senators, and they are supported in their views by the people of more than thirty States in this great Union, both by petition and a direct vote of the people, and surely such a strong representation should be heeded by an American Congress.

Under the present arrangement the Senators are elected, not by the people, but by the representatives in the legislatures of the different States.

Under the conditions existing at the time of the framing of the Constitution our forefathers undoubtedly were right as conditions then existed.

The proposition to elect Senators by the vote of the people is not new. It was urged at the time of the adoption of the Constitution itself by men prominent in the councils of the country.

The debate on the Federal Constitution shows that no serious objection was made against the right of the people to elect United States Senators.

It is only right, Mr. Speaker, that the House respond to the universal demand from almost every State for a change in this form of election of their representatives.

We are having many examples of the corrupt means and influences adopted by unscrupulous and ambitious men who desire to obtain seats in the United States Senate. What wrong can be committed by a direct appeal to the people? They are entirely capable of electing their Representatives in Congress, the municipal, State, judicial, and other officers; why not their Senators?

I have unbounded faith in the judgment of the people, and hail with delight the opportunity to place myself on record in favor of the election of United States Senators by the popular vote of the people.

The development of the people of the United States by the widespread education given them has removed all reason which may have existed at the time the Constitution was framed. This movement is in accordance with our institutions, our development, our democratic policy, and brings the only branch of the Legislature which has heretofore been separated from direct contact immediately in touch and directly responsible to the voters, and as such, in my opinion, it is an improvement and in accordance with the fundamental principles of the Democratic party.

Government for the Territory of Hawaii.

OF
HON. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, OF NEVADA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 6, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii—

Mr. NEWLANDS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to provide for a commissioner of labor in Hawaii, whose duty it shall be to present annual reports to the governor and legislature of Hawaii and to the Department of Labor in the United States as to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary conditions of the laboring classes in Hawaii. This provision has been, at my request, drawn up by Mr. Carroll Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, and is substantially as he drew it, with the exception that I have inserted a provision that these reports should be made to the governor and legislature of Hawaii as well as to the Department of Labor in the United States. I wish to say in this connection that the numerous amendments which I have offered to this bill have related entirely to the system of land tenure and labor employment there existing.

In my judgment the future of the Hawaiian Islands, as well as that of the other semitropical and tropical islands we have recently acquired, will depend not so much upon the form of their government as it will upon the economic conditions there existing. The form of the government may be perfect; the organic act which we provide for the government of Hawaii may conform with the most advanced ideas of free government; yet if the economic conditions there are such as to perpetuate an extensive system of land monopoly, the concentration of large areas of land in the hands of individuals and corporations, employing laborers as mere machines for the cultivation of the soil, we can not hope to develop there such citizenship as will be able to maintain the free institutions of a republic.

As I have previously stated, the population of the Hawaiian Islands consists of about 60,000 Asiatics, half Chinese and half Japanese; 40,000 Kanakas, the native people of Hawaii; 15,000 Portuguese, and about 8,000 other whites. It is fair to assume that as yet the Portuguese are not educated. Probably the most of them have been imported into these islands and are unfamiliar with the English language, so that we have a population of 23,000 white people as against 100,000 of Asiatics and natives, and of these 23,000 white people it is probable that not more than 8,000 are equal in intelligence and education to the average white citizen of the United States.

A few of these 8,000 whites are in the ownership and control of almost all the land in these islands. The main occupation there is agricultural, all the commerce being merely incidental to the great sugar interests of these islands. The sugar plantations are almost entirely owned by corporations, and the holdings run as high as five or ten thousand acres. Corporate control is the most convenient, effective, and economic method of managing sugar plantations. It secures cooperation of capital, and it enables capital to enter upon a comprehensive plan of improvement which contemplates, first, the acquisition of a large area of land; second, the construction of extensive irrigation works with which to irrigate it; third, the construction of a central sugar mill for the purpose of grinding the cane, and fourth, the construction of a radial railway connecting all parts of the plantation, by means of which the cane can be economically transported to the factory.

Upon these plantations are employed about 60,000 Asiatics, as well as a certain proportion of the Kanaka and Portuguese population. The tendency is to regard the Asiatic laborers as mere machines. Their food, their health, their sanitary conditions are looked after only with a view to maintaining their efficiency as machines. As to the Kanakas, they are a kindly people who have received a fair education, but who seem unable to withstand the contact of strong and vigorous races, and as a result the native race is gradually becoming extinct.

It is probable that these islands will support a population of a half million of people, and the development of the industries there will necessitate the increase of population by means of immigration from without. Chinese immigration is now prohibited by the United States laws, but other Asiatics, such as the Japanese, can enter, and they are crowding there in large numbers. Unless, therefore, we are content to allow the Japanese to gradually meet all the increasing requirements of these islands for laborers, we must devise some system by which the migration of citizens of the United States, white or black, or of the white people of other countries shall be promoted; and we can never expect to be able to successfully promote such migration if the laboring class is to be attached, as heretofore, in a semiservile capacity to the soil, without rights in it. The promotion, therefore, of small land holdings is absolutely essential to the promotion of a desirable immigration, and without the latter Hawaii will be republican in name only.

The task is a difficult one, I admit, but the more difficult it is the sooner we should enter upon it. We can not expect the class which has heretofore governed the islands, intelligent, public-spirited, and capable though it be, to work out the reforms that will be essential to the maintenance of republican institutions. They are the landed class. They are the beneficiaries of the system which now prevails there, a system which increases the dignity and wealth of the landowner and degrades the condition of the land laborer, a system which has given this class the wealth which it possesses. It can never be expected that the beneficiaries of an abuse will reform that abuse. This is too much to hope of human nature. The landowning class will control the political government of Hawaii, and any reform in the future must be compelled and forced by the United States Government through its control over Hawaii as a Territory of the United States.

It is urged that the sugar industry is such as to require large holdings and semiservile labor, and that the climate of Hawaii is unsuited to the labor of any other class than that now employed there, and that therefore reform is hopeless. My answer is that by admission of Hawaii to the commercial union of the United States large markets have been given to her sugar production, which have vastly increased its value, and that we will be recreant to our duty if we permit the entire benefits of this increase of the value of their sugar product to go to capital instead of being divided into some fair proportion between capital and labor. Are we to perpetuate a system which will raise the value of sugar lands from $50 an acre to a thousand, two thousand, and three thousand dollars an acre and say none of the benefits of this system shall go to the labor employed upon the land? The very foundation of the protective system of this country is that monopoly of American markets given to American products tends not so much to the advantage of capital as it does to the elevation of labor. If, then, our tariff on sugar gives to Hawaii a share in the monopoly of American markets, should we not see to it that this advantage accrues to the labor as well as to capital; the men employed to the soil as well as the men who own the soil?

As to the climate, the very fact that 15,000 Portuguese are now employed there indicates that it is adapted to the white races. The immigration of the Italians and Portuguese can be encouraged there rather than the immigration of Asiatics. The Italians and Portuguese in our Western country constitute a very valuable part of our community. They are soon assimilated. Their children are educated in our schools and become familiar with and attached to our institutions. Then, again, the climate is adapted to our negroes, who are now citizens of the United States, entitled to political rights; and then the overcrowded condition of Porto Rico offers an opportunity for the gradual transfer of thousands of people who are accustomed to a climate almost identical with that of Hawaii, and who have been trained in the very industries pursued in Hawaii. But the migration of the inhabitants of Porto Rico and the whites and the negro population of the South and of the Italians and Portuguese can not be promoted if the large holdings of land are to be continued.

It is, perhaps, essential that these large holdings should be permitted for the purpose of development, that is to say, it may be a wise thing to permit a corporation to hold a large tract of land with a view to its development by irrigation works and the construction of a sugar factory and the construction of a railway system for transportation, but when this is accomplished the policy of the State should be to compel the partitioning of this area into convenient tracts, with water rights attached; the waterworks, the sugar factory, and the railroad to be charged with a public use and their rates regulated by law, either through a commissioner or the courts. Such enterprises are to-day conducted all through the arid West and in California. Large areas of land are taken up, irrigation works constructed, and when completed the lands are divided into small tracts of from 20 to 40 acres, with water rights attached, and the land sold to small holders whose rights to the water are protected by law. Such a system could be inaugurated in Hawaii, but it must be compulsory, for the profits of sugar production are so large there as to appeal to the selfishness of monopolies and trusts.

The question is, how can this be done without violently wrenching the business as now conducted? No one, of course, wishes to accomplish reform at the expense of a temporary industrial readjustment which will bring distress or loss to that community, and it is for this reason that I have urged throughout, in the consideration of this bill, amendments which would call the attention both of the governing body in Hawaii and the governing body here to the desired reforms, and which would result in the collection of accurate statistical information that would be a guide to future action both there and here. I have been as anxious that the intelligent thought of Hawaii should be stimulated to action upon this matter as well as our own, for the reason that I fear when this organic act is passed our attention will be so much absorbed in other questions of domestic and foreign relations that the Hawaiian Islands will drift from our consideration, and I wish to plant the seed of an agitation there which will make itself felt in local legislation, and, if necessary, in such a movement as will compel attention at the Capitol of the nation.

The tendency of human nature is to apply remedial legislation rather than to engage in preventive legislation. Whilst preventive legislation may be easier, yet indolence prompts us to wait till abuses cry aloud for a remedy. We are all more likely to take this view as to the questions now under consideration because we have never yet ourselves experienced the evils of land monopoly. We have here a population of 70,000,000 people in a country capable of sustaining 400,000,000. There has been as yet no congestion of population. Land has been the one thing of which we have had a superabundance; but this is not true of Hawaii, Porto Rico, or Luzon, and history tells us that the centralization of land ownership has been the fruitful cause of most disastrous wars and prolonged and violent agitations. We can rest assured that all the disturbances which history accredit to a system of land monopoly will be felt in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Luzon when the advantages of our extended markets advance the value of the sugar lands in those islands to a point where they will arouse the greed of the trusts and syndicates. History teaches us that unless restrained by law these great monopolies will accommodate themselves to any system of degraded labor which will advance the profits of the land.

Turning for a moment from this general view of the subject, I wish to state that the amendments which I have offered were prepared upon the floor of the House whilst the bill was under consideration. I do not claim that they are as perfect as they might be. I have had no time to go into the details of this question, absorbed as I have been by the questions which have been before the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member; but my purpose has been to insert in this bill certain amendments which can be made the basis of thoughtful consideration by the conferees of the Senate and the House when this bill goes before them, and which can be there shaped in more scientific terms.

Now, what are the amendments which I have offered, both successful and unsuccessful?

First. In that provision of the organic act of Hawaii which provides for the organization of corporations by the legislature of Hawaii, I offered an amendment that no corporation, domestic or foreign, should in the future acquire and hold real estate in excess of 1,000 acres. That amendment was carried. I do not pretend that that amendment will reach the entire difficulty to which I have alluded. It will, however, go to the conferees and opportunity be given to shape it in such a way as will gradually and progressively diminish the evils of land monopoly. For instance, they might amend this by providing that corporations could acquire larger areas than 1,000 acres, and could develop irrigation works upon them, construct a factory, and build a railroad, but that when the entire enterprise was completed they should sell the lands so acquired in small holdings at the rate of not less than one-twentieth or one-tenth of the total every year; the factory, the irrigation works, and the railroad being held and retained by the corporation or its assignees as a public use, with charges regulated by law, so that the ownership of this public use could not be used in such a way as to oppress the land and transfer its value to the owners of the public use. They might also compel the gradual division and sale of existing holdings, or, if the conferees were indisposed to map out any definite system, they could provide the appointment of a commission whose duty it would be to inquire into the condition of land holdings in Hawaii and to report to Congress a method for gradually rectifying its abuses.

Another amendment which I offered was one defining the duties of the surveyor-general of Hawaii and providing that he should report annually to the Department of Labor of the United States and to the governor of Hawaii and the legislature the owners of all holdings not less than 100 acres in extent, by whom owned, the character of the cultivation, the number of laborers employed on each holding, their nationality, the wages paid, and such other information as the Department of Labor might prescribe. This amendment was adopted by the House. It simply provides for the statistical information which will enable the legislature of Hawaii and the Congress of the United States to act.

I also offered an amendment declaring it to be the purpose of the United States to promote the increase of white labor in Hawaii and to discourage the employment of Asiatics, and enacting that every corporation employing labor in Hawaii should, within one year, employ at least one-tenth of its laborers from citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, and other white persons, and that such corporations should increase the number of such laborers one-tenth annually, until at least three-fourths of their laborers should be citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, or other white persons. It was the purpose of this amendment to control the question of labor by reason of the unquestioned power of the State over corporations, for, as I have already stated, almost the entire agricultural business of these islands is done by corporations. It provided that gradually they should employ laborers other than Asiatics and spread the gradual increase of such labor over such a long period of time as would create no inconvenience to employers.

It opened up the entire labor employment of corporations to the Kanakas who are now there, the Portuguese and Italians who are now there, and other white persons who are now there, to white immigrants from any country who may land there in the future, and to citizens of the United States, which would include both whites and negroes, and which would also include the people of Porto Rico, from which overcrowded island it should be our policy to transfer a part of the congested labor. I regret to say that this amendment was lost, notwithstanding my statement that I presented it in order that it might form the basis of consideration and action by the conferees, who could enlarge it or contract it or modify it and whose judgment would finally be submitted to both the Senate and the House. It worked no injury whatever to the existing Asiatic labor there, for it must be recollected that the population of these islands must be steadily increased, and it is entirely probable that the Asiatic labor now employed there, and displaced by the gradual system which the amendment provides for, would be absorbed by new enterprises, such as rice plantations, etc., or in domestic labor, or would be glad to return to their homes with their accumulations, as most of them do. But unfortunately this amendment was defeated.

I also offered an amendment providing that there should be a commissioner of labor who should be appointed by the President of the United States and whose duties were identical with those of the various commissioners now provided for by the intelligent legislatures of the various States of the Union. It was made his duty to acquire and diffuse among the people of Hawaii useful information on the subject of labor, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of the laboring men and women, and the means to promote their social, intellectual, and moral prosperity. It was made his duty to make annual reports to the legislature of Hawaii and also to the United States Department of Labor. He was charged with the duty of investigating the causes and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employer and employee and to report thereon both to the Hawaiian government and our own. He was to require such statements as might be prescribed by the United States Department of Labor from all the employers of labor. This provision, moderate yet full and ample and molded upon the best legislation in this country, was, to my great surprise, lost.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I have presented to the committee the amendment which has just been read regarding a commissioner of labor. It is not as full and complete as the one that I desired. It was drawn hastily by the Commissioner of Labor, with whom I communicated by telephone. I am inclined to think that he would have made it fuller in its details if I had had an opportunity of conversing with him, but I now submit the amendment as presenting the views of Mr. Wright, the Commissioner of Labor of the United States, and ask its adoption.

Porto Rico.

SPEECH

OF

HON. FRANCIS M. GRIFFITH,

OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. GRIFFITH said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Truth is direct and clear, it requires no subterfuges, no tortuous or obscure phraseology, and allows no evasions or inconsistencies. And inasmuch as the bill for the government of Porto Rico is not direct or clear, we may well affirm that it is disingenuous throughout and conceals in part and partly discloses a purpose at variance with the requirements of sincerity and justice.

And this is strongly emphasized by the extraordinary circumstances surrounding its origin; not merely extraordinary, but unprecedented in the history of our own Government or of any other. It is in its leading feature exactly the reverse of what the President in his message declared it ought to be—of what our plain duty demanded of us. It sets at naught, too, the urgent recommendation of the Secretary of War, who concurred with the President in his views of what plain duty enjoined. It annulled the report of the Ways and Means Committee setting forth a measure of far different design and scope. All was transformed almost with the suddenness of the lightning's stroke, and this bill, embodying the full opposite of what had been contemplated by both the executive and legislative departments, stalked into Congress demanding the utmost self-stultifying recognition and the most abject submission. And this has been yielded.

Not only so; when the astounding change was made in that mysterious manner the people exclaimed as with one voice against it. A former Republican President raised the cry of alarm. A prominent author who was a delegate in the last national Republican convention and strongly supported the present Chief Magistrate, reechoed the cry and sent out a circular letter to the Republican voters of his State, appealing to them against the proposed iniquity. Every Republican newspaper in Indiana, where these eminent protestants reside, was loud in condemnation. And in Illinois, two of the most radical organs of the Administration denounced it in the most energetic terms and predicted overwhelming disaster if the new policy were pursued. And everywhere was an answering response to the tocsin sounded at the centers of population and political influence. The people were aroused.

But all in vain. The Republican majority in Congress, goaded by the power which had overruled all their convictions of duty and seared their consciences as with a hot iron, determined to overrule the people whom they pretend to represent.

Not only so; but they further proceeded to silence their own scruples and, if possible, those of the people also, by inventing doctrinal absurdities which have never before been heard or thought of, and which have been devised by means of a perverse ingenuity quickened by the pressure of an overpowering emergency. The two chief perversions of reason in this matter are the absolute despotic supremacy of Congress and the inertness or passivity of the Constitution. Instead of Congress deriving its power from the Constitution, the Constitution is, as they say, dependent for its vitality upon the lordly will of Congress—a doctrine which, carried out to its full logical consequences, is utterly subversive of our boasted Republic. The success of this satanic sophistry may well fill every patriot with alarm for the perpetuity of our institutions.

What is the power behind the throne which has thus enslaved the hearts and consciences of the Executive and the Republican majority? We all know what it is; and we know how subservient that majority and its President are to the malign influence which has reduced them to the most abject servitude in all things. We know that power; and how unscrupulous and tyrannical it is—defying God and man in the insolence of its supreme selfishness.

Under these circumstances of origin we have a right to impeach the motive of this bill and believe that all its provisions were arranged to minister to the greed of this colossal and diabolic dictatorship, whose plastic hand has left its mark visibly impressed upon the framework and the finished work, for the "trail of the serpent is over it all."

The tortuous character of the bill is in part revealed by its sweeping grants of power. For example, after specifying the duties of the governor of Porto Rico, the bill adds this proviso:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, delegate and assign to him such executive duties and functions as may in pursuance with law be so delegated and assigned.

Now, who can tell what that means. It amounts to just this, so far as the verbiage is concerned: The President may delegate and assign such executive duties and functions as he may delegate and assign.

But such indefinite phrases, as a matter of fact, may be made to cover the most tyrannical acts of any President who is a slave of the domineering trusts, in whose interests evidently this bill has been devised. There is no usurpation which may not strike its roots into such unmeaning and unrestricted definition of power and authority.

We find in section 16 the grotesque provision that "all judicial process shall run in the name of the United States of America as the President of the United States," and all criminal or penal prosecutions in the local courts shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of "the people of Porto Rico," and all officials authorized by this act shall, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Porto Rico.

Will anyone explain the logical juxtaposition of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Porto Rico in the oath of an official—say a governor appointed by the President and Senate of the United States—and of process in the name of the United States and the President, and prosecutions in the local courts in the name and by the authority of the people of Porto Rico?

We have been told, until the reiteration has become tiresome, and in fact disgusting, that Porto Rico is not a part of the United States, and this very bill affirms it in speaking of merchandise "going into Porto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Porto Rico," thus unmistakably making Porto Rico strictly a foreign country. And yet process must run exactly as if it were in the United States, as in truth we all know it is.

And so we have had ictus on ictus upon the proposition that Porto Ricans are not citizens of the United States, whereas they are not citizens of Spain or of any other country in the world. Consequently they have no standing—they have no "name or authority," and are no "people" in any proper sense of the word.

And yet this nameless rabble, as the arguments make them out to be, have in this sixteenth section a status, so that they have a name and authority and are a people.

O, consistency, where is thy blush?

Again, in section 17, the governor is given power to remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of the United States.

But the advocates of this measure have told us over and over again that neither the Constitution nor the laws of the United States can proprio vigore extend to any acquired territory until the masters of the Constitution expressly give their leave. And as this has not yet been done by this bill or any other, it follows that the Constitution and laws of the United States have not reached Porto Rico. So we are to exercise a government in a foreign land, and the governor of the island may respite offenses against the laws of the United States, although the laws of the United States are not there to be either obeyed or broken. And in like manner all officials are to swear that they will support the Constitution of the United States, although the Constitution is not there either to be supported or violated.

Was there ever such thimblerigging in legislation before? Now you see it, and now you do not.

It may be said that the act provides that the statutory laws of the United States shall extend to Porto Rico; but the language of the bill is not sufficient inasmuch as the Constitution has not been extended and the Constitution, being the source of power, is necessary to sustain the laws which have been passed by virtue of it.

A distinct intimation of the primary purpose of this bill is plainly seen in the extravagant expenditures directly provided for.

In the first place there is a superfluity of officers. They are far more numerous than in similar offices in other Territories and most of the States.

For example, compare the Porto Rico judicial system under this bill with South Carolina, of similar size.

In Porto Rico the supreme court consists of 5 judges; in South Carolina 3. In Porto Rico there are 5 judicial districts, with 15 judges; in South Carolina 8 circuits, with 8 judges. The inferior courts need not be mentioned.

In addition there is the district court of the United States, to be held outside of the United States in Porto Rico, whence appeals may be taken into the United States to be decided in the Supreme Court.

In Porto Rico the business of the courts will probably not be one-tenth of the judicial business of South Carolina.

It is not easy to discern what the district court of the United States will find to do in that foreign land. As neither the laws nor Constitution can obtain a footing there except by an imperial mandate of Congress which has not been issued, the subjects falling within jurisdiction must be extremely scarce, even if the Porto Ricans, being noncitizens, are allowed access to its procedure.

Another significant index is found in the salaries to be paid the officials to be sent there. A most extraordinary liberality shines out conspicuously in this wonderful governmental scheme, inspired by the campaign feeders as a quid pro quo.

Here is the interesting schedule:

Governor	$4,000
Treasurer	5,000
Attorney-general	4,000
Auditor	4,000
Commissioner of the interior	4,000
Commissioner of education	3,000
Chief justice of supreme court	5,000
Associates of supreme court	18,000
Marshal of supreme court	3,000
United States district judge	5,000
United States district attorney	4,000
United States marshal	3,500
In all	62,000

Contrast this with the appropriation of 1899 for each of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma:

Governor	$3,000
Judges, each	3,000
Secretary	1,800
Interpreter	500
In all	19,000

Thus the money goes in Porto Rico. Why these high salaries? Will not the incumbents of the offices be required to render an equivalent for the favors they have received to the movers of the present measure outside the two Houses of Congress?

Contrast the governor's salary with that of the governors of the States:

State.	Salary.	State.	Salary.
Alabama	$3,000	Nebraska	$2,500
Arkansas	3,000	Nevada	4,000
California	6,000	New Hampshire	2,000
Colorado	5,000	New Jersey	10,000
Connecticut	4,000	New York	10,000
Delaware	2,000	North Carolina	3,000
Florida	3,500	North Dakota	3,000
Georgia	3,000	Ohio	8,000
Idaho	3,000	Oregon	3,500
Illinois	6,000	Pennsylvania	10,000
Indiana	5,000	Rhode Island	3,000
Iowa	3,000	South Carolina	3,000
Kansas	3,000	South Dakota	2,500
Kentucky	6,500	Tennessee	4,000
Louisiana	4,000	Texas	4,000
Maine	2,000	Utah	2,000
Maryland	4,500	Vermont	1,500
Massachusetts	8,000	Virginia	5,000
Michigan	4,000	Washington	4,000
Mississippi	3,500	West Virginia	2,700
Missouri	5,000	Wisconsin	5,000
Montana	5,000	Wyoming	2,500

In all the list of States there are but five with as much salary, namely, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

And these are not equal because the governor of Porto Rico has besides a fine mansion free.

There are seven States which give their governors just half of what is allowed the governor of Porto Rico. And twenty-two give less than half of what he enjoys.

This is the way we are to pamper this governor outside the limits of the United States, whose chief function will undoubtedly be to fatten the trusts in turn, at the expense of the "people of Porto Rico."

One of the most remarkable illustrations of the workings of "benevolent assimilation" hitherto witnessed is the alertness with which the "people of Porto Rico" are to be saddled with the burden of paying these official salaries for the so-called "temporary government." The expenses of Territorial governments have hitherto been paid by the United States under direct appropriation laws enacted for the purpose. And so we will continue to do as to the rest of the Territories. But we are making an object lesson of Porto Rico: it must be treated differently from all others, and be made to confirm new, albeit absurd, principles to which we have taken a sudden fancy. And so we make the people there pay our bills. It may be a little hard on them at first, since they have been lately ruined in great degree by a hurricane, and their trade is badly broken down by the pungent application of the tariff since the cession; but then the Scripture says, "It is good for one to bear the yoke in his youth."

And so we will put the local burdens on them, and then enact, as you will see in our bill, that—

The salaries of all officers of Porto Rico, appointed, as herein provided, by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall also be paid out of revenues of Porto Rico, on the warrant of the auditor, countersigned by the governor.

And, contrary to the very fundamental principle of our Government—but then, what are the fundamental principles of our Government when they audaciously conflict with the interests or wishes of our rulers, the trusts?—we find that this bill is carefully framed to exclude all control of their finances used to pay the officials of the United States.

The control of the local treasury is in the hands of the auditor appointed by the President. He can issue his warrants at discretion, controlled, however, by the masters, and the countersigning is done by the governor, another Presidential appointee to represent the trusts.

There is not a single tax officer appointed or elected directly or indirectly by Porto Ricans—not one. They have no means whatever to control or influence the collection of their revenues, nor direct in any degree the disbursement thereof.

They can do nothing even in the way of legislation. They have no representation in Congress, and likewise they have virtually none in one house of the so-called legislature, the executive council, which is composed of the secretary, attorney-general, treasurer, auditor, commissioner of the interior, and commissioner of education—all Presidential appointees, and of necessity a majority of the council of 11, without a possibility that it should be otherwise. There are but 11; these 6 are always members; and of what avail is it that the minority, which can never become a majority, consists of native Porto Ricans? In effect, though not in form, it is merely an appointed council of 6 members.

And as to the other component part of the so-called legislature—the house of delegates—the qualified voters are left under not a registration law enacted by both houses but "under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the executive council—that is, by the six appointed officials, who in reality constitute that council.

And besides, in section 7 citizens of the United States residing in Porto Rico are made members of the body politic without regard to their intention of permanently remaining, and are so entitled to vote, which certainly opens the way to all kinds of adventurers and carpetbaggers.

Not only are the official salaries imposed for payment upon the people of Porto Rico, but it is also provided that all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the island shall be paid by the treasurer of Porto Rico out of the revenues in his custody, except defenses, barracks, harbors, light-houses, and other works undertaken by the United States. There are no limitations and no guard against abuses in this direction. There are many ways by which public money may be expended by so-called improvements and development. The lordlings engaged in looting the island under the ample facilities afforded by this bill may have an easy plan of roads, bridges, etc., to their splendid mansions laid out at the public expense. The people are to be made responsible for "all expenses and obligations contracted," however they may have been incurred—perhaps for costly court-houses, etc., which are ever apt to furnish a fine field for first-class plundering anywhere.

The great wrong inflicted upon the Porto Ricans lies in taxing their products for two years.

If Porto Rico is a part of the United States, what right have we to make an exception of it, and levy taxes on it which we would not lay on Arizona, New Mexico, or other Territories? In the face of this act the pretense in section 14 that the laws not locally inapplicable are extended to Porto Rico is not only the veriest deception but a most monstrous travesty of justice and republican principles. All privileges of exemption or of any kind belong to the Porto Ricans as fully as any other people; they are our people; and if they are not, it is sheer folly to talk of extending to them the laws of the United States in the same force and effect. It is only to our domain that we can apply our laws justly, or really without usurpation. This bill is so self-contradictory that it annuls itself. Section 3 draws a broad distinction between Porto Rico and the United States, and hopelessly destroys the pretext in other sections that the laws are extended to Porto Rico. The bill is a bundle of absurdities and inconsistencies.

Had it been openly proposed to concoct a plan for looting the island and robbing all the people of their substance earned by honest toil for the benefit of the horde of speculators seeking whom they may devour, it could not have been more effectually framed to effect the end in view. Why can we not deal justly, if not kindly, with a people who have come under our jurisdiction with a free consent, who have never rebelled against us, and who welcomed us with open arms when our armies entered their territory as deliverers from an onerous bondage? Why should they find us more inexorable oppressors than those who formerly ruled them? Shall we plunder them: shall we let loose the flock of cormorants upon them which are directing their flight thither? Shall we force them to sigh for a return to their former condition as far more tolerable than our sordid tyranny? We should pause and reflect, and pursue only the ends of justice and kindness when we act.

OF

HON. ABRAHAM L. BRICK,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. BRICK said:

Mr. SPEAKER: After all the debate, constitutional and otherwise, had upon the subject of the Porto Rican tariff for the last sixty days, I would hardly have raised my voice in regard to it at this time but for the fact that persons have, upon the floor of the House, under the consideration of the Hawaiian civil government bill, asked the question—I suppose and hope, in good faith—why should we not treat Porto Rico the same as we are now proposing to treat Hawaii? Why not give Porto Rico free trade and the same civil government here and now as we do to Hawaii? And with equal consistency, and no better reason, that question might also mean, and probably does, why not apply the same legislative details, revenue system, and business measures to Alaska, Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, Guam, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines? In catchy phrase and misleading speech they ask, why not treat them all alike? and have attempted to emphasize their utterance by malappropriate praise of the Hawaiian measure.

Whatever their motive may be, and however plain the answer is to us here in Congress, for the people's sake this deceiving proposition should not be allowed to pass unnoticed and unchallenged. And let me observe at the outset that people's desires very often incite the argument of their speech. I would expect the sugar trust, who are required to purchase about 80 per cent of the raw sugar material they use in making refined sugar from Porto Rico and other sugar-producing fields abroad, to say that any tariff on sugar, wherever laid, is unjust and an outrage. They must purchase raw sugar for refining purposes from other and sugar-producing lands. We can not supply the sugar required here in the United States in sufficient quantities; therefore, a tariff on raw sugar would have to be paid by the great sugar refineries. And so I am not surprised when I learned that Havemeyer was for free trade on Porto Rican sugar, and denounces the protective-tariff system as the mother of trusts.

The great tobacco combination of America must buy its filler from Cuba and Porto Rico and other countries. They can not get all and what they want in this country. Therefore, knowing human nature as I do, I was not struck with paralyzing astonishment when I noticed that they, among others equally interested, had declared that all revenue from tariff collected by the United States since we came into possession of the island of Porto Rico was unconstitutional, and had brought suit to recover about $1,800,000 collected in that way, and which, by recommendation of the President, Congress has turned over to the exclusive benefit of the Porto Ricans within the last few weeks.

Porto Rico raises no wheat, and she is looked upon as the legitimate and exclusive playground for the pork packers. So it occurs to me quite natural that the great wholesale flour producers and meat men should look upon any tariff between this country and Porto Rico for any purpose, even though it should all be given to the starving people there, as un-American in spirit and vicious in principle—all this solicitude on their part for the glory of God and suffering humanity in Porto Rico. I can easily see how the sugar and tobacco speculators, who have been holding their stock in expectation of free trade, to escape the payment of any tax—which means, at a very conservative estimate, $500,000 to them the minute the words "free trade" are written in the statute books—should behold with horror even this slight tariff, although it would go from them to feed the hungry laborer and to house the unsheltered child and wife of stricken Porto Rico.

Within the last two years the genius of American destiny has brought to us many bright, warm isles that gem the sunny seas, and with them new peoples, new problems, and added responsibilities. There are persons who believe, from one motive or another, that we should shift the burden, ignore duty, and cast aside to oceans of trouble these derelicts of human fortune.

Through party policy a large body of people are against what is termed "expansion." These persons are universally opposed to the Porto Rican tariff, because they are not in favor of holding Porto Rico at all; and whatever adds to the burden gives weight to the argument. They are against anything practical. They are against success, because they are against expansion, and opposed to anything and everything proposed by the Republican party, no matter what it is. They would throw obstructions in the path of progress, and this accounts for their opposition. It means political aggrandizement for them, as they believe, but the great, loyal, earnest mass of the people will be for what is right and reasonable. All they want to know is just why the apparent change occurred.

They hear all sorts of political noises; they have learned to think of free trade between us and our island possessions as the proper policy, and in the wonder of the doubt and the distraction of the noise they are waiting for a full and clear explanation of what the legislation really means, and why it has been proposed at this time. When they fully appreciate that, I am not afraid of the American people.

There has never been a time in the history of this country when men with ulterior motives could fool the American people to any considerable extent with demagogic lips of lying utterance. There has never been a great question submitted to the American people but what they have ultimately answered it correctly, and to the enduring honor and glory and prosperity of our country and our race. It is this very intelligence upon which the perpetuity of our institutions depend—a self-governing, self-controlling people. That person or party who stakes success upon the credulity of the people will surely fail. They always have; it is my prophecy they always will; and they ought to. I know of no greater insult than to be treated as a dupe. And no self-respecting, loyal American will ever attempt to treat the people in that way.

I can not believe the people are exercised over the mooted constitutional question as to the power of Congress to legislate on this subject. They have learned to expect that objection from the mouths of the Democratic party upon any proposed legislation they do not commend; and they never commend anything Republican, no matter how beneficent may be its design.

They have opposed every glorious achievement of the Republican party; they have never joined hands in a single act that bore its authorship, and I did not expect they would do so in the pending measure. Whenever they could find no other objection, they have uniformly fallen back upon the Constitution—unconstitutional—the Republican party never passed a constitutional law in its life. The interpretation of the Constitution has been the chiefest source of political differences since the formation of the Government.

Every progressive, glorious act of the United States has been declared by some party unconstitutional, one time and another, in the history of our country. The Louisiana purchase, which gave to us the Middle West and Northwest, and the Mississippi River and was the first great step in acquiring supremacy from gulf to lake and ocean to ocean, the grandest act of far-seeing statesmanship that illuminates the career of Thomas Jefferson—that was unconstitutional. The protective tariff, the corner stone of our industrial magnificence and the dignity of American labor, was unconstitutional. The greenback, which saved the financial honor of the Republic when its life hung in the balance, was unconstitutional. Every step the United States has taken in national stability and greatness has been un-American and unconstitutional in the mouths of carping critics and demagogues. In fact, every evolution of advancement in America has met the bitter, unyielding, vituperative objections of persons who appeared to block the way. Every new departure has been to them un-American.

It was un-American to purchase Louisiana. They clung to the blind belief that the Union was simply formed for the original States and that Territories could not and should not be acquired. All the arguments used against this Porto Rican bill and expansion were used then against Thomas Jefferson and the acquirement of the Middle South and West. Public jealousy was so aroused in those days that some of the States seriously threatened to secede should the purchase be consummated. But the wisdom of the people triumphed. Who would to-day unwrite that glorious page of American history? Certainly not Indiana, who formed a part of that great Western territory, the State from which I come, one of the brightest jewels in the American diadem.

The glory of our country, the test of our capacity for self-government, the strength of our institutions, all lie in our adaptability to new conditions, in the growth of our laws and institutions to new and novel exigencies. If it be un-American to meet the occasion with its needs and cares, then the most sacred principles that grace our national conscience were born and rocked in an un-American cradle. But that is not true. The proudest title of Americanism is an ever-marching civilization, prosperity, and power. That is the thing that makes an American respected wherever his name is mentioned in the wide, wide world.

That is what we are doing now. The American people are great because they are self-reliant; they are progressive because they are willing to add to their institutions as events and necessities require; they are successful because they are ingenious and practical; they have never met a burden they did not conquer; they have never taken a backward step, and they will not now.

There has never been such a word as "fail" in their bright lexicon, and they will not stop here to put it in.

No, Mr. Speaker, the people of America believe in expansion; they believe in writing American history, not in unwriting it; they believe in the manhood that bears its burdens and turns them into glory; they believe in themselves, and any person who stands in the way will fall, not the American people.

To those who would pervert the Constitution into a cave, a barrier, a corset to cabin, crib, and confine American endeavor, they will answer, "We know the American Constitution; it is a part of our conscience; it is the symbol of our sentiment, the symptom of our emotions; it was born in our hearts before it was written on paper. That paper Constitution is a lifeless writ; it lives and breathes and grows in the hearts of the American people; it was made to preserve, not to paralyze. We made it to foster our growth, not to swathe us in the shriveling cerements of a mummy."

The Constitution was made to bind together the original States into a nation, as dignified and powerful as any other nation on earth—a nation spelled with a big "N"—and at the same time preserve to the States of that paramount nation certain inalienable rights of local self-government. It was made for the States and the preservation of their rights agreed upon. As between the States and the National Government there were certain rights reserved in the States, certain powers given to the National Government. But as between the nation and other countries, as between the nation and its possessions, it was given and it possesses all the powers of a great, practical, self-preserving, coherent, free-acting world factor.

The time has come when we know that the vigor of the nation is essential to the security of liberty. We have learned by mistakes and sad experience that to weaken the national idea is to lessen the dignity and beneficence of our country; that a dangerous ambition most often lurks behind the mask of a pretended zeal for the right of the people and State rights; that all our hopes and fears and rights and liberties lie in the dignity, efficiency, and firmness of our National Government; that in all history republics have been overturned and the liberties of the people subverted by men who began their career by first paying obsequious court to the people—beginning demagogues and ending despots.

Without a patriotic sentiment of nationality the Union will not be safe as against itself, much less as against other countries; but with it it will be safe with an hundred States, and forever safe against the whole world. With that national spirit we have just emerged from a war of civilization, and as a part of the bequest of that civilization—not conquest—Porto Rico and the Philippines have come to us. No matter how you feel, there is now no honorable course but to take them. To set them adrift would be to blot the pages of American history and dishonor the name of the American people.

Why, Mr. Speaker, we must take care of them; take care of them in the spirit and conscience that invoked the American Constitution and which is its soul; take care of them in justice, honor, and generosity, each according to its wants, capacity, and condition. To some of our Territories we can give the fullest measure of self-government; to others we must give them the fullest measure of human rights, liberties, and always justice; but in justice to them, with the highest consideration for their welfare, we will lead them up to the fullest realization of American institutions and self-government. You need not fear for the Constitution. We will govern them with every generous impulse that flows from the liberty-loving, justice-dealing American heart, which was the mother of the Constitution.

There is no paper written to which I will go with the serenity of confidence that I will to the prompting of an overflowing heart. No constitution or law is stronger than the sentiment of the people. It is to the inspiration of the people to which I will turn as the sun of our national virtue, which holds our faces always toward the home, protecting and preserving all. It is the creed of American manhood that—

> He prayeth best who loveth best
> All things both great and small;
> For the dear God who loveth us,
> He made and loveth all.

It has been our practice as a practical, self-preserving people to withhold Territories until they have shown themselves fit to enter the sisterhood of States. All conditions to make them worthy of the dignities, immunities, and privileges of statehood were taken into consideration; and this was done, not to reserve from them rights and liberties, but to preserve the strength and force of the Union, as well as the privileges and rights of the citizens of the States.

We have not always treated each Territory alike. We do not now govern Alaska as we do New Mexico. This is not because we desire to discriminate, but because the climate, soil conditions, and population of Alaska make it impracticable to govern them with the same rules and regulations that we do some of the other Territories. The people of Alaska have no elections, they are allowed no legislature, the revenues are collected from them by a license system on mercantile pursuits—all this is different than in any other Territory the Government ever owned. They do not complain. The population, climate, and rugged territory make it impracticable to give them a legislature and provide them with elective self-government. It would burden and injure them rather than bless. There would be no way to raise revenues except by the license system. They do not complain, because they know it is the only reasonable way to do it.

What they want is a good governor and courts; with this they are satisfied. As time goes on apace, their growing wants will be provided for as they appear. Such is rational government.

We have Hawaii, and my committee has just provided for it a civil government. Under that bill we have gone further than in most other Territories, in giving them plenary powers of local self-control. We did this out of no mean spirit of partiality. It was the islands, the people, that prompted that most generous and kindly act—the Hawaiian bill.

The whole area of the islands is about the size of Connecticut, and perhaps with little Delaware added. They have had a government in some form for over sixty years. They have passed through all the stages of constitutional civilization. Like England and America, they have fought and forced their Bill of Rights. They have wrested from reluctant hands their Magna Charta. They have evolved through the whole gamut of human liberty, from kings to a constitutional monarchy, and through that to a republic. Over 80 per cent of the population can read and write. The native Hawaiian is a gentle, tractable, justice-loving, justice-dealing creature, whose most grievous fault is generosity. Of all the lands on earth, Hawaii is the place where locks are unknown and keys are the treasured relics of a novel curiosity.

There is no race problem there. The Kanaka is what is called a soft race. It amalgamates with the European into splendid manhood, and in the intermixture they are a fast fading people. They have the common-school system, hospitals, colleges, high schools. They have practically stamped out the hideous march of leprosy.

Mr. Speaker, to show their spirit, when we offered to put in our bill a provision in which the United States was to stand $50,000 for aid in the care of the leper settlement, their representatives here said, "No; this has been to us a labor of love; we have conquered it, and it will soon be a thing of the past. It has been our burden—our self-imposed duty—it is now our mission and our pride; let us finish it." Such are the people of Hawaii.

Over seventy-five years ago the sons of the Pilgrim Fathers went to Hawaii as missionaries. They made their language a science, and with devoted care gave them a grammar. They translated the Bible into Kanaka, and to-day the Hawaiian race is a Christian people, cheered by the Star of Bethlehem and governed by the common law. They had a constitution, which, with a few changes locally applicable, would have served well in America. They are imbued with pure Americanism; they draw their inspiration from the fountains of enthusiasm that flowed from Plymouth Rock. They are happy and prosperous; they have all revenues necessary for self-support, with a complete system of government in every essential branch, including the means and things for the collection of revenues.

They needed only our protection. All they asked was to be American and to be covered with the Stars and Stripes.

Why, Mr. Speaker, Hawaii was simply a long-lost child coming home. It is the least of our expansive difficulties. The atmosphere that surrounds the flag there is as pure and clear in the spirit of patriotism as the air in which it floats here. When the news of annexation reached them, church and school bells were rung, steam whistles blown, the bands played, the American ensign waved everywhere, and dwellings were decorated with flowers and colors, with sunshine and joy. The streets were thronged with people wild with excitement. It was the day longed for, prayed for, through so many years of anxious hope—and now it had come. And then when the flag was raised, the people gathered before the government building in subdued solemnity.

It was the same place which had viewed the uprising for Queen Emma, the proclamation crowning Kalakaua, the revolt of Liliuokalani against her brother, and, later on, her proclamation on ascending the throne. It had heard her harangue when she granted to the people a new constitution. It had heard the edict of the abrogation of the ancient monarchy, and the proclamation of the provisional protectorate of the United States. It had seen the sun decline—the lowering of the American flag by Blount, under Cleveland. Here, too, had been proclaimed the republic of Hawaii, and here now was seen its end. There were mingled tears of joy and regret as they slowly lowered the little republic's flag—the flag that had been raised by devoted hands and had been fraught with so many cares and dangers, so many hopes and fears; the flag that had meant so much to them in years gone by, now sinking to rise no more.

But in a burst of sunlight Old Glory rose, and then every Hawaiian tear contained a rainbow of American hope—and it was red, white, and blue.

All this tells you why we have intrusted Hawaii with full governmental powers. Do you need any other explanation? Does it not tell the story with simple pathos of what the Republican party in Congress is willing to do with its adopted children? Does it not refute with acts stronger than words the Democratic charge that we are dealing unjustly with Porto Rico?

And now, why do we not treat Porto Rico and the Philippines in the same way we have so gladly treated Hawaii? Why for the present raise revenues in Porto Rico by a small tariff? These are the questions the American people want to know; and when they do, I fully believe they will bless the hand that penned the act and cherish it as one of the proudest achievements of statesmanship that characterizes the Republican party.

Porto Rico has been presented to you with poetic exaggeration by persons who have opposed the tariff act. They would have you believe that Porto Rico is an Indiana, a Michigan, or an Illinois in education, intelligence, and the power to instantly grasp the problems of American institutions and the spirit of self-government.

But to get down to facts, and when I do so it will be to set down in charity the real truth for no other purpose than to accurately survey the field, so that we may better care for them. The island is not as large as Connecticut, yet it contains a million people, while Hawaii holds only about 108,000. The Porto Rican industries are almost entirely agricultural. They have many good people there who, in a few years of absorption, may catch the intuition of the American character.

By far the larger portion of them are the children of wild adventurers of all climes and races. Not over 10 or 12 per cent can read or write. Notice, I say read or write. Not 2 per cent can read or write or speak English. Nine hundred thousand are in absolute ignorance. General Davis reports that it would be impossible to found the jury system there; that the whole island would not furnish the right kind of men for juries, and to do so would be to inflict the grossest injustice upon the merchants and business men and, for that matter, the whole people of Porto Rico. There are no schoolhouses on the island, except perhaps one built by the United States during the last year. At least four-fifths of the people have absolutely no idea of political affairs, either of Spain or of this country.

Sugar, coffee, and tobacco are their principal industries. After the American officials had taken possession of the island and were rapidly converting it into a garden of happiness and prosperity a calamity occurred almost unequaled and unparalleled in the history of any country. The hurricane destroyed almost everything on the island except the ground which held them up. Not even the soil of the coffee plantations remained. In one day 800,000 people were left without occupation or support. The world will never know the heroic efforts of our President, acting through General Davis, in feeding and caring for these stricken people and in ameliorating one of the saddest tragedies of modern times.

We must have money; we must have it in large quantities immediately, and that fund must continue and grow for at least a period of two years before revenues by ordinary taxation could be raised.

Under ordinary circumstances it was thought we could have free trade between this country and Porto Rico—by that we did not intend to support the island by taxing our people at home; it is a rich and fertile land; it can and ought to support itself; it was supposed that we could do this by the system of internal revenue in vogue with Territories in some other instances—and so the President recommended it as his general policy. It was and is the intention to do that with Porto Rico when practicable. It is the purpose of the present act, as amended by the Senate, to give to Porto Rico control over her own revenue at the earliest possible moment. But the hurricane, the poverty, the desolation, and the destitution, the enormous initiatory expenditure for schools, homes, food, roads, the expenses for government, the rehabilitation of stricken industries, all these confronted the President and Congress when they got down to the details of actually meeting the conditions that existed at the time of the proposed legislation.

President McKinley had sent Henry K. Carroll as a special commissioner for the United States to Porto Rico, to be advised by him as to the welfare of the island. Mr. Carroll was a man in whom President McKinley had implicit confidence, both as to ability and integrity. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he was worthy of that confidence; no one has ever doubted it. He at first reported, among other things, that free trade between the two countries was desirable. He, in connection with General Davis, continued in their herculean and devoted efforts for the comfort and welfare of the Porto Ricans; and let me say right here that no people in the world have ever had kinder friends or wiser benefactors.

In December, when they had got down to practical details, and considering the lamentable condition of this hunger-cursed, storm-stricken island, Mr. Carroll reported as follows:

> According to the judgment of the Porto Ricans most competent to have an opinion * * * it would seem to be prudent not to revise the Porto Rican tariff so as to very greatly reduce the customs revenue, at least for the period ad interim.

General Davis recommended the same. Congress had the benefit of all this later and valuable information. The disinterested Porto Ricans themselves were satisfied with it. Our best judgment indorsed it. The path of duty and wisdom seemed so plain that the committee put forth the bill as a matter of common business, as hundreds of others are brought forth, without waiting or asking for a public message from the President or consulting the newspapers before they acted.

It was done to relieve the present condition, a temporary expedient, a tentative measure. It was conceived in kindness for the Porto Ricans and in justice to Americans. Every cent is given to them. It was the only way to raise revenues for the benefit of the island in its present condition. It was purely provisional and can not continue longer than two years, and by the provisions of the present bill it will not continue longer than the government of Porto Rico deems it advisable and necessary. The tax is paid indirectly, in exactly the manner the people of the United States raise revenue to support our Government. The money does not come from the poor and suffering; it will come out of the people who do business there, out of the profits of their trade, largely out of the great sugar and tobacco speculators and planters.

This whole bill is a careful attempt to deal wisely and well with the Porto Ricans until American genius and time and events assure us of their capability of self-government, and shall divine for us what is the best and most practicable way to make them happy. The man who pretends that he is the friend of the Porto Rican in opposing this measure is in reality their worst enemy. The Porto Ricans are happy and contented in the act. They say it would have been better to have kept it at 25 per cent of the Dingley rate rather than lower it to 15 per cent.

Despite the statement of some statesmen that when we returned the $2,000,000 of the Dingley tariff for their benefit, on the recommendation of President McKinley, we did away with the necessity of the tariff feature, this is not a fact—as is well known by the Porto Ricans, General Davis, and all those who know best as to the needs and requirements of that island during the next two years. Three million dollars a year will not be too much for their wants and necessities during the reconstructive period. Here you have a simple statement of how and why this legislation was brought about. This tells to you in the main why I intend to vote for the bill. These are the reasons of fixing the tariff in Porto Rico at this time.

When we come to the Philippines, different reasons will obtain. It may be that there we will want to impose a tariff in that country to prevent the open-door policy in the Orient from becoming a trapdoor for other countries to insidiously break down our protective tariff at home. In order to get our share of the oriental trade it appears that we will have to reciprocally open the door in the Philippines to all the other countries upon the same terms that we enter there. But unless we can protect ourselves at home from the goods of other countries that enter there, it will sound the death knell to our protective tariff. We can do this and do it to the prosperity and happiness of the islands and with justness to every American laborer and citizen.

I want expansion, as it is termed, because America has never yet shrinked from a duty or failed in a responsibility. I want it because I respect my country. But I do not approach it with fear and trembling for our laborers, farmers, and people at home. We will govern all these peoples with kindness and all the beneficent liberties that play around the Constitution. But we have the fullest powers of self-preservation, and I insist that always and forever we shall do it in justice to the people here at home.

The people of America know that President McKinley is the kindest, gentlest spirit of the Spanish war. They will know before this controversy has finally been disposed of that his name continues to be indissolubly linked with the fortunes of labor and the prosperity of the masses. No one can make the American people believe that William McKinley would knowingly oppress or do injustice to any man, whether he be Porto Rican or American.

I am going to vote for this bill because I am for expansion, because to be practical is to be just, because I believe this country of ours is a full-fledged nation with all the powers of progress and self-preservation, because it is wise and sagacious, just and generous.

Mr. Speaker, I desire consent to print as an appendix to my remarks the very able article written by Judge Taylor, of my State, upon this Porto Rican subject. I think his remarks should have the widest possible dissemination.

APPENDIX.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

The matter of the Porto Rican tariff opens a question which ought not to be closed without deliberate consideration, and pending that consideration the freest possible expression of opinion is in order and highly desirable. The constitutional question is the difficult one. Has Congress power under the Constitution to deal with the people of Porto Rico otherwise than as citizens of the United States? If not, it has no more power to impose a duty on Porto Rican sugar than on Louisiana sugar. There are decisions of the Supreme Court which are thought by some persons to support that view, but I think they do not when fairly construed.

The great purpose of the Constitution was to found a stable government on what was, in the nature of things, an uncertain and precarious foundation—a union of independent States. For that purpose it proposed a scheme previously unheard of in the world, consisting of two independent systems of government within the same territory and over the same people, with its attendant incidents of two citizenships and two allegiances—one of and to the State government and the other of and to the United States Government. It was to define and adjust these sovereignties, rights, duties, and relationships that the Constitution was necessary and was formed and adopted. The essence of the principle of combination thus established is that the States have all the powers of government not denied to them by the Constitution of the United States or their own constitutions, while the United States have no powers except those expressly or impliedly conferred on them by the United States Constitution. Ever since its adoption we have discussed and applied the Constitution almost exclusively to questions arising out of the relations between the United States and the States and their citizens, respectively, and in consequence have fallen into the habit of speaking generally of the United States Government as one of limited powers. So, without stopping to think closely about it, we assume that these limitations apply to our relations with Porto Rico as well as to those with our continental States and Territories, and hence that the people of the island were clothed immediately upon its cession to the United States with all the rights of citizens of the Republic, among which is the right under the Constitution to trade freely with all other citizens of the Republic.

POWERS OF GOVERNMENT.

I am persuaded that this is an error, and at the present moment a dangerous error. There was no necessity, when the Government of the United States was called into being, to put any limitation upon its powers as a nation among nations. There were the best of reasons for not doing so. It was entitled, as against all the world except its own citizens and the States to which they owed an allegiance as well as to it, to all the powers of sovereignty recognized by the usages of mankind as belonging to government. Those powers did not need to be conferred by a constitution. They vested by virtue of the institution of the Government unless expressly prohibited by a constitution. I know of no such prohibition. Among these large powers of government, always and everywhere recognized as inherent in sovereignty, is the power to acquire territory and to hold acquired territory on such terms and deal with it in such manner as the acquisitor shall deem best. I believe that power belongs to the United States in as unrestricted form as any other government in the world. This power is not only an inherent one, residing in the Government by virtue of its existence as a Government, but it exists in a case like the present as an implied power under the Constitution.

It is settled constitutional law in this country that Congress possesses not only the powers expressly conferred by the Constitution, but all other powers necessary to give effect to the powers expressly granted. A large and important share of the functions exercised by the Government to-day rests on implied powers. The power to make war carries with it, by implication, power to do all things necessary to make war effective and to secure its results in a manner advantageous to the country. Among the incidents of war is the conquest of territory. And to secure the results of war it may be necessary to keep the territory thus acquired away from the possession or control of the enemy. If in such a case our Government could take and keep such territory only on condition that it should become permanently a part of the United States and its inhabitants citizens of the United States, with all the rights of citizenship, the situation of the Government would be pitiable and contemptible. It seems to me that the power to make war conferred by the Constitution carries with it the power to take territory from the enemy and, when taken, to deal with it as shall be to our highest interest. We can annex it to the United States if we choose to, or we can hold it as a detached, outlying possession. We have all the powers in that respect which belong to England or any other nation.

The decisions commonly referred to in support of the view that the provisions of our Constitution extend immediately to all acquired territory were made with reference to persons and property in territory about which no question existed as to its place as part of the area of the United States. That fact has been assumed by the people and the Government in all its branches, and was assumed by the court. After Congress shall have declared that Porto Rico is part of the United States and subject to the Constitution and laws thereof, those decisions will be applicable to questions arising in regard to the rights of her citizens.

SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM.

If these views are sound, the Porto Rican question is wholly one of wise policy. The power is ample to do whatever we think best for all interests concerned. In respect to our trade relations, the matter is so much more important to the Porto Ricans than to us that we can well afford to let their interests have paramount place in the discussion. Proceeding upon this theory, it does not seem to me that either the bill which has passed the House or the amendment pending in the Senate is the wisest measure practicable. It is always highly desirable to make tariff changes in a way to prevent private speculation so far as possible. There is good reason to believe that the exportable property in Porto Rico belongs now to American owners. Any reduction of the existing tariff will increase their profits without benefiting the Porto Ricans. We can prevent that result by continuing to collect the present duties on Porto Rican imports and expending the money in Porto Rico in the relief of distress and in the making of improvements necessary to the beginning of independent development and prosperity in that island.

The problem does not seem to me to be a difficult one if we approach it in the right way—if we do what we do as an act of plenary power. If we do it as a recognition of Porto Rico as an integral part of the territory of the United States and of its inhabitants as citizens of the United States, we shall make a precedent which may give us trouble hereafter. Similar questions will soon confront us with regard to the Philippine Islands, and probably with regard to Cuba. Where else we may meet them in the future we do not know. That we are entering upon new and larger relations with the world is certain, however much we may regret it. It is not a time to give away any of the just powers of our Government. Toward its own people the Government of the United States has only the powers conferred by the Constitution; toward all the rest of mankind it has all the powers that belong to civilized governments. In my opinion it will be a grave mistake to do any act in the Porto Rican business in derogation of those powers.

Trade of Porto Rico.

OF

HON. FRANK E. WILSON,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. WILSON of New York said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Congress, through this Porto Rican bill, will provide for local revenues with which to conduct the government of Porto Rico. This will reduce the expenditures of the United States Government. Great care has been taken in drafting the civil-government bill for Porto Rico to provide the most expensive government ever organized in any Territory of the United States, probably for the purpose of preventing these increased revenues from increasing the surplus. If the government of Porto Rico was economically administered, the revenues of the island would more than cover the cost of the government, and the balance would have to be turned into the United States Treasury. It has been a problem for many years with the Republican party how to retain high taxes and find sufficient channels of legitimate expenditure in which the proceeds of these taxes can be used.

The campaign of 1884 was fought very largely upon the issue of having a tremendous surplus locked up in the United States Treasury. This contributed largely to the defeat of the Republican party that year. The per capita expenditures of the Government at that time were $4.39. There was a surplus of considerably over one hundred millions for which the Government could not find channels for expenditure. At that time the Treasury of the United States was a Department of the Government maintained for the purpose of receiving and paying out the public moneys. The surplus continued to grow, and it was reduced by one hundred millions by taking that amount from the surplus fund and calling it a reserve. It still continued to grow, and the result was the pension act of 1890, which greatly increased the pension fund and created little objection, because the American people are sufficiently patriotic to approve of almost any expenditure which will benefit the American soldier. But they could not give enough of it to the old soldiers to wipe out the surplus. They wiped out the surplus finally by passing practically a prohibitive tariff.

The surplus then became a deficiency. Bonds were issued to correct this evil. When the war with Spain was declared, the Government anticipated very heavy expenditures and provided for a very large increase in receipts. The expenditures were not so great, and the receipts were even greater than anticipated. The result is that the Government is again faced with that troublesome surplus. Hence it is that when the Republican system of taxation is applied to Porto Rico, it is necessary to establish as expensive a government as possible in order that there will be no surplus. In reading over the bill one is impressed with the belief that so much government in so small and poor an island will render a surplus impossible. But by relieving the United States Government of a large expenditure, the surplus in the United States Treasury must be increased unless taxes are reduced. The cash balance in the Treasury on the 1st day of February was $292,490,973.30; the cash balance on the 1st day of March had increased $5,871,850.28. The surplus outside of the gold reserve, which was formerly counted as a surplus, is a little over $198,000,000.

The Government has just this much money which it does not know how to use. The per capita expenditures have been increased in every direction possible; and yet the problem of what to do with this surplus without decreasing taxation remains unsolved. The question has a very practical political aspect. The people know that the surplus means just that much money was taken from them which the Government did not need. The people resent paying more money into the United States Treasury than the Government can use. They find, in looking over the list of expenditures, that the war expenditures have not been materially decreased in any branch and in some have been increased. They know that in the nature of things these war expenses must decrease in the aggregate; and if the Government is now collecting more money than it can use, the surplus must increase unless the taxes decrease. From this practical side of the question comes forth some good to the American people. Having decreased the expenditures by the Porto Rican bill and not being desirous to have any more surplus to explain than they have now, the Republican leaders must be in a frame of mind to consider favorably a reduction of some of the war taxes.

BREWERS.

There are two of these taxes to which I wish to call especial attention. I hold in my hand a respectful petition from the brewers' associations of the United States, setting forth their claims for a reduction of tax in such a clear-cut, businesslike, patriotic, and modest way, that it seems to me no member on this floor can refuse to accede to their request.

I do not wish to enter into any discussion as to the merits or demerits of the business of manufacturing any kind of malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors. I have no quarrel with any man who believes in this industry or with any man who does not believe in it. The liquor business has two sides. To a certain extent it must be controlled under the police power, and I have no opposition to offer against proper police regulations. We are not here discussing a measure which has for its object or purpose any police regulation. The tax of $2 a barrel on beer was placed there purely as a revenue producer, and not in any sense as a regulation. We must therefore consider it as a revenue producer and not in the light of any opinions which may be held as to the desirability of increasing or decreasing the consumption of beer.

When the civil-war tax was placed upon beer it was placed at $1 per barrel. This amounted to a tax of about 8 per cent. The breweries of this country offered no protest at the imposition of this tax. There have been no petitions for its reduction, although the price of beer fell 60 per cent. When the present war-tax measure was before Congress the brewers contented themselves with a mere statement of their business and used no efforts to prevent the doubling up of the old war tax. They were willing to share whatever proportion of the war expenses Congress thought they ought to share. Now that the returns show too much money is being collected for the use of the Government, they, in a very respectful circular letter, ask that the extra tax of $1 per barrel be taken off beer. They show very clearly in their circular letter that there has been an unjust discrimination between malt, vinous, and spirituous liquors. From the standpoint of those who believe the liquor trade harmful in its tendencies the most extreme opinion would be that malt liquors were the least harmful of the three kinds; and yet malt liquors are the ones discriminated against in the present law. It would seem that the only reasonable explanation of this fact is that the brewers were not assiduous in presenting their claims to Congress while the manufacturers of vinous and spirituous liquors were active.

The present condition of the brewing business shows conclusively that it is absolutely necessary for that trade to have the relief asked for. The brewers of the United States are gradually building up a fine export trade. In 1890 they exported $654,408, while in 1899 they exported $1,888,124. The cost of manufacturing beer in the United States is much greater than in most other countries. The increase in exports is due to the superior quality of American beer, and under the old tax the American brewers took great pride in increasing this superiority of quality. The large breweries have led in this pride of quality, and the smaller ones have been compelled to follow in order to compete. The circular letter, signed by all of the brewers, states, and explains the reason why, this pride in quality must be abandoned if this tax is not removed.

They can not keep up this quality and compete with foreign beers. The margin of profit has become so small that this extra $1 per barrel constitutes the difference between success and failure in the brewing business. The smaller breweries have failed or sold out to the larger ones. The larger ones have only continued business on a losing basis, because they believed the tax was only temporary, and they could not afford to lose the trade already established, as they would do if they closed their establishments. Some of the independent smaller breweries have already decreased the quality of their product, rather than to fail. The American taste for beer has been educated so that they demand good beer. The result has been that the per capita consumption of malt liquors was less in 1899 than it was in 1896, while the per capita consumption of distilled spirits has increased from 1 gallon to 1.15 gallons. The per capita consumption of beer decreased about 10 per cent. It is not good governmental policy to increase the consumption of spirituous liquors by decreasing the consumption of malt liquors.

There is another consideration which, while it tends somewhat to bring this question under the police power, yet is in reality entirely separate from that question so far as beer is concerned. The tax upon spirituous liquors was not increased, and yet that tax costs the Government more money to collect and the business of manufacturing spirituous liquors costs more to guard and protect than any other business. The illicit competition in the spirituous-liquor business costs annually large sums of money to detect and destroy. It requires the Internal-Revenue Office to keep a list of agents of the Government who have been wounded or killed. It involves a constant warfare. No such condition presents itself as to the illicit manufacture of beer.

The breweries of the United States largely look after this matter themselves. The brewers paid, according to the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the fiscal years 1898 and 1899, $108,159,979. One-half of this amount was the extra war tax. The total increase in internal-revenue taxes for these two years was $126,748,587. The brewers alone paid over 40 per cent of these increased taxes. They can not continue to bear these burdens and continue their business. This tax could be taken off and there would still be more revenue than is needed to pay the expenses of the Government. An act of justice can be done in removing this tax and at the same time reduce the surplus of which the people complain.

RETAIL DRUGGISTS.

There is another tax which does not amount to enough in the aggregate to interfere with the revenues of the country and yet which does amount to enough to seriously cripple a class of merchants who have never asked for special consideration at the hands of Congress. I refer to the stamp tax upon druggists' sundries and proprietary medicines. This is a tax which neither the manufacturer nor the consumer pays. Ordinarily the consumer ultimately pays the taxes. He would in this case if the tax was enough higher or enough lower. The tax is fixed at a figure which justifies the manufacturer in adding it to the price of his goods, which are sold by the gross. The retail druggist pays this increase of price. He therefore pays the tax. Ordinarily this tax would be added to the retail price of the article sold. But the customer knows exactly what the tax is and as it only amounts to a fraction of a cent, or at most to 1 or 2 cents, he naturally objects to having the price increased on account of so small an increase in the cost of the article.

A medicine which sold for 75 cents before the present law was passed still sells for 75 cents, but the retailer pays the amount of tax in addition to what he paid before. This entire tax, therefore, is paid by the retailer. It is a serious burden upon the retail drug trade. Its removal would not be felt by the Government. Its continuance is neither necessary nor desirable. I therefore ask, in the name of the brewers, who are not poor, but who will become so if this tax is continued, and in the name of the retail druggists, who are usually men of small capital, that the oppression which seemed necessary when the glory of the nation was at stake, be now taken from them, as the nation is safe and these onerous burdens are no longer required.

So serious a problem has the increasing surplus in the United States Treasury become that Congress is seeking new avenues of expenditure in order to get rid of the money which the Government does not need. One of these measures is the ship-subsidy bill, which gives subsidies to a few lines of established ships, such subsidies amounting to $9,000,000 per year. By the passage of the Porto Rican tariff bill an American steamship line, the Porto Rican and American Steamship Company, which owns four steel vessels which were built and are operated by American officers, has been so seriously crippled that it is scarcely able to keep its boats running. This Porto Rican measure is one which kills the trade between the United States and Porto Rico, and destroys this ocean commerce which would otherwise be profitable. And yet the party which passes this bill proposes to turn around and present $9,000,000 a year to men who are successfully engaged in navigating the sea. And what is this $9,000,000 to be paid for? It is not proposed to establish any new lines of vessels; it is not proposed to guarantee any increase of freight. The men who receive the $9,000,000 are to build some ships of their own with a portion of the money and keep the ships and the balance of the money. It is plainly and evidently simply a proposition to decrease the surplus in the United States Treasury by giving a part of it to private individuals.

While there is no constitutional limitation upon the authority of Congress to levy any amount of taxes in a constitutional way that it may see fit, yet it is a general governmental principle that taxes shall be levied only as required for governmental use. It is neither necessary nor desirable that the money of the people should be locked up in the United States Treasury. The people of the United States are very heavily taxed. Our complex system of government requires taxes for many purposes. The aggregate of the municipal, township, school, State, and Federal taxes run our per capita tax up to $16, as against $4.50 in England. Our people are more heavily taxed than in any other nation except Spain. The Federal taxes are not as high as in two or three other countries, but in those countries there are no State taxes.

Previous to the war tax, passed for the purpose of providing revenue for the war with Spain, this country was grievously taxed. But an emergency came, and in order to meet that emergency Congress placed additional taxes upon the people. There was little or no complaint. The American people are the most patriotic people in the world to-day. If the life of the Government was in danger and the citizens were called upon to give up everything they had in order to save the nation, a very large portion of them would willingly accede to that demand. They were told that it was an emergency, and it was all they cared to know. They put their hands in their pockets and paid the taxes. It occasioned some surprise when they discovered that the telegraph companies, the express companies, and the banks compelled their patrons to pay all of the taxes and declined to share in the responsibilities of citizenship; but the people paid the taxes, and they had a pride in paying them. They felt that they were standing behind the men in the field, and they read the accounts of victories won with a sense of patriotic exultation.

The war was closed, the Americans had triumphed, and the American people rejoiced. The emergency was over. They read the reports of the Treasury Department, and they found that now the emergency was over the Government had more money than it knew what to do with. They said to themselves, "Uncle Sam is all right again; he does not need our money, and Congress will take off the emergency taxes." But to their astonishment the American people find that the surplus is increasing and the taxes are not decreasing. Instead of seeking how to relieve the people of these new and unusual burdens, the majority in Congress has devoted its deliberations to finding a means of retaining the burdens and discovering new and unusual methods of expenditure. The emergency tax is not being removed when the emergency is over.

The governor of the little island of Porto Rico must be installed with great pomp and ceremony. His inauguration will be more formal and imposing than that of the President of the United States. He is to receive a larger salary, including the use of the governor's mansion, than is to be paid to the governor of any State of the Union. They did not see how they could divide the Territory of Porto Rico into more than twelve districts and give the judges any work at all. This did not provide enough for inferior judicial officers. They therefore placed three judges upon each nisi prius bench. They also provided for a supreme court and United States courts. A most aristocratic government of the United States is that of Porto Rico. They seek to use a part of the funds to present them to a few shipping companies which are already wealthy. They sought to use a very large amount of the surplus in building a canal across the Nicaragua isthmus to be controlled by England. When its being controlled by England was objected to, they declined to build any canal. These are the ways in which this Congress has sought to dispose of the emergency-tax question. The bills introduced and favorably considered by the majority of this House which relate to this subject at all provide for the establishment of new lines of expenditure and not to the abolition of emergency revenue.

I believe that Congress in all good conscience is bound to keep taxes at as low a point as possible in order to provide for the legitimate expenses of an economically administered Government. I do not believe that it is right, morally or politically, to retain burdens which have become unnecessary. I do not believe it is right when we have a surplus in the Treasury to study how to increase the cost of administering the Government. I believe that this is a very dangerous thing to do. The people paid the last emergency tax willingly and cheerfully because they thought and were officially informed that it was a temporary emergency tax. If it is not removed, now that the emergency is passed, when the next emergency comes and taxes must again be increased the people will not be so patient or patriotic. If we deal fairly with the people now they will have confidence in us and trust in the wisdom of taxing measures in the future. But if we compel the people to pay these emergency taxes when there is no longer a necessity for them we will lose the confidence of the people and we will dim the patriotism which has been the most glorious characteristic of the American people since the birth of this Republic.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this Congress will relieve the Government of some necessary expenses in its outlying territories by providing systems of local revenue. Are the people to have the benefit of these reductions, or are they not? If they are, then I ask Congress to consider carefully the claims of the brewers and the retail druggists, because I know, from personal investigation, that these men can not well stand the additional burden imposed upon them by the war-revenue law. It is out of proportion to the burden imposed upon other classes of business, and in good equity taxes ought to be made as equal and uniform as it is possible to make them.

There may be other lines which impose hardship and where the taxes are no longer necessary; and if such is the case, those ought also to be relieved. It is certainly of the utmost importance that this war-revenue law be most carefully revised. It will be remembered that it was not only passed as an emergency tax, but the passage itself was a matter of emergency. We needed the money, or thought we did, and we needed it hastily. Compare the hearings in a tariff investigation with those upon the war-revenue bill. The hearings upon the latter measure were necessarily incomplete and hurried. Mistakes were to be expected, and mistakes occurred. We got more revenue than we wanted and more than we intended. The revenue produced has been greater than the estimates of the committee.

Some of the taxes have not appeared to be burdensome, others are ruining the men who pay them. From the operations of the law we can discover its errors much more clearly than they could be seen while the law was untried. The brewers themselves did not realize how fatal this tax would be to their business, or in self-defense they would have used their utmost efforts to prevent it being imposed. They were patriotic enough to be entirely willing to share their just proportion of the increased expenditures of the Government. The operation of the law has disclosed the fact that they are taxed out of all proportion to what they should justly be called upon for. The operation of the law has shown that it is practically not a tax at all, but a confiscation of their entire profits.

The druggists' tax was not fought very hard by anyone, because it was supposed that it would largely be paid by the consumers and so distributed that it would be burdensome to none. The experience of the past two years has shown that the tax is too large not to increase the wholesale price of goods and too small to increase the retail price. It is therefore borne by the retailers alone, who did not expect to pay it and who can not afford to pay it. There may be other articles where the operations of the bill have been different from what was intended. Even if Congress did not believe that the time had come for repealing this measure, there certainly should be no objection to a thorough and careful scrutiny of its provision in the light of experience, in order to detect and correct its manifest inequalities and burdensome exactions.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, now that the Republican party has provided for an increase in local revenues and a consequent decrease in national expenditures, it consider the question of relief for the poor taxpaying people before it takes up any questions of donating public funds to wealthy individuals.

APPENDIX.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: On behalf of the brewing industry of the United States, and in accordance with resolutions adopted at a general meeting of brewers held in the city of New York on the 7th day of December, 1898, the undersigned respectfully beg leave to submit to your honorable bodies the following reasons why the tax upon fermented liquors should be reduced to the former rate.

The attitude of the American brewers at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, as reflected in their remonstrance addressed to every member of your honorable bodies, was that of patriotic citizens, fully aware of the extraordinary needs and requirements of the hour, perfectly willing to assist to the full extent of their ability in maintaining the honor of the nation, but equally confident that the lawmaking power would not and in justice and fairness could not possibly attempt to increase the tax upon their product unless all the available sources of internal revenue resorted to during the civil war should prove to be insufficient to produce the amount of money required for the successful prosecution of the war.

And even in that case an additional tax upon malt liquors was deemed impossible, because unjust and inequitable, except upon the assumption that the lawmaking power would also increase the tax upon distilled liquors, and impose taxes upon all other alcoholic beverages, so as to include domestic wines and ciders, which have never borne any part of the nation's fiscal burdens. These self-evident conclusions, although based upon the most obvious principles of justice and equity, and fortified by fiscal, economic, and moral considerations of the highest importance, were overbalanced not only by totally erroneous opinions as to the latent ability of the brewing industry to bear additional taxes, but also by the unwarranted belief that the doubling of the tax rate would necessarily double the amount of revenue from this source without materially increasing the expense of collection, and, what is more important, without creating any appreciable industrial disturbance or popular discontent. Guided by these considerations, your honorable bodies determined upon a fiscal measure which stands alone and without a parallel in the history of civilized countries, i. e., the doubling of the tax upon an article of consumption (already overtaxed) which constitutes one of the necessaries of life of a large proportion of the population.

While, as we have already intimated, this act might have been justifiable as an extreme war measure, adopted under stress of extraordinary circumstances and in view of complications imperatively demanding immediate action, it can not be successfully defended upon any rational ground in the face of the facts that scarcely one-third of the available revenue sources have been resorted to; that the tax upon distilled spirits has not been increased, and that domestic wines and ciders remain practically untaxed.

The following, obtained from official sources, clearly demonstrates the astonishingly inequitable and unfair adjustment of tax burdens:

During five months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1898, to November 30, 1898, the total receipts under the war-revenue act of 1898 amounted to $37,810,262.31, of which sum the extra tax upon malt liquors yielded $15,183,006.56, or over 67 per cent of the aggregate amount received from all other sources, and over 40 per cent of the entire war tax. The figures stand as follows, viz:

Extra tax upon fermented liquors	$15,183,006.56
War tax from all other sources	22,627,255.75
Total	37,810,262.31

Taking into consideration the aggregate receipts from all internal-revenue sources—new and old—we find an equally striking illustration of the inequality in the distribution of taxes. During the period before mentioned the receipts from all sources (new and old) were as follows:

Fermented liquors (old and new tax)	$31,000,734.73
All other sources (old and new tax)	85,128,848.37

Hence the proportion of revenue derived from fermented liquors amounted to over 36 per cent of the total receipts from all other sources and to over 26 per cent of the entire receipts.

That the brewing industry of America, which had uncomplainingly and cheerfully borne and honestly paid a very high tax upon its product ever since the war of the rebellion, should now be made to pay 40 per cent of the entire sum raised under the new act for carrying on the Spanish-American war, while two-thirds of the nation's available revenue sources remain totally unproductive, the tax upon distilled spirits is continued at its ante-bellum rate and domestic wines are practically untaxed, is certainly an injustice which need not be emphasized. Nevertheless, it may not be amiss to compare the taxes raised for the maintenance of the Union during the civil war, which lasted four years, exacting enormous sacrifices of human blood and straining the nation's energy to its utmost, with the taxes raised for the prosecution of the shortest and least sanguinary war ever recorded in modern history.

In 1866, when the net expenditures of the Government amounted to $1,217,704,000, the internal revenue yielded $309,226,000, and of this latter sum the brewing industry paid—at the rate of $1 per barrel—but $5,115,000. The industry was then in a most flourishing condition, increasing its annual production at the rate of 1,000,000 barrels, and receiving an average price of $12 per barrel. In 1897, when the expenditures of the Government, including the estimated cost of the Spanish-American war, did not exceed one-half of the expenditures of the year 1866, the brewing industry paid—still at the rate of $1 per barrel—about $32,000,000 into the Federal Treasury. Competition had in the meantime reduced the selling price of a barrel of beer to $5, and the cost of labor had increased by at least 40 per cent.

To impose an additional tax of $1 per barrel upon a commodity already so seriously handicapped and overtaxed virtually amounts to an attempt (unwittingly made, of course) to destroy an industry which, from every conceivable point of view, it should be the duty of the lawmakers to protect. It was to have been foreseen that such must be the effect of this extra tax, and the reduced production, as shown by the official returns, clearly demonstrates it.

In 1866 the special revenue commission reported that the tax of $1 per barrel (sold at $12) exceeded the rate imposed by any European state, and was fully up to the revenue standard. This applies to present conditions far more forcibly than to the conditions of 1866. The additional war tax exceeds the revenue standard by more than half its legitimate proportion, and to that extent it exceeds the tax-bearing ability of the trade.

In no other civilized country are fermented liquors made to bear so large a proportion of the internal taxes as in our own, and in no other country is there greater need of encouraging the use of the milder stimulants by judicious fiscal laws—a policy which, first promulgated by Alexander Hamilton and adopted by the Congress of the United States in 1790, has consistently been adhered to up to the date of the imposition of this additional tax. A comparison of the taxes upon beer and upon distilled spirits in the United States and in Great Britain may be cited here in support of the foregoing assertion:

SPIRIT TAX PER GALLON.

United States	$1.10
Great Britain	2.43

BEER TAX.

$2 for 31 American gallons equal to 26⅓ imperial gallons.
$1.18 for 31 American gallons equal to $1.62 for 36 imperial gallons.

Reducing imperial gallons to American gallons, you will perceive that the English brewer pays $1.18 (less a rebate) upon the same quantity of beer for which the American brewer pays a tax of $2, less a similar allowance for loss by leakage, etc. The cost of labor is very much lower in Great Britain than in America, and like differences in cost of material, added to complete immunity from excessive local taxation, place the British brewer in an infinitely more favorable economic position than that occupied by his American fellow-manufacturer.* The British brewer's fiscal position as compared with that of the British distiller as a taxpayer is the very opposite of that of the American brewers; it is attributable to a fixed policy on the part of the British Government to encourage and popularize the use of fermented beverages by a discriminative tax rate in favor of these drinks.

It is asserted that a tax upon spirits exceeding the present rate can not be collected, i. e., that the taxpayers will evade it; defrauding the Government and yet exacting the tax from the people, as they have done whenever the rate was increased. Admitting, for the sake of argument, the correctness of this statement, we fail to recognize in it any valid reason why the brewers, noted—as innumerable official reports demonstrate—for their integrity as taxpayers, should be made the fiscal scapegoats for the sins of the distillers and compelled to pay an additional war tax which exceeds the revenue standard by 50 per cent and will inevitably cripple a most useful industry.

Excessive taxation nearly destroyed the British brewing industry in the past century. Its effect upon the drinking habits of the people and the prevalence of drunkenness are too well known to every student of history to require reiteration. The governments of other nations profited by their own and this English experience, and hence we find that in France, Belgium, Switzerland, and the Scandinavian countries beer is either very lightly taxed or not taxed at all. Our additional tax has already reduced the consumption very considerably, and can not but result in a still more rapid decrease in the production and consumption of beer. The loss thus occasioned will not only affect in a most disastrous measure and manner every one of the many trades dependent upon brewing, but will also jeopardize one of the main sources of Federal revenue and change for the worse the drinking habits of the people.

Differences of opinion may possibly exist, from the lawmaker's point of view, as to the tenableness of the moral and ethical considerations here alluded to; there can be no room, however, for argument as to the injustice of the tax to the brewer, the dealer, and the consumer (we mention the three, for all suffer in varying degrees under the new tax law); nor is there any doubt as to the actual effect of the tax as a revenue measure pure and simple, and as to its effect upon the consumption of fermented liquors. During the period of five months mentioned before (July 1 to November 30, 1898) the decrease in the consumption, as compared with the same period of the previous year, amounted to 1,250,000 barrels.

If this could happen within five months after the enactment of the new law, when every brewer naturally put forth his most strenuous efforts to hold his trade, in the vague hope that aid might come to him from some source, and that matters between himself, the Government, the dealer, and the consumer might satisfactorily regulate themselves, what must be the effect, particularly upon the smaller establishments, if this anomalous and intolerable state of affairs should continue for an indefinite period with no relief to be hoped for from any quarter? At the rate of decrease of which the figures quoted above may be regarded as a fair criterion, diminished production will in the very near future offset the aggregate increase of revenue derived from the double tax rate; the fiscal object of the increase of tax will then be frustrated, and the lawmakers will have accomplished nothing except the destruction of one-half of the brewing establishments and of all industries dependent upon them, thus impairing alike one of the most important of the nation's wealth-producing agencies and a productive source of revenue, which, on account of its stability, could hitherto be relied upon as almost the only sure and predeterminable quantity in the necessary estimates of Federal receipts.

The ratio of the decrease in the production of malt liquors as a direct result of the imposition of the additional tax is not, of course, uniformly the same throughout the country; nor is it possible to state with anything like mathematical accuracy in what proportion untaxed wines and ciders and lightly taxed ardent spirits have taken the place of the milder beverages thus forcibly driven out of the market under an unjust distribution of taxes. True, the revenue report for the period of five months repeatedly mentioned before (July 1 to November 30, 1898) show an increase of receipts from the spirit tax amounting to $1,116,000, in round numbers, as compared with the receipts for the same period of the preceding year; but these official reports can afford us no clue as to the consumption of untaxed wine and cider. Fortunately we are enabled to present local statistics of undisputed authenticity illustrating in what manner and to what extent untaxed wines and ciders drive out overtaxed malt liquors, to the detriment alike of the brewing industry and of the Federal Treasury.

These domestic wines, ordinarily containing three times as much alcohol as malt liquors, were sold by the measure and consequently did not yield any revenue whatever to the Government; on the other hand, the Federal Treasury lost the revenue tax upon 28,889 barrels of malt liquors by reason of the decrease in the production of malt liquors. Not only do these domestic wines produce no revenue, but they accelerate the decline of a tax-yielding industry.

At the present time it is difficult, almost impossible, to estimate the extent of injury already inflicted upon brewing and the allied trades; but this much is certain, that far from causing a minimum of industrial disturbance, as had been claimed, the additional tax has completely unsettled the industry, causing an astonishing proportion of insolvencies among the smaller producers, and strengthening the tendency toward consolidation and the creation of trusts to such a degree that in nearly every brewing center, the smallest not excepted, there is now pending a scheme of this character. Everything is in a state of transition; neither the producers, nor the retailers, nor, in fact, the consumers have succeeded in accommodating themselves to the new condition of things; everything is held in abeyance; sporadic and desultory efforts to regulate matters are quickly abandoned on account of the uncertainty of surrounding circumstances and the vague possibility that concerted action—such as the formation of trusts—may bring relief.

In the meantime the brewer, unwilling as yet to reduce the wages of his workmen, and equally loath to produce an inferior quality of beer, can find no way by which to recoup losses arising from diminished sales and an expense account based upon the former more favorable conditions. Sooner or later the exigencies of a desperate situation will compel him to resort to either or both of these expedients, and even then it is questionable whether the relief sought will be obtained. It is perfectly well understood in theory that the consumer must ultimately pay any excise tax, but when such a tax causes decrease of consumption, both the manufacturer and retailer must in one form or another bear a part of the loss. Doubtless, the consumer already pays part of the tax; for while the price of beer by the glass or measure has not been raised, the quantity given for the old price is smaller; nevertheless, the burden of the tax rests most heavily upon the manufacturer, who needs immense sums of ready money for the purchase of stamps, thus investing capital which for many weeks and even months remains practically dead, yielding no return and swelling his loss account, caused by delinquent debtors, to prodigious figures. The brewers lose enormous sums, as we have stated, because their operating expenses remain the same, while, on account of steadily decreasing sales, their profits grow less from day to day.

Besides this, for some reason or other, brewers do not succeed in collecting the whole amount of the tax; in many instances attempts to do so only resulted in augmented book accounts; in others, compromises had to be effected in order to hold trade. The pressure arising from competition naturally operates along the lines of least resistance, and hence, in this respect, too, the smaller establishments are the greatest sufferers, in spite of the fact that the larger producers—to their credit be it said—have sought and still seek to protect them. What the fate of the smaller establishments would be if the additional tax should be continued can easily be inferred from the fact that there are in all about 1,800 brewers in the United States, of which number 100 brew one-half of the entire quantity of malt liquors produced in our country, while the remaining 1,700 manufacturers produce the other half, averaging 10,000 barrels per brewery. If under such alluringly favorable conditions trusts and combinations upon a large scale have not yet been formed, it is because the assurances given both by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and of the Finance Committee of the Senate justified the hope that upon the termination of the Spanish-American war the additional tax would be remitted. We are fully aware that the extraordinary expenditures growing out of this war have not yet reached their limit; but we would respectfully submit that this is no reason why our industry should continue to bear an insufferable burden, while two-thirds of the legitimate and easily available revenue sources of our country do not pay, and for the past thirty-two years have not paid, a single dollar of internal revenue, while the tax upon distilled spirits remains unchanged and neither domestic wines (when sold in bulk or by the measure) nor native ciders pay any taxes whatever.

The additional tax of $1 per barrel upon malt liquors represents, as we have stated, 40 per cent of the aggregate receipts derived from all sources under the new revenue act. The whole tax of $2 per barrel represents 40 per cent of the price of our product. We hold that there is not even a semblance of a reasonable argument by which could be justified the imposition of such an enormous tax upon an article of general consumption—a beverage which forms an essential part of the daily diet of the great mass of the workingmen of this country, and which at the same time served great hygienic and moral purposes, inasmuch as its popularization has minimized the evils resulting from the former general use of ardent spirits.

The continuance of this double burden, imposed at a time when the market value of our product had dwindled to less than one-half of the price which prevailed when the old war tax was imposed, can not but result in the destruction of a large proportion of the brewing plants of this country. The enormous decrease in the consumption of malt liquors, which has taken place within five months after the imposition of the additional tax, and the present depressed condition of the trade may serve as a reliable gauge of the injury which the continuance of the tax will inflict upon the industry. The crippling of the brewing industry means not only the impairment of the most valuable source of revenue and of one of the more important wealth-producing factors; it also means the jeopardizing of the interests of agriculture, of innumerable allied trades, of the brewery workingmen, who now receive much higher wages than the average mechanic in any other branch of industry, and last, but not least, of the consumer who, when the process of crushing the weaker manufacturers and combining the larger producers into vast trusts shall have been accomplished under the operation of the inexorable economic conditions produced by this exorbitant tax, will ultimately be the sufferer in more than one way.

*The wages of brewery workmen are as follows: Foreman, $8.50 per week; engineman, $7.50; coopers, $8; laborers, $5 per week. The average price of ale per barrel is $8.75, and of porter, $7.50. The prices of materials are, as a rule, not as high as American prices. The beer dealers' license (wholesale) costs $16 and the retail beer sellers' license, $3.

It is universally admitted that the gigantic strides with which, within the last forty years, the cause of true temperance has progressed toward its goal are almost exclusively attributable to the substitution of the mild fermented beverages for distilled spirits as the common drink of the people. This substitution, the aim and object of every civilized government of our time, would have been impossible without a broad discrimination in favor of fermented liquors in point of the relative proportion of taxes imposed upon the two kinds of drinks, and the determination to tax fermented drinks as lightly as possible.

In all Federal excise legislation, beginning with the first bill proposed by Alexander Hamilton, this policy found unequivocal and emphatic expression, and Congressional debates prove beyond a doubt that the master minds of our people were at all times its most ardent advocates. The recent excise act is not merely a departure from this policy, but a complete subversion of it; and the inevitable result will be a relapse into the deplorable condition of things which in past years had placed the American people in the foremost ranks of "hard-drinking nations."

In respetfully submitting the foregoing statement of facts upon which we base our petition for a reduction of the tax upon malt liquors to the former rate, we rely upon the justice of our claim no less firmly and confidently than upon that sense of fairness and equity which ordinarily guides the lawmakers of a great nation.

Porto Rico.

SPEECH

OF

HON. THOMAS H. TONGUE,

OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto—

Mr. TONGUE said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The policy of protecting American industries and American labor from foreign competition is not involved in the passage or defeat of this bill. When that fundamental doctrine of the Republicanism of Lincoln, as well as of McKinley, comes in question, I shall be found supporting it in the future as I have supported it in the past. The country abandoned it in 1894. The abandonment brought industrial paralysis, national and individual bankruptcy. It was restored in 1897, and the restoration brought revived industry, national and individual prosperity.

As a permanent national policy, I am in favor of free trade with Porto Rico. I am in favor of unrestricted commercial intercourse with the people of those islands as soon as such a policy is consistent with their welfare and their duty to the people of the United States. As soon as possible the people of Porto Rico should have the same commercial privileges and should perform the same commercial duties as the States and Territories that have hitherto composed the United States. There should be no discrimination and no favors. Their commercial privileges should go hand in hand with their commercial and economic duties.

There are no circumstances or conditions that would justify the imposition of any tariff upon any of the products of Porto Rico imported into the United States under the claim of protecting any of our own industries against such competition. Porto Rico can not now and will not at any time be able to send to the United States any products to an extent that will reduce in the slightest degree the price of any of the products of American industry. Her exports of sugar amount to about 50,000 tons annually. This is less than one-fourth the products of a single beet-sugar factory of the United States. We purchase from foreign nations annually 1,400,000 tons, and the consumption of sugar is constantly on the increase. The sugar and tobacco that Porto Rico can send to the United States are too utterly insignificant to affect the prices of these articles here.

Let us briefly examine the various provisions of the pending bill, so far as it deals with the imposition of duties. Under the present law the full duties required by the Dingley law to be collected upon foreign merchandise imported into the United States are collected upon like goods imported into the United States from Porto Rico, and similar duties are collected upon certain articles imported into Porto Rico from the United States. As soon as the present bill becomes a law all of these duties are removed at once, absolutely, upon all necessary food products going from the United States into Porto Rico. Eighty-five per cent of present duties are removed at once from all articles of commerce passing between Porto Rico and the United States either way. All other duties of every kind upon all goods passing between Porto Rico and the United States are to be removed absolutely in two years, and as much sooner as a legislature elected by the people of Porto Rico shall so decide.

The permanent policy, therefore, of this bill is unrestricted commercial intercourse between Porto Rico and the United States. The only interference with present absolute unrestricted commercial intercourse is the retention for a brief period of 15 per cent of the present duties upon a few articles, principally upon sugar and tobacco, coming from Porto Rico into the United States. This will cease, in any event, at the expiration of two years. The people of Porto Rico, under this bill, are given the absolute power to terminate it at any moment. This brief retention of these slight duties is the only portion of this bill that has been subjected to unusual and severe criticism. Why not absolute free trade? Why retain any duties upon any portion of its commerce?

I regret the conditions that make it necessary. But we are confronted with conditions with which, as practical men and practical legislators, having in view and at heart the best interests of the people of Porto Rico, we are required to deal and deal now. We are not called upon to legislate for one class of people alone, not simply for the rich planters whose domains number thousands of acres and whose annual products of sugar run up to thousands of tons. We are not required to legislate alone for the merchant, the trader, or the middleman. These classes of people, able to send to this Capitol interested representatives demanding legislation in their own interest, are not all of the people of Porto Rico. There is a vast mass, ignorant, poor, unable to comprehend our institutions or this proposed legislation, who have no knowledge even of its pendency, that we must also take into consideration in legislating for these islands.

When the people of Porto Rico receive the same commercial privileges accorded to the several States of the Union, they must be prepared to perform reciprocal duties. Let us see what those duties are. In every State of the Union we are enforcing our internal-revenue laws, including war taxes. We are collecting from the people of the United States under this law annually many million dollars, collected from every State of the Union, and are placing every dollar of that in the Federal Treasury. We are collecting at the several ports in every State in the Union import duties upon foreign merchandise, and every dollar of that is paid into the Federal Treasury. We are collecting in one form or another throughout the United States, in order to pay the expenses of the Federal Government, about $600,000,000 per annum.

In addition to that, the several States of the Union who are bearing their share of these burdens, contribute their share of these taxes, are raising within themselves by taxation upon their own citizens and upon their own property all the revenue needed to maintain and support their local, State, county, and municipal government, to support their schools, improve and repair their roads, maintain their courts of justice, preserve order, and care for their general welfare. In some instances these local taxes amount to 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the valuation of their property. When Porto Rico has full commercial privileges she should perform these duties. When the President advised that it was our "plain duty" to give Porto Rico free trade his recommendation implied that it was the "plain duty" of Porto Rico to submit to our internal-revenue laws, and that the money so collected, as well as that collected under our tariff, should be paid into the Treasury of the United States; that it was the "plain duty" equally of Porto Rico to raise by local taxation whatever more was needed to support local government, maintain order, support schools, improve and repair roads, maintain the courts, and carry on municipal government, organize and pay the police force, preserve good order, and carry out sanitary regulations. The President certainly intended, and expected, that while it was the "plain duty" of the people of the United States to give to the people of Porto Rico the same commercial privileges as those enjoyed by the States and Territories of the Union, it was equally the "plain duty" of the latter to bear the same burdens and perform the same economic duties. Are the people of Porto Rico able, are they willing, are they ready to perform these "plain duties?"

Are they ready to perform a single one of them? Does anyone who criticises this bill advocate the performance by the people of Porto Rico of a single one of these "plain duties?" Why not? What justification or what reason? If there is no justification for the retention of this small duty, is there one justification why Porto Rico should not perform these duties? The bill, as introduced by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, like a similar one introduced in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, while granting free trade to Porto Rico, extended the internal-revenue laws over the island, as over each State in the Union. While people have hysterically demanded to know why a portion of that bill was changed in a small way, in the retention of small duties, no one has demanded to know why the features of this bill in reference to internal-revenue taxes were changed.

It will be noticed that under the provisions of this bill Porto Rico is exempted from every form and provision of our internal-revenue laws, an exemption that applies to no other portion of the United States. It will be observed that the people of Porto Rico, under this bill, will be practically exempted from all forms of property taxation, an exemption, I believe, enjoyed by no other portion of the United States. It will be further observed that they are exempt from paying into the National Treasury any money collected as duties upon foreign goods, an exemption applying to no State or Territory of the Union. This policy was not contemplated by the President's recommendation, or in the bills introduced in either House in pursuance of such recommendation.

No one asked why this change. Vigorous attacks are made upon the retention of this small duty. No criticism whatever or question raised about granting to the people of Porto Rico exemption from all other forms of taxation. Has there been a single man opposing this bill at either end of the Capitol or the editor of a single newspaper who has proposed or who now proposes or even suggests that Porto Rico should perform a single one of these "plain duties" performed by every State in the Union or bear a single burden borne by other States of this Union? Have these gentlemen coming from Porto Rico, including those who, while residing there, never intended to become citizens, and who represent not the people of Porto Rico, but its wealth, its sugar, its tobacco, and its trade—have either of these gentlemen, while demanding every privilege of American citizenship, offered to bear a single burden or perform a single duty incident to such citizenship?

There has not been a single man opposing this bill or favoring it, in Congress or out of it, in Porto Rico or the United States, who has suggested in the remotest way that Porto Rico could now or should contribute a single dollar to the Federal Treasury toward defraying the expenses of the Federal Government, as do the citizens of every State and Territory of the Union. The utmost that has been offered by gentlemen claiming to represent Porto Rico, while demanding the total abolition of tariff duties, is that one-fourth of the amount of taxation prescribed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States might be collected, and the amount so collected turned over to the people of Porto Rico toward defraying the expenses of their government.

They demand exemption from every other form of direct or property taxation, a privilege enjoyed by no civilized people living, and we have conceded it. They have demanded substantial exemption from the internal-revenue laws of the United States, and we have conceded that. They have demanded to retain every dollar collected as duties upon foreign commerce, and we have conceded it. When this bill becomes a law, there never has been, there is not now, any portion of any civilized nation on earth so favored in taxation, so lightly taxed, as will be the people of Porto Rico. And yet we are accused of "oppressing Porto Rico." A more malicious slander, a more glaring falsehood, could not have been uttered. It is said that this bill is without precedent. We concede it. Never in all the history of our country has any portion of the United States, any State or Territory, been so favored, so lightly taxed, as will be the people of Porto Rico under this bill.

I have said that the enactment of this bill was intended to meet in a practical, humane way existing conditions that we were compelled to confront. They are conditions for which no one is responsible. They are conditions that probably will not arise at any other time, in any other way. What are they? What are the conditions that justify the imposing of this small amount of duty; that justify exempting the people of Porto Rico from duties and burdens that are borne by every citizen of the United States? What are the conditions that justify withdrawing the ordinary methods of supporting local government, retaining this small tariff, and applying all the money collected under that as well as from foreign commerce to defray the expenses of local government in Porto Rico? Let us examine them briefly.

In the first place, we have destroyed the government under which the people of Porto Rico have lived for centuries. To organize a new government, complete in all its branches, with the necessary machinery for the assessment of property and the collection of taxes, must necessarily be slow. Money is needed to pay governmental expenses while this machinery could be organized. While this is being done government in some form must be carried on, courts must be maintained, schools must be supported, roads must be repaired, order and peace must be preserved. All this requires money, and money for this purpose means taxation upon something, and paid by somebody. The machinery for the collection of the small taxation imposed by this bill is now in existence, fully organized, in running order, and to operate it in the collection of the taxes retained by this bill will cause no delay and add no additional expense. The method of collecting it is simple, inexpensive, efficient, and can be enforced now. This is one advantage that commends it, but this is not the only one.

The principal reason for the passage of this bill is that if local government existed, if the machinery necessary to assess property and collect taxes was in full operation, it is alleged by those in a condition to know best that taxation sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of local government, carry on schools, improve and repair roads, dispense justice, and preserve order could not be collected from the people of Porto Rico in their present condition. Does anyone opposing this bill sincerely believe otherwise? I know the gentleman from Maine, who was so hampered by the Constitution that he could see no way from keeping a convicted and confessed criminal from membership in this House, after admitting that it would take three or four million dollars for these purposes, stated: "It is conceded that by the ordinary methods of taxation this amount must be raised." Who concedes it? No one but the gentleman from Maine. What does General Davis, the governor of the island, with much better opportunities to observe, have to say on this subject?

But in August a calamity came upon the island the like of which it is impossible to cite an example. I believe there have been similar calamities, but they are fortunately unknown to the people of the United States. In one day two-thirds of all the current wealth was obliterated; it was wiped out in one day. Everyone knows that such a calamity can not occur without disarranging everything, commercial, industrial, and social.

The coffee lands suffered worst. These trees are planted on the hill and mountain slopes, and in many places the declivities are very abrupt. The gale tore up the trees, loosened the soil, and the deluge of water converted the earth into a semifluid.

Then followed landslides, and thousands of acres of coffee plantations slid down into the valley; trees, soil, rocks, and every vestige of culture are piled up in the bottom of the valleys. In such cases there is no restoration possible, for where there were smiling groves are now only bald rocks which were uncovered by the avalanches.

Where the soil was not disturbed the most of the coffee trees were either uprooted, broken off, or stripped of foliage and the immature berries. The larger trees of other varieties, which are habitually grown for shade to the coffee, were blown down, and their protection to the coffee trees is also gone; so where the trees are not wholly denuded, the protection of the berries from the sun's heat is absent, and the green fruit is blighted and spoiled.

It will take five years to reestablish these coffee vegas, and there will be necessarily years of want and industrial paralysis.

It seems to me that Porto Rico has got to realize in some way $5,000,000 a year from taxes at least. It ought to be much more than that, but at least $5,000,000 for municipal government and insular government, including public works and schools.

Five million dollars is two and a half times more than I can collect from taxes, to say nothing of the hurricane, and perhaps five times as much as I can collect now. To bridge over that means must come from somewhere, or this prostration will continue.

The municipal governments are many of them prostrate; the police can not be paid, the prisoners can not be fed, and the schools must be closed if not wholly supported from the insular treasury.

I quote the following from the testimony of General Davis before the Senate committee:

Judging from the capacity of the island to pay taxes, and on the basis of present tariff rates and the condition of their industries, I should say it would be imprudent to obtain more than a million and a half from all sources.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Suppose we should repeal the tariff so as to have free trade with the United States?

General DAVIS. That would cut it still more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. How much?

General DAVIS. It would cut it about in two.

Mr. NELSON. What does your plan contemplate in regard to customs and internal-revenue taxes? Are they to go into the general fund or be devoted exclusively to that country?

General DAVIS. It is, of course, immaterial where the money comes from, but they must have a large revenue to administer the affairs of the government. My suggestion is that all collections inure to the country; but I am looking to see the sources from which a revenue can be obtained. A general system of taxation to produce revenue enough to carry on the government would amount to confiscation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can you collect revenue enough to maintain the government?

General DAVIS. Not for two or three years on any basis.

Mr. NELSON (to General Davis). Have you any system of taxation akin to our internal-revenue taxation?

General DAVIS. Only on two articles. One, the liquor tax, of which I have spoken, of 3 cents a liter, and the other a tax on matches, the manufacture of matches.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you levy the tax readily, or with difficulty?

General DAVIS. With difficulty; no man pays his tax readily.

He further testified that the people dependent upon the coffee industry had been fed by the charity of the Government and $800,000 expended in their relief. He states further:

I have not felt it proper for me to discuss Congressional matters, filling, as I do, an executive position. I have expressed my views fully, however, on Porto Rico's needs; and I might say, if Congress should adopt free trade, the receipts of the custom-houses would naturally cease. One million five hundred thousand dollars has been collected during the fiscal year, and with free trade this will fall off. What, then, will run the island?

Although I have received no official advices regarding an appropriation, I understand through the newspapers that an appropriation was decided upon, and I infer that this appropriation will be spent on insular government expenses. If free trade is adopted, I can not see how the necessary funds for conducting the affairs of the island are to be raised by myself or those who succeed me.

Two million dollars are the present expenses, and this amount will be needed annually. There is only a small revenue incoming from stamps, liquors, tobacco, and mercantile licenses, and it is impossible to collect taxes because of the conditions.

The assessable value of the property of Porto Rico is said to be about $100,000,000. To raise the amount conceded by the gentleman from Maine to be necessary would require a tax of from 3 to 4 per cent of the valuation of this property. To attempt to collect this tax, in the opinion of General Davis, "would amount to confiscation." It is conceded that our complex internal-revenue laws are unsuited to present conditions of the people of that island. An attempt to enforce them all at once, without due preparation, under present conditions, would be difficult and oppressive and, in the opinion of some eminent gentleman, would produce riot.

These are the conditions in the island that confront us. We must deal with them as practical men. We must deal with them now. We should deal with these distressed people in the spirit of mercy, with due regard to their welfare, conceding them not only humane but generous treatment. How are we to solve these problems? They must be solved now. Those who favor this bill, and in whose views I sincerely concur, believe that the method prescribed by this bill will be the easiest, the least oppressive, and the most humane way temporarily to collect the revenue needed for the support of the local government of those islands. This duty will fall principally upon sugar and tobacco brought from the islands into the United States. These articles, of all others, are best able to bear a small share of taxation. General Davis, in his report, has stated that during the late storm "the sugar industry has suffered much less than others."

It must be remembered that in past years the sugar industry has borne many burdens under Spanish government from which it would be exempted under ours. Yet it has exported to and sold in the United States three-fourths of its output, paying full Dingley duties, and has yet prospered. During all this time, with a magnificent soil and climate, specially suited to that industry, superior to our own, it has paid but 30 cents per day for its labor. Its climate and the fertility of its soil will continue; cheap labor will continue. The taxation paid under this bill will be less than the taxation paid in direct taxes by the American sugar producer for the support of his local government. It is idle to say that this tax will be oppressive, that these people are unable to pay it. There is no tax that could by any possibility be levied in Porto Rico that would be so wholly upon wealth and the burdens of which would fall so much upon the shoulders most able to bear it as the small tariff retained by this bill. But if this bill is not right, why have we not something suggested in its place? How would its opponents meet existing conditions?

Revenue is necessary. How is it to be raised? The Democratic minority of the Ways and Means Committee, in a lengthy, carefully, and ably written report, propose absolutely nothing. Nearly the entire report is taken by an argument as to the unconstitutionality of this bill, and a very small portion of it by denouncing the bill as oppressive. There is some plausibility in the former position. The latter is absolutely without foundation. The gentleman from Nevada, who also prepared a special minority report, based his objection upon the unconstitutionality of the bill. It is singular that he himself wrote, approved, and voted for a resolution—passed two years ago and still in force—in reference to Hawaii, which is as follows:

Until legislation shall be enacted extending the United States customs laws and regulations to the Hawaiian Islands, the existing customs relations of the Hawaiian Islands with the United States and other countries shall remain unchanged.

This is still the law for Hawaii.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], who prepared a separate minority report, bases his objection to this bill upon the following grounds:

The pending bill is, in my judgment, a well-considered measure from a fiscal standpoint, and is likely to produce a sufficient revenue. I am unable to give it my support, because it does not follow the rule of uniformity prescribed by the Constitution—a rule which, in my opinion, governs Congress in legislating for the Territories of the United States.

While objecting to the constitutionality of this bill, he voted for and supported the resolution which I have just quoted in reference to Hawaii. Just why and how it is unconstitutional to levy a tax of 15 per cent of the Dingley duties upon commerce with Porto Rico, but constitutional to levy a tax of 100 per cent of the Dingley duties upon commerce with Hawaii is something I am unable to comprehend. A distinguished Senator from Minnesota proposed that this tariff be omitted and that 15 per cent of the taxation prescribed by our internal-revenue laws, except the tax upon checks, drafts, and other commercial papers, be collected, and that applied to the government of the island. Such a bill would exempt wealth and tax poverty. The wealthy merchant who draws checks upon his banker for the payment of his daily expenses and purchases his imported wines and imported cigars would be exempted from such a tax.

Under such a system commercial transactions involving vast sums of money would escape taxation and its burdens be shifted upon simple medicines administered to the sick and dying. The taxgatherer would pass by the bank, pass by the palace of the sugar king, pass by the homes and business houses of the wealthy, and enter the chamber of the fever-stricken peon and the hovel of the lonely mother watching over the cradle of her dying child. The small manufacturer and dealer in cigars, out in some hut in a small village, would be driven out of business by the taxgatherer and his family to starvation, while Mr. Finlay, the sugar king, forty years a resident but not a citizen of Porto Rico, the man who is able to spend his time and his money in efforts to reduce this small duty upon his production, would revel in wealth and escape the taxgatherer.

Another remedy suggested has been that we should empower a commissioner to borrow money at 7 per cent interest per annum, mortgage the island, and turn it over to what our Populist friends delight to call the "minions of wealth," the "bloated bondholder." I submit that a government, like a private individual, should not borrow whenever it can pay its way. There are many interests in the island that can not bear taxation; we are exempting them. There are many people in the island requiring relief and charity, and we are bestowing both upon them. But this is no reason why we should not tax the people that can bear it, or that we should not collect taxes where they can be collected without injustice, without oppression, and without hardships to anyone. We ought not to mortgage the heritage of a coming generation in order to exempt the wealthy few of this.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATION.

But it is said that the President and members of his Cabinet have said that it was our "plain duty" to grant free trade to Porto Rico and that we are disregarding his recommendation. This is an exceedingly shallow subterfuge. When the President described our "plain duty," he anticipated that it would be the "plain duty" of Porto Rico to assume the corresponding financial burdens and perform the corresponding financial duties. He recommended free trade as a relief to the people of Porto Rico. The bills introduced in both Houses of Congress were in pursuance of this recommendation.

Only after more careful consideration into the conditions of the people of the island, and their interests more carefully examined and more thoroughly known, was it found that to enforce such a policy, instead of being merciful, would be cruel and impossible of enforcement against the people of Porto Rico in their present condition. It was found that internal-revenue taxes could not be collected as prescribed by our laws; that sufficient money could not be raised by local taxation without great oppression and, as stated by General Davis, without "actual confiscation." It was found these people could not perform the duties that were borne by the people of every State of the Union. Even the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] says: "What Porto Rico wants is help, and help now."

Under these circumstances it was found that the President's recommendation did not go far enough toward the relief of this island. It was found that it would practically give no relief at all to the people who need it most. Industries that are entirely prostrated, with nothing to sell, could not be benefited by free trade. There is no tariff upon coffee, and yet it forms 75 per cent of the products of the island and is absolutely prostrated. What relief would it be to the coffee interest to give free trade in sugar and tobacco and then tax the devastated coffee plantations in order to support local government?

What relief would it give to the poor laborers, receiving 30 cents a day for two days in the week, with nothing to sell, to give free trade in sugar and tobacco, and then collect internal-revenue taxes upon the cigars that he smokes and the medicines he administers to his sick child? Something more than the President's recommendation was needed for these people, further relief than the President thought of recommending. We could not feed them with one hand and tax them with the other. And so the gentlemen who had introduced bills in accordance with the President's recommendation found that if enacted into law they were impracticable, harsh, and cruel.

Now, with all due deference to the intelligence of these gentlemen, including the President of the United States, I do not believe that either of them, at the time the President made his recommendation or at the time these bills were introduced, thoroughly comprehended the wide-spreading distress in the island of Porto Rico. This was only fully realized when the effect of the bills which had been introduced began to be contemplated and when General Davis appeared before the committee and gave his testimony. Then these gentlemen were face to face with conditions that they for the first time fully realized and at last fully comprehended. Then it was found that giving free trade to Porto Rico would afford no relief to those who suffered most, were most needy, had nothing to sell, and who are in the greatest distress; that it would help only those who needed no help.

On the other hand, in the helpless condition of such a large portion of the people the enforcement of internal-revenue laws and the collection of property taxes would be extreme cruelty. It was from pity for their distressed condition and in an honest attempt to relieve as far as possible their distress that the bill was devised. It was in their interest that they were relieved from all local taxation and all internal-revenue laws, and this small duty imposed upon the wealth and trade and commerce of Porto Rico, and all the duties collected under it applied to the support of local government. This goes much further for the relief of the distressed people of those islands than the President or the members of his Cabinet had thought of going.

Accused of antagonizing the President? We have discharged practically all the "plain duties" enjoined upon us, while relieving Porto Rico from performing any of the "plain duties" the President must have expected her to perform. After the President in his generosity had pointed out the way of mercy, we have advanced beyond him as the greater need appeared, and he will doubtless gladly advance to our side. It is said this bill is without precedent. Yes; I grant it. The conditions of distress in Porto Rico are without precedent. The generosity of this bill toward the people in distress is without precedent. No government on earth ever treated any portion of its people with greater magnanimity than we are treating the people of Porto Rico. Not from the first acquisition of American territory has this Government at any time passed any legislation so extremely liberal and charitable to the people of any of its acquired territory.

THE TRUSTS OPPOSE THIS BILL.

But we are told the "trusts" and the "protected grafts" have forced the passage of this bill. It is said that the president of a distinguished college has stated if this tariff is adopted it can be said that the "trusts went down to Washington and grappled the Republican party by the throat and made it choke to their advantage." The gentleman who uttered this remark is either the most reckless descendant of Ananias or is in total ignorance of the subject he attempts to discuss. A more reckless and groundless falsehood could not have been uttered. Yet this charge is being repeated by those who ought to know better, who either do know better or who could know better with the slightest exertion to obtain the necessary information.

A peculiar coincidence is the fact that the newspapers of this city, which have for months been singing the daily praises of the millionaire Senator from Montana and denouncing those who attempted to convict, at last practically have convicted him of bribery, are the ones most loud in declaring that the "trusts" are interested in this bill. If the trusts wanted this bill they could adopt the same methods to secure the support of these newspapers that has doubtless been adopted by the Senator from Montana. What trusts want this bill? No attempt has been made to signify them. We are told the sugar interests and tobacco interests. What sugar interests and tobacco interests? The sugar growers and tobacco growers? Have these people organized a trust? If so, when, where, under the laws of what State, in what name? But these interests are opposing this bill because it is not protective and because the tariff is too low. But by reference to "sugar interests" and "tobacco interests" the intention is to induce the people to believe that the great corporations known as the sugar trusts and tobacco trusts are in favor of this bill.

The gentlemen who make these assertions know better. Neither of these trusts produce any of the raw material of either sugar or tobacco. Each buys its material in the crude form, transforms it to the finished product, and sells it in that form. They are interested in the cheap crude product and high price for the finished product. They have been constantly in favor of free raw material, the form in which they buy, and a high tariff upon the form in which they sell. These people buy cheap and sell dear. They are now for free trade in crude sugar and tobacco. There seems to be a singular confusion of ideas in reference to the interest of the producers of beet sugar and the sugar trust. They are natural business rivals.

The beet-sugar factories in almost every instance refine their own product. They both produce and refine sugar. Their ultimate business is to sell refined sugar. The sugar trust produces no raw sugar. Its entire business consists of purchasing the raw sugar, refining, and selling the refined article. As the beet-sugar industry will grow, the output increase, the beet-sugar factories sell more refined sugar, and the business of the sugar trust will decrease and grow less. Beet-sugar producers want a high tariff upon both raw and refined sugar in order to increase the price of both. The sugar trusts want free raw material, cheap raw sugar, but want a high tariff upon the refined product. The attitude of the sugar trust is pretty clearly outlined in the following interview of Mr. Havemeyer, the president of the trust, taken from the Chicago Tribune of a recent date:

> The sugar king, in discussing the whole situation, was plain and outspoken regarding the position of Porto Rico and the Philippines, and declared that there was no reason in the world why sugars should not be admitted free of duty from those countries. "I am much in favor of it," he said, "and I believe the time is not far off when they will be admitted free of duty. Why, both of those countries are part and parcel of the United States, and no matter what action Congress takes, I am confident the Supreme Court will hold that the products of those colonies are entitled to free entry here.
> "There is no more reason why a duty should be placed upon the products of Porto Rico than on stuff coming into New York from Long Island. There is only a wide ditch between the United States and Porto Rico. Well, if Porto Rican sugars are brought in free, it will not be long before some similar policy is adopted with reference to Cuban products."
> It is Cuban sugar the trust wants to be admitted free.

But I wish to ask a question of those who are so loud in clamoring for the defeat of this bill, for fear it might aid the sugar trust. I have called attention to the resolutions passed two years ago retaining the full Dingley tariff upon commerce between Hawaii and the United States.

Under treaties previously existing, the validity of which, of course, the Dingley law recognized, unrefined sugar was imported from Hawaii into the United States absolutely free of duty, while there was a tariff upon refined sugar. These provisions were clearly satisfactory to the sugar trust and plainly in accordance with their interests.

Early in the session of 1898 Mr. Dingley introduced in the House a bill, H. R. 11186, which was passed by unanimous consent, extending the revenue laws of the United States into Hawaii. Under this bill all customs duties between Hawaii and the United States were abolished, enacting absolute free trade. This removed the duties upon refined sugar.

The bill promptly went to the Senate, where it was buried, never saw the light of day, has never yet been passed, and to-day there is still the old duty upon the importation of refined sugar from Hawaii into the United States. Why do not these newspapers, these zealous public servants, who are so anxious to defeat this bill for fear it might benefit the sugar trust, have something to say in reference to the long delay of the bill removing duty from refined sugar in Hawaii? Those patriotic Senators who could not support this bill, where are they? What have they been doing during the past fifteen months? Why have they not passed that bill? Why has not the United States Senator who has had charge of that bill for fifteen months, who could not support this bill, urged the passage of that? Why is not this protection for the sugar trust removed, and why is there no public clamor against its continuance?

Why such a clamor all over the United States for free raw sugar, a cry in which the sugar trust joins, and a deathlike stillness in reference to free importation of refined sugar from Hawaii, a cry which the sugar trust desires and is anxious to still? Why so much clamor where the sugar trust desires clamor and will profit by clamor, and such deathlike, prolonged silence where the sugar trust wants silence and where their interests are subserved by silence?

This great trust desires to purchase the sugar of Porto Rico at the least possible price. It has also purchased substantially all of the product in the island. It bought it at the world's market price. Whether it comes into the United States free or pays full Dingley duties, it will be sold to the people of the United States at exactly the same price. Does anyone suppose that this trust is debauching Congress to induce it to pass a law that will force it to pay taxes? We must not forget that when these trusts wanted a law upon which a Democratic President stamped the words "perfidy" and "dishonor," they went to a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives. We are now told that the statement that the sugar trust has bought the product of Porto Rico is not correct.

It has been repeatedly stated upon the floor of this House and upon the floor of the Senate that the sugar and tobacco trusts have bought substantially and now own the entire product of the island, except a small amount in the hands of a few wealthy planters and merchants. This has not been successfully contradicted or denied. They bought this while, as the law then stood, it required them to pay full Dingley duties when imported into the United States. Whatever reduction of tariff is made will, for the present at least, inure to their benefit and for the benefit of the men who now own the crude material.

We are told, however, on the authority of Mr. Finlay, the British vice-consul at San Juan, who is a very wealthy sugar planter, described as possessing vast estates, that all the sugar and tobacco in the island "belongs to the planters themselves; that there is not much of it anyhow, as all but this year's crop was exported long ago." He further assures us that sugar has been imported into Porto Rico for local use. This gentleman proves too much. If there is no sugar in Porto Rico to be imported into the United States upon which duties could be collected, why these "tears?" Why complain about a tax that is levied upon nobody, reaches no property, imposes no burdens, and even collects no revenue?

Why has that gentleman remained so long in Washington, so bitterly antagonizing this bill? We are assured by one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee that this gentleman has been one of the most persistent lobbyists that has ever approached the portals of the Capitol. We are assured that according to this gentleman's own admission, should an absolute free-trade bill be passed he himself would be enabled to make $100,000. It can work no hardship to him, if he should be allowed to make $85,000, and the remaining $15,000 be contributed in the way of taxation toward supporting the government. But if this crop has been all sold, to whom has it been sold? Who was the purchaser? There can be but one answer to this question. There is but one purchaser in the United States on the Atlantic seaboard of unrefined sugar.

This is the great corporation of which Mr. Havemeyer is the head, and commonly called the sugar trust. But where is this sugar? In what warehouse? In Porto Rico or in bonded warehouses in the city of New York? In either place a large part of it has not yet paid duties. This fact we do know, that the last sugar crop of Porto Rico is not reported as sold in any of the commercial reports in reference to that island. Mr. DOLLIVER, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, who has had a full opportunity to investigate this question, has stated publicly upon the floor of the House, has made a statement that is contained in the RECORD, which points very clearly to the forces that are behind the opposition to this bill. I quote his language:

It is said that the sugar trust and the tobacco trust are behind this bill. That fact is, if we may believe the correspondent of the Associated Press, that two crops of sugar and tobacco are now on hand in Porto Rico awaiting shipment. There are 5,000,000 pounds of tobacco and the sugar crop of two years, not in the hands of the people of Porto Rico, but piled up by speculators in the warehouses of San Juan and other seaport cities of the island, now chargeable, if shipped to the United States, with full duties under the Dingley law, held there in bulk waiting for the profit that will accrue from free trade.

A gang of speculators, mostly Americans, have been hounding members of Congress for weeks. This syndicate of sugar and tobacco brokers are even now jostling one another in the corridors of this Capitol pleading, with sordid hypocrisy, for the people of Porto Rico. This bill does not suit them because it diverts from their pockets a portion of the profits which they had hoped to reap, puts it into the Treasury of the island of Porto Rico, and devotes it to the pressing necessities of that stricken and unfortunate people.

If these facts are not true, if this sugar is not in the warehouses of Porto Rico or in bonded warehouses in the United States, the people who have made such tremendous opposition to this bill would have been able to furnish the specific proof of the unreliability of these statements. The principal people, then, interested in the defeat of this bill and in the free admission of sugar into the United States is this great overshadowing trust, and not the sugar planters of Porto Rico. But if still in the hands of sugar planters, they are wealthy men, well able to pay this tax. General Davis describes them as follows:

The small proprietors are disappearing, for the capitalist so arranges his business in Porto Rico and nearly everywhere else as to force the small proprietors to sell their holdings. The tendency in the sugar business, as in all other requiring large aggregations of capital, is to combine or consolidate. While the population is steadily increasing, the number of small proprietors is steadily decreasing, as shown by statistics.

In producing coffee and tobacco the necessities or advantages of combination are not so urgent; but since sugar can not be produced at a profit without large concentrated investments, it is only through combines and trusts that the best commercial success will be attained. Should the development of the cane industry in Porto Rico approximate that achieved in Mauritius, Barbados, and Hawaii, the cane lands will be ultimately owned or practically controlled by these huge "central" proprietors. There will be a few thousand owners, managers, overseers, clerks, etc., and many hundreds of thousands of peon laborers, whose social and, if we may judge by numerous examples in other countries, industrial conditions will be the same as now, and without hope of improvement.

Nowhere in the world, save in the United States and Hawaii, is sugar now extensively produced on a basis of a wage rate for field and mill hands exceeding, say, 30 cents per diem, and in many tropical countries the rate is not above 20 cents.

Considering the world's enormous acreage suitable to cane cultivation and the teeming population available, it is probable, indeed almost certain, that, whatever be the price at which sugar may be sold, the peon will still remain in a state of serfdom and generation after generation, living in fief to a merchant monopoly, will be able to earn only the wherewithal to indulge in drink, debauchery, and vice.

The planter has been paid; the laborer has been paid. Neither can receive any further benefit nor be called upon to submit to any further burdens. So far as the present crop is concerned, with the exception of the very small number of wealthy men, they have absolutely no interest in this bill. Whether this tariff is maintained or not, the people of the United States will pay the same prices for refined sugar. Whatever tariff is removed will for the present benefit these trusts: whatever is retained will be paid by them. Whether duty is collected upon the next crop will depend entirely upon a legislature to be elected by the people of Porto Rico. Those who want relief from the law can apply to a Porto Rican legislature. But for the present, at least, the tariff collected under this bill will be paid by the sugar and tobacco trusts and a few men of wealth in Porto Rico who now own the entire product of the island.

Conclusive proof of this is furnished in the fact that a short time ago, when $2,000,000 in duties had been collected upon sugar and tobacco imported from the island of Porto Rico into the United States, it is known and admitted that $1,800,000 of that sum was paid by the great corporation known as the sugar trust of New York. Suits have been instituted in the United States courts to recover duties so paid, upon the ground that the exaction of such duties was illegal and unconstitutional. This great corporation is plaintiff in suits to recover $1,800,000.

The greatest friend of this sugar trust, the one who has introduced a measure providing it the greatest relief and conferring upon it the greatest benefit, is the Senator from the State of Arkansas, the chairman of the national Democratic committee. He some time ago introduced in the Senate of the United States an amendment to the bill, placing the duties above collected in the hands of the President, to be used in the government of Porto Rico, as follows:

In the Senate of the United States. March 15, 1900. Ordered to be printed.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. JONES of Arkansas to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Porto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all duties collected to this date upon articles imported into the United States from Porto Rico since the 11th day of April, 1899, the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States, be returned to the persons from whom they were collected, and from and after the passage of this act no duties shall be collected on articles coming from Porto Rico.

The object and purpose and effect of this amendment was plain. Instead of conferring upon the people of Porto Rico this vast sum of money to be used in the government of the island, it would have bestowed it as an actual gift to this great trust. When purchasing the sugar it was bought at the world's price and subject to the full Dingley duties. Even the Senator from Arkansas has been practically forced to admit that the money he sought thus to return would have gone into the pockets of the sugar trust. Attempting to explain this bill a short time ago he states that at the time he introduced it: "I had never looked to see who had paid these revenues nor where this money would go. I am not in the confidence of the sugar trust. They have not come to me to complain of that duty by which they paid $1,800,000. I did not know that such was the fact." The Senator makes no attempt to deny "that such was the fact" or that "they paid $1,800,000." "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

These are the people above all others who want immediate free trade. These are the people and the only people, aided by a very few wealthy men in the island of Porto Rico, who have maintained a lobby at Washington to defeat this bill and secure immediate free trade. The issue involved in the passage of this bill is between the wealthy, the trusts and sugar kings, on the one hand and the distressed people of Porto Rico on the other. One of the issues involved in the bill is whether great corporate wealth, by adopting the methods lately resorted to to defeat this bill, corrupting the sources of information and deluding the public, will be able to avoid just and equitable taxation.

The only people who are interested in the passage of this bill are those who would otherwise pay the taxes to support the government in Porto Rico. This bill removes the burden of taxation from the shoulders of the poor and the needy, those who have suffered destruction of property and business by storm and flood, and places it upon the shoulders of the wealthy, where all taxation should be placed.

But it is claimed that this bill is in the interest of protected "grafts." Is there an intelligent person in the United States who believes for a moment that the imposing of 15 per cent of the Dingley duties upon 50,000 tons of sugar imported from Porto Rico would add the thousandth part of 1 per cent to the 2,000,000 tons annually sold and consumed in the United States? If so, I can not hope to inform him or convince him. What protected graft is clamoring for this bill? Oh, we are told that Mr. Oxnard favored it. Who is he?

I have not seen or heard of a member of either House, outside of the committees before whom he appeared and testified, who has seen or conversed with or knows him. It seems that he is interested in two small beet-sugar factories, the total product of which is 18,000 tons of sugar per annum. He claims, I believe, to represent other sugar producers, but who want full Dingley duties from Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and from Cuba. To this claim the present bill is a defeat.

It is claimed, however, that while this bill is in itself not material it is to be proposed and urged as a precedent to satisfy "protected crafts" who will labor and work to keep out the products of Porto Rico. I think the most serious and by far the most honest opposition to this bill is based on this objection. It is largely founded upon an honest mistake. For this the Ways and Means Committee is not altogether free from blame. The first bill introduced came as a surprise, without adequate explanation. It was entitled "A bill to regulate the trade of Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Upon its face, it was unlimited in duration. It was calculated to, and did, produce the impression upon the minds of many, including myself, that it was intended and designed to enter upon a permanent policy of placing a tariff upon the products of Porto Rico for the purpose of attempting to protect some American interests from this insignificant competition. When the conditions, however, of Porto Rico were explained, when the needs for providing temporary revenue for the island were set forth, when it was urged with some reason that a small tariff would be the easiest and most convenient way to raise such revenue, until normal conditions of the island could be restored, a different question was presented.

Believing that such a measure, if not the best that could be devised, was at least a reasonably good revenue measure, we asked that the bill be so changed that this purpose should be made manifest and apparent on its face; that everything that looked like even adopting a policy of protection against Porto Rico should be stricken from the bill; that it should be limited in operation to the present necessity of the island, and that there should be nothing remaining that could be construed as a precedent for entering upon a policy of protecting ourselves against ourselves and against the small producers of the island of Porto Rico. This demand was readily complied with. The title was changed and a preamble added to the bill, as follows:

An act temporarily to provide for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Whereas the people of Porto Rico have been deprived of markets for a large portion of their products, and have lost property and crops by severe and unusual storms, whereby they are impoverished and are unable to pay internal revenue and direct taxes; and

Whereas temporary revenue is necessary for their schools, their roads, and their internal improvements, and the administration of their government: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, etc.

Then an additional section was added to the bill limiting its operation, which is as follows:

SEC. 5. This act shall be taken and held to be provisional in its purposes and intended to meet a pressing present need for revenue for the island of Porto Rico, and shall not continue in force after the 1st day of March, 1902.

These amendments were fundamental. They changed the entire character and scope of the bill. The charge so often brought against others, as well as myself, who opposed the first bill, but supported this, that we have changed our attitude, is not borne out by the facts.

The bill has been changed to conform to the attitude and position that we occupied then and do now. These amendments proclaim as distinctly as it is possible to proclaim that the settled policy of the Government of the United States toward Porto Rico, so far as a settled policy can be enacted by any law, is one of unrestricted commercial intercourse. That is the declared purpose of this bill, as it is the declared purpose of its supporters. It is set forth as distinctly as it can be set forth that the purpose of retaining this small tariff is one under special and peculiar circumstances and conditions, never likely to arise again, and to answer a present and pressing need.

But it is claimed that the bill is in conflict with the following provisions of the Constitution:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Whether or not the term "United States" in that provision, as well as every section of the Constitution, meant the States forming the Government or the entire territory belonging to the Union has been a disputed question and will continue to be disputed until it is finally settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. Before the solemn decision of that august tribunal we shall all bow with profound respect. I shall not, however, enter upon a question which has been so ably discussed by men of ability, experience, and learning on both sides of this Chamber.

But from the time of Jefferson until now the legislative and executive departments of the Government have uniformly construed the Constitution in their dealings with the Territories of the United States in conformity with the principles upon which this bill is sustained. There has been at no time any government for any of the territory framed by any Congress of the United States that would be constitutional upon the construction of the Constitution contended for by those who oppose this bill. There is no government now in force in any of our Territories valid under their theory of constitutional construction. We are taxing Alaska without representation. We are taxing it in a way that we tax no other portion of the United States.

If this bill is a violation of the provisions of the Constitution, which I have cited, the taxation of Alaska is equally unconstitutional. Every provision suggested in the place of this bill for raising revenue in Porto Rico equally violates the foregoing provisions of the Constitution. If that applies to Porto Rico, we have no right to levy only a portion of the internal-revenue laws of the United States. We must levy them all in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. We would have no right to exempt them from any taxation borne by any of the people of the United States, and provide for the support of the government, either by loan or by direct appropriation from the Treasury. If this provision applies to Porto Rico, she must pay full internal taxation; the customs collected must be put into the Treasury of the United States, and she must support her local government by local taxation. The Republican party was founded upon a construction of the Constitution antagonistic to the attitude of those opposing this bill.

The Republican platform of 1856 declared:

Resolved, That the Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government, and that in the exercise of this power it is both the right and the duty of Congress to prohibit in the Territories those twin relics of barbarism, polygamy and slavery.

The Republican platform of 1860 declared—

That the new dogma that the Constitution of its own force carries slavery into any or all of the Territories of the United States is a dangerous political heresy, at variance with the explicit provisions of that instrument itself, with contemporaneous exposition, and with legislative and judicial precedent; is revolutionary in its tendency, and subversive of the peace and harmony of the country.

This question of unconstitutionality of various measures has lost some of its terrors for me. A very large number of members of both Houses could see no constitutional way to accept Hawaii or annex the Philippine Islands or Porto Rico. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] could see no constitutional method of excluding from membership in this House one who is a convicted polygamist and living in open defiance of both the laws and public sentiment of this country.

Of the two gentlemen who drafted separate minority reports against this bill, one drafted and both supported a provision collecting full duties upon the commerce between the United States and Hawaii. The only Republican member of either the House or Senate now opposing this bill who voted against that resolution imposing full duties upon Hawaii is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. But that gentleman opposed the acquisition of any territory, believing that we have no constitutional power to annex it.

Let me remark that every anti-expansionist, every opponent of the "Greater America," those who have bitterly opposed acquiring or retaining Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, or Hawaii, have been leaders in declaiming against the constitutionality of this bill. Is it not fair to assume that the people who have inaugurated, supported, and defended the policy of acquiring and retaining our new territories can be trusted to honestly endeavor to give them good government? They are largely responsible for this new national policy. Whether it is to be a success or a failure, history will hold them responsible. Every instinct of their nature is to make it a success. The way to make it a success is to confer good government.

It is said that we are going to "establish tyranny" in the newly acquired territories, govern them without the Constitution, and grind them down with "cruel oppression." Singularly enough, some of those making this claim cite us to the success of England in governing her colonies, and urge us to follow her example. Do not these gentlemen know that in the government of her colonies the Parliament of England is restrained by no constitutional limitations of any kind whatever? The citadels of liberty are in the hearts of the people, not in its laws and constitutions.

If tyranny is to be maintained, it must be enacted by and with the consent of the American people; by a people in whom hatred of oppression and love of liberty have been intensified during centuries of struggle and sacrifice; by a people who poured out its best blood to strike the chains from the limbs of 4,000,000 slaves. These people can be trusted to administer just government to the people of our lately acquired territories, whether retrained by constitutional limitations or not. But no one questions that the Constitution adequately protects these people in the enjoyment of personal, civil, and religious liberty and the protection of life, person, and property.

It is said that public sentiment is against this bill. I admit it; but this is less true every day. No bill has been before Congress upon which the public possesses so little correct information.

No man has a higher regard for public opinion than I. None is more ready to yield it implicit obedience. The approval of our fellow-men, the respect of our neighbors and our friends, the indorsement and approval of the people whom we represent, constitute all the rewards of public life worth striving for. I would rather have the respect, friendship, and approval of the people with whom I live and whom I have the honor to represent than the wealth of a Rothschild.

The public opinion that has been aroused is not against the bill as finally passed by the House; least of all against the one as it passed the Senate. It is against the bill as originally introduced by the Ways and Means Committee into the House. When the present bill is understood, as it will be, it will, in my judgment, meet the approval of the people of the United States. Newspapers do not always, though in the main, voice the public sentiment. Hysteria does not always foreshadow mature public opinion. We have previously had to contend with hysterical outbursts during the present Administration.

When the President announced his declaration of war against Spain upon grounds well founded in international law and public justice, upon the ground that the Government of Spain in Cuba for a long series of years had been a menace and a constant danger to the peace, property, wealth, and lives of the American people, there was an outburst throughout the entire land of hysteria, denouncing the declaration as weak, nerveless, alleging that it should have been based upon the destruction of the Maine and founded upon revenge. This notwithstanding the fact that Spain disclaimed responsibility for that terrible disaster, offered to submit the question to the decision of any impartial tribunal, and abide by the full consequences.

It is now recognized by every sensible person in the United States that had the President yielded to this demand he would have rendered his country ridiculous in the eyes of the civilized nations of the earth, now and through all history. Hysteria did not prove in that instance to be mature public sentiment, though sustained largely by the class of newspapers who antagonize this bill. When a declaration of war was passed by the House and Senate, this same hysterical, emotional sentiment demanded that we must recognize the independence of the so-called Cuban republic, and go into the war with Spain as an ally and subject to the control of Gomez, and submit to his will and remain only during his pleasure. This hysteria entered the United States Senate and unbalanced the judgment of some of its oldest and ablest members.

It required firm and intelligent leadership in this House to restrain the emotions of its own members and resist its wild demand. The country now recognizes that the House, in resisting this apparent public sentiment, rendered the country a valuable service, and its conduct is approved by maturer public sentiment. History will repeat itself. Much of the criticism of this bill has been hysterical rather than reasonable. When hysteria subsides and this bill is examined by the American people, during their moments of sober judgment, they will approve its provisions. Does this statement that hysteria is dominant in demanding some of this legislation demand proof? It is at hand. This bill includes a provision for a local government for the people of Porto Rico, to which I reluctantly consent. Its passage has been procured by hysterical demands, in Porto Rico and in the United States, by a large portion of the press of the United States and by an apparent public sentiment.

Does any intelligent person claim that the members of this House know enough about the people of Porto Rico, or they about us, that we can form a government for them that they will understand, adapted to their conditions, and that will answer their needs? These people are alien to our race and language; they are foreign to and ignorant of our institutions; they are unpracticed in the art of self-government; they are uninformed, unlearned, and ignorant. Let me call attention to a description of them from a report of General Davis:

On the 25th day of July, 1899, an election was held in Adjuntas for municipal officers, and the registration was made in conformity to General Orders, No. 112.

The order imposed the following qualifications for electors: Men over 21 years old, able to read and write, or who were taxpayers of record, who had been actual residents of the island for at least two years and of the municipality for six months preceding the date of the election. The number who proved these qualifications before the board of registration was 906, out of a population, according to the census of 1897, of 18,506; that is, less than 5 per cent could vote under the conditions stated.

There was much public interest in this election, and it is believed that about all who were eligible were registered. This incident indicated that in the whole island there may be approximately 45,000 who could vote under the conditions of the order above referred to.

The class who can not fulfill these conditions, say 75 per cent of the males over 21 years of age, are usually in a state of abject poverty and ignorance, and are assumed to include one-fifth of the inhabitants.

They are of the class usually called peons. This word in Spanish America, under old laws, defined a person who owed service to his creditor until the debt was paid. While those laws are obsolete, the condition of these poor people remains much as before. So great is their poverty that they are always in debt to the proprietors or merchants. They live in huts made of sticks and poles covered with thatches of palm leaves. A family of a dozen may be huddled together in one room, often with only a dirt floor. They have little food worthy of the name and only the most scanty clothing, while children of less than 7 or 8 years of age are often entirely naked. A few may own a machete or a hoe, but more have no worldly possessions whatever. Their food is fruit, and if they are wage-earners, a little rice and codfish in addition.

They are without ambition and see no incentive to labor beyond the least that will provide the barest sustenance.

All over the island they can be seen to-day sitting beside their ruined huts, thinking naught of to-morrow, making no effort to repair and restore their cabins nor to replant for future food.

The remarks of Mr. James Anthony Froude, in his work on the English in the West Indies, apply with full force to these people:

"Morals in the technical sense they have none, but they can not be said to sin because they have no knowledge of law, and therefore they can commit no breach of the law. They are naked and not ashamed.

"There is evil, but there is not the demoralizing effect of evil. They sin, but they sin only as animals, without shame, because there is no sense of doing wrong. They eat the forbidden fruit, but it brings with it no knowledge of the difference between good and evil. * * * They are innocently happy in the unconsciousness of the obligations of morality. They eat, drink, sleep, and smoke, and do the least in the way of work they can. They have no ideas of duty, and therefore are not made uneasy by neglecting it."

Between the negro and the peon there is no visible difference. It is hard to believe that the pale, sallow, and often emaciated beings are the descendants of the conquistadores who carried the flag of Spain to nearly all of South America and to one-third of North America.

One family of industrious people, such as are found all over the United States, contributes more to the general prosperity and wealth of the country then ten families of these peons.

Would it not have been wiser to take time to learn something of their conditions, their needs, and their capacities? Would it not have been better to give them some opportunity to study our institutions and the form of government that we are about to give them? But a hysterical press has demanded that this bill must be passed now, by this Congress, at once, and so Congress is yielding to this demand. A bill for this government is passing this House without consideration of its principles, without full investigation by any of its committees, and the results of which no man can tell.

Let me consider this in connection with another portion of American domain. In Alaska are thousands of our own countrymen; they are of our own race, trained to self-government; no more intelligent men live upon any portion of the civilized earth. They are the soul of enterprise, full of energy; a large portion of them are men who graduated from the leading colleges and universities of this country. They are of the best we have. They are being governed now, as ever since we acquired that portion of our domain, without their consent. They are taxed without representation. They are demanding the right to have some share in their own government.

I join them in this demand. It is a just and equitable one and should be granted. For years their prayers have been unheeded. I have tried in vain to enlist Congress and a public sentiment in their behalf. The bill now pending for their relief has been sidetracked for this bill. The measure intended to grant them some relief now denies them representation upon the floors of Congress. These are our own people; people fighting for self-government; people capable of self-government; and yet the press, that in its hysterical cries is forcing us to grant self-government to a race and a people unfitted for it, ignorant of our language, our laws and institutions, has no word of sympathy for the people of Alaska, our own people, our own race and blood, whose rights and privileges have been for years denied. We are refusing them the very privileges that we are conferring upon an alien race in the island of Porto Rico.

Is this hysteria or sober sense? For two years longer than this bill will be in force the people of Hawaii, who came to us of their own volition long before we acquired Porto Rico, have been subject to full Dingley duties upon commerce between themselves and us. These burdens have been retained, in my judgment, without justification or excuse. We have attempted to urge upon the Senate to make other provisions, but in vain. The House long ago passed a bill removing these restrictions, but they have not yet been removed. Yet nowhere in the United States, not even on the Pacific coast, where our people are in close sympathy and trade relations with the people of Hawaii, has there been any cry for their relief or anyone to urge that the Senate should be expeditious in removing these duties. There has been no time for words of sympathy or justice to them. These newspapers could not spare for them the space in their columns, so taken were they with their comments upon this Porto Rican bill.

The issue presented by this bill is whether during a brief period, in order to raise the revenue needed for local government in Porto Rico, we are to tax the wealth of Porto Rico or its poverty; whether we are to remove the burdens of taxation from those who can best bear them and place them upon those whose property has been destroyed, whose industries have been ruined, and by storm and flood deprived of the means to purchase their daily bread; whether we are to attempt to collect the taxes to support the government of Porto Rico from those who are prosperous or from those who are dependent upon the Federal Government and its charity for the necessaries of life; whether we are to furnish them with food with one hand and remove it by the taxgatherer before their hunger is satisfied; whether we are to collect taxes from the half-starved mother before she can administer medicines to her sick, rather than from the full store of the occupants of the palaces of Porto Rico and New York.

There are no powerful interests supporting this bill. It benefits no people of wealth or influence. Every assertion to the contrary has been disproved over and over again. The Oxnards and Myricks do not want it, because every vestige of protection against Porto Rico has been removed. The only people who are to be benefited are the great masses of the people of the islands, whose present means of support have been destroyed, who are too helpless to utter a word in its favor, too poor to send a lobby for its support, and in most instances too ignorant to understand the nature of the contest being waged in their interest and for their relief. On the contrary, this bill is opposed by great wealth and political influence.

The sugar trust, the tobacco trust, the sugar kings of Porto Rico, who have amassed great wealth while living in Porto Rico and retaining foreign citizenship, have, by their agents, been in constant attendance upon this Congress, dogging the footsteps of its members, harassing the members of the committee, alternately cajoling and threatening them, have spared neither pains nor money to accomplish the defeat of this bill. Every public man, every newspaper, great and small, who opposed the acquisition of Hawaii, the acquisition of the Philippines and Porto Rico, opposes this bill.

Every newspaper in this city of whatever politics, whose columns have been daily filled with laudation of the millionaire Senator from Montana, and denunciations of those who have attempted to convict, and have practically succeeded in convicting him of bribery, oppose this bill; every newspaper, every public man who defended and supported the tariff policy that bankrupted this nation four years ago, and opposed the one adopted under which the land has become flourishing with prosperity, mistakenly supposing that their peculiar tenets were in some way endangered by this bill, have opposed its passage. There are many Republican Senators and Republican members of the House, whose temporary selfish interests would have been subserved by opposing it. Their names would have received great plaudits at home by the men who did not send them here.

The opposition to their reelection might have been less intense. In the scathing resolutions against this bill and its supporters that have been passed and will be passed by Democratic and Populist and fusion conventions their names would have been omitted. In every State of the Union they would have been praised as heroic and courageous statesmen by the enemies of the Republican party and its political principles. In every newspaper in the United States supporting Bryan and opposing annexation they would have been heralded as coming statesmen and their names inscribed beneath that of Bryan, Atkinson, MASON, and the latest acquisition to the Democratic party, the erratic WELLINGTON, of Maryland. They might even have enjoyed the exquisite pleasure of seeing their speeches and utterances against this bill circulated as campaign documents, in the interest of Bryan and the Chicago platform, by the Democratic national committee.

Under all these circumstances the fact that 96 per cent of the Republicans of this House have resisted all these temptations, withstood these promises of fame, the blandishments of wealth, and the threats of power, and have legislated in mercy, under the guidance of their conscience, according to their best judgment, for the welfare and protection of poverty and distress, is an exhibition of courageous statesmanship rarely excelled.

Trade of Porto Rico.

OF

HON. JACOB RUPPERT, JR.,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUPPERT said:

Mr. SPEAKER: We have been privileged with many arguments pro and con concerning the right of Congress to impose legislation upon Porto Rico, which Congress could not, under the Constitution, impose upon any other Territory of the United States except those Territories which came to us through the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain. The lawyers of this body have argued both sides of this question with great ability, and no converts seem to have been made upon either side.

The theory that the Constitution controls wherever the United States, the Government of which was created by the Constitution, has jurisdiction has been most ably presented. Upon the other hand, the Republican lawyers have urged that the Constitution is limited in its operation, and the only really omnipotent power is the Congress which the Constitution created. Whether or not the created is greater than the creator, I will leave to the lawyers to argue.

I will leave for the lawyers the question as to whether the United States Constitution and the United States flag cooperate together and dwell in peace or whether at a certain point the flag and the Constitution become divorced, and in such cases whether it is an absolute divorce or only a limited separation. I leave this question for the lawyers of this body. I wish to speak as a business man and in behalf of the business men whom I represent. I do not care to discuss whether Judge Magoon was right when he said the Constitution did apply or when he said that it did not apply. I do not care to consider the merits of the opposite decisions of the learned chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

In New York the Secretary of War has been regarded as possessing some legal ability, and he decided that the Constitution did apply. The President of the United States has decided this question both ways. I think, therefore, that the most ardent supporter of this bill will at least admit that the question, from a purely legal standpoint, is a doubtful one. I do not think that any lawyer upon the Republican side will contend that his position is free from difficulties. I therefore pass by the consideration of the legal matters involved and present the case from a purely business standpoint.

The property we possess in Porto Rico, whatever the nature of that property may be, belongs to the people of the United States. It does not belong to any one man or to any set of men. The expenses incurred in the war which caused the annexation, or rather the transfer of the sovereignty, of Porto Rico to that of the United States were paid by taxes to which all of the people of the United States contributed in proportion. It is represented by all of the reports that we have had concerning the resources of Porto Rico that there are certain features of that island which will make it valuable property to the people of this country.

The benefits to be derived should be equally shared by the people of the United States. Those benefits bring with them corresponding obligations and duties. The President of the United States recognized the force of this observation when he stated that it was our plain duty to give free trade to the island of Porto Rico. At the time he wrote that message it was not a question of policy, but of conscience, with him. When, later, the voice of conscience became stilled, his policy changed. The reasons for that change have not been made public.

The question, then, to consider is a twofold one: How can we best distribute the benefits of our acquisition among the people of the United States, and how can we best discharge our duties toward the people of Porto Rico? In order to determine what is best for the people of the United States, it is necessary to consider briefly the nature of the benefits which are to be derived from trade with Porto Rico. Porto Rico is an agricultural country. Its products do not compete to any considerable extent with the products of the United States. Its sugar cane does compete with the cane of Louisiana.

But this competition is a very limited one. If every acre of land in the United States adapted to the raising of sugar cane was cultivated, and every pound of cane raised that nature will produce in this country, the supply would still fall far short of the domestic demand. Add the fields of Porto Rico to those of Louisiana and there would still be a deficiency in the home supply, although that deficiency would be materially decreased. Sugar is an article of universal consumption. Every man, woman, and child in the United States is directly interested and beneficially interested as a consumer in the increase of the domestic sugar crop.

As the supply would not equal the demand, the sugar crop of Porto Rico would not seriously conflict, if it would conflict at all, with the interests of the sugar grower in Louisiana. The other great product of Porto Rico is tobacco. Tobacco is raised in the United States. The crop of tobacco has steadily decreased in this country for several years past. The reason for this is that a large acreage of tobacco land is worn out and no longer produces in paying quantities.

It is a notorious fact among those people who are familiar with the tobacco trade that the acreage of bright leaf tobacco can not be increased in the United States. Nearly all of the Porto Rico tobacco is of a superior quality and does not compete at all with that produced in this country. We still import tobacco and cigars in large quantities. Every consumer of tobacco is directly interested in the increase of the home product.

The next great staple of Porto Rico is coffee. We have expended a very large sum of money in the aggregate trying to introduce the coffee plant into the United States. While there have been some partial successes, there has never been a paying crop of coffee raised in this country. Every consumer of coffee is directly interested in an American crop of that berry.

The people of Porto Rico manufacture practically nothing. They raise nothing which enters into competition with American products. They are customers for our manufactured goods, for our wheat, our corn, and our flour. They are customers for our coal and our iron. They are customers for what we produce and they are raisers of what we do not produce. They are an agricultural people, and yet they do not compete with us in any of our lines of agriculture.

The Republicans recognized that Porto Rico was an ideal country with which to have free trade; and James G. Blaine, when Secretary of State, chose Porto Rico as one of the first countries with which it was desirable to establish reciprocal free trade. And it is a fact known to every member of this House that during the three years of free-trade relations between the United States and Porto Rico sugar, coffee, and tobacco were purchased by the United States in large quantities, and in return the people of Porto Rico patronized our lines of agriculture and manufacture as they never did before and never have done since.

The Republicans were unanimous that the three years of free trade between the United States and Porto Rico were most prosperous years for both the United States and Porto Rico. So convinced are the Republicans that free trade with the West Indies would be advantageous to the United States that the very party which denies free trade to Porto Rico is endeavoring to establish it with other West Indian islands. I do not understand upon what sound business principle the idea can rest that it is to the best interests of this country to establish the blessings of reciprocal free trade with the islands of the West Indies owned by foreign nations and only deny them to the island which is our own.

The first reciprocity treaty which the United States ever consummated was under President Jackson, and established free trade with the British West Indies. This treaty was renewed by Secretary Blaine, and was heralded by him and the Republican party as a stroke of diplomatic triumph. A treaty with France is now being considered by the upper branch of Congress which establishes free trade with the French West Indies.

Every consumer of tobacco, sugar, or coffee is directly interested and would be benefited by free trade with Porto Rico. Every manufacturer, except three, and every workingman in every manufactory except those controlled by these three, and every farmer who raises live stock, wool, corn, or wheat, is directly to be benefited by free trade with Porto Rico. Three manufacturers would be injured by free trade with Porto Rico: The tobacco trust, the sugar trust, and the coffee trust. Establish free trade with Porto Rico and there will be competition in the manufacture of tobacco, refining of sugar, and the roasting of coffee.

Leave a tariff of 15 per cent upon these raw materials and these three manufacturers need fear no competition. The reason for this is plain. Under the rebate clause of the Dingley law goods imported for manufacture where the product is exported are entitled to a drawback of 99 per cent of the tariff paid. As these trusts control the export trade in these articles they would pay but 1 per cent of the 15 per cent, while any competitor would have to pay the whole duty. Any competitor would pay just one hundred times as much tariff as the sugar trust, the tobacco trust, or the coffee trust.

Mr. Speaker, who owns the island of Porto Rico? Do the people of the United States own the island, or do these three trusts own the island? If the treaty with Spain was between these trusts and Spain this bill is right. They should reap the benefits of it. If the treaty with Spain was made by the United States and not by the trusts, this bill is wrong. Now, let us consider briefly, and very briefly, as it is admitted in all of the public documents issued and all of the expressions from Republican leaders, what obligations rest upon the people of the United States under their relations with the people of Porto Rico.

Porto Rico had local self-government; and the inhabitants of Porto Rico were citizens of Spain, and entitled to the protection of the Government of Spain. Spain transferred her sovereignty to the United States. With that transfer of sovereignty passed the right of local self-government. If the citizens of Porto Rico did not become citizens of the United States, entitled to all of the constitutional privileges of such citizens, then without their consent they became deprived of all citizenship and were without a country. They were made outcasts from all nations without any fault of their own.

They welcomed the Government of the United States, believing that they had become a part of that Government. At the expiration of eighteen months they find that they have no citizenship; the United States courts have refused to take cognizance of appeals, and appeals have been perfected to the supreme court of Spain, which will probably refuse to take jurisdiction of them. It has been but a few days since men were goaded to death for criminal offenses. The act shocked the people of the United States, and they were even more shocked when they learned that the successful culmination of the war for humanity did not, in the opinion of the Executive of the United States, give him any power to be humane.

Nearly two years after Spain had transferred her sovereignty Spain was still the sovereign. This Spanish mode of execution could not be interfered with, and why? Because if the President of the United States had taken jurisdiction where the treaty gave him jurisdiction, it would have been an exercise of Executive authority under the Constitution, which would bring Porto Rico under the Constitution, and would deprive the trusts of the advantage which had been promised them.

Mr. Speaker, the American people thought, when they fought this war, that they were fighting it as a protest against Spanish atrocities on the Western Hemisphere. The American people, Mr. Speaker, have labored under the impression that they were victorious and that with the signing of the treaty of peace the atrocities ceased, and that the islands on the Caribbean were brought under the humane influences of the United States Government. That impression was shared by every Republican member of this House and by the President of these United States with his Cabinet until a few days ago.

Then the trusts notified the Republican party that the United States Government did not have jurisdiction over Porto Rico, but was only a conduit through which the jurisdiction over Porto Rico was to pass on its way from the Kingdom of Spain to the despotism of the trusts. The President learned, undoubtedly to his sorrow, and it must have been to his surprise, that he did not have the power to commute a Spanish sentence in Porto Rico or change a Spanish mode of punishment.

If this garroting was to have taken place before the trusts issued their mandate to the Republican party, the President of the United States, with his well-known humanity, would have interfered. But having adopted the position that Porto Rico was not a part of the United States, and the Presidential office being a constitutional one and its power only extending to the territory under the Constitution, he could not interfere. Our duty was to extend the blessings of liberty and freedom over the oppressed people of the island of Porto Rico. We would have performed that duty and never considered whether or not it was placed upon us by the Constitution if the trusts had not prevented.

With our plain duty in one direction and the fact, if it is a fact, that we are not compelled by the Constitution to perform our plain duty, and are certainly not compelled by that instrument to abstain from its performance in the other direction, the Congress of the United States refuses to do our plain duty because it holds that we are not compelled to do it. No Republican member of this body has pointed to a single provision of the Constitution which denies to us the right to do "our plain duty," and the only argument is that the Constitution leaves us as free moral agents to do right or not as we elect. True to its history, where it is free to do right or wrong, the Republican party considers this condition as a solemn mandate to do wrong.

The doctrine of humanity set forth in the declaration of war with Spain and carried out in our "benevolent assimilation" of the people of the Philippines, who are being benevolently assimilated into angels as rapidly as the uncertain weather of that archipelago will allow, we placed this robbery of the Porto Ricans upon the ground of "relief." They were rendered destitute by a hurricane, and their condition must be remedied. Their houses were blown away, and in order to alleviate their distress we must take the balance of their possessions by taxation.

Had they been prosperous, they would not have had to be taxed; but as they were shaken by the winds of adversity they must pay for an expensive and elaborate government. The principle of the bill rests upon a verse of the Scripture taken apart from its connection: "Unto him who hath shall be given, and unto him who hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." This is the Republican doctrine of humanity.

This bill states that it is a bill for the purpose of providing revenues to conduct the government of the island of Porto Rico. There was collected in the ports of Porto Rico the sum of $2,000,000 in eighteen months. One-sixth of this only was collected upon the trade between the United States and Porto Rico; that sixth was $20,000 a month.

This bill provides for only one-fifteenth of that. Under this bill the difference between free trade with Porto Rico and the provisions of the bill is only $3,000 a month. It is estimated that the cost of the government will be $200,000 a month. If this bill were really for the purpose of raising revenue, it would provide much more revenue. It is for the purpose, and the purpose only, of preventing competition against the sugar, tobacco, and coffee trusts.

It is necessary to raise enough revenue for the economical administration of public affairs in Porto Rico. The Republicans have already provided that revenue for a year by donating $2,000,000 for that purpose out of the Treasury of the United States. The bill also provides for a local system of taxation based upon any principle that the local legislature may outline. In fact, there is no provision in the bill limiting the amount of taxes which may be raised in this way. The States and Territories of the United States have all deemed it necessary to make a constitutional limitation upon the power of taxation, but the authority vested in the Porto Rico legislature under this measure is absolutely without limit.

There is a provision also that in case the taxes have not yet been collected, the Porto Rican officials can bond the island up to 7 per cent of the assessed valuation of the property of the island; and as they have absolute power to fix the assessments and there is no appeal from their decision in this respect, they can assess the property for seven times its value if they so desire and bond it for the full value of the property of the island.

There is no legislature in the United States given such absolute power to raise money. It is therefore seen that the Republicans knew very well how to raise funds for the administration of the government of Porto Rico without imposing any tariff upon the trade between Porto Rico and the United States. The Territories of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Arizona did not have at the time of their organization a single dollar in revenue derived from customs.

There was no trouble whatever in making them self-supporting from the start by the usual system of taxation. Porto Rico has ports with a large foreign trade with other countries than the United States. Five-sixths of its customs revenue are derived from imports from other countries than the United States. It therefore had, independently of the question of free trade between Porto Rico and the United States, a very large source of revenue that was not possessed by any other Territory of the United States at the time of its organization.

Mr. Speaker, the business men of this country have spoken. The press of this country has spoken. The business men have not declared in favor of a tariff upon the trade between the United States and Porto Rico. The newspapers of the country have not so declared. The voice of the people has been heard, and that voice has demanded free trade between the United States and Porto Rico. It is claimed that the people of the United States and the press of the United States do not understand this question.

They understand this question precisely as the President of the United States, his Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, and the Republican members of this House understood it up to a few days ago. The opinion was then unanimous. It was not a partisan question; it was not a political question. Everybody knew that duty and policy both demanded that we should have free trade between the United States and Porto Rico. Suddenly, and without warning, a majority of the Republicans in Congress discovered that the entire world was wrong and that they alone were right. They had all been wrong, but suddenly some great light had broken in upon them.

I have listened in vain for any explanation or any attempted explanation of this sudden conversion. The people have not changed their minds, the newspapers have not changed their views, no new arguments are made, no new facts are discovered, but suddenly and without warning the Republican members of Congress act in direct opposition to the wishes of their constituents. If there had been any reasonable explanation, any legitimate inducement, any new fact or new conditions, it is certain that they would have been brought out during this debate.

But they have not been so brought out, and the business men of this country will demand of Congress some reasons for acting in direct opposition to the interests of the business community, and that reason must be much more clearly stated and definitely proved than it has been yet. The only argument which seems to have been brought to bear is that of the "party lash," and the hand that wields the whip is invisible. The whip can be seen plainly enough, but the business men want to know who has hold of the handle and why the Republican members of this House have been scourged into abandoning their principles and voting against the declared wishes of the President and his Cabinet.

Election of Senators by the People.

OF

HON. JOHN A. McDOWELL,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 12, 1900.

The House having under consideration House joint resolution No. 28, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States—

Mr. McDOWELL said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The American people have a high regard for the Constitution of their country. They have abiding respect for and great confidence in the wisdom of the fathers who framed the greatest political instrument of all ages. How natural that an instrument which has served so well for more than a century the purposes of the best Republic of all ages should be regarded as sacred by the people. The almost universal veneration in which the Constitution is held by the people insures to a very great extent the perpetuity of the Republic.

The people do not suggest any change in the Constitution unless it be in the interest of better and purer government. The framers of the Constitution foresaw the probable necessity for amendments and made provision in the Constitution itself for amendments desired. Within ten years after the ratification of the Constitution eleven amendments were made to it.

In the Presidential election of 1800 the urgent necessity was shown for a change in the mode of electing President and Vice-President. In 1804 the twelfth amendment was ratified. From 1804 to 1865 it is well to note that not a single amendment to the Constitution was adopted. The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments were the outcome of the civil war.

The proposition now under consideration is not a new one. The proposition to elect Senators by direct vote of the people was urged at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. The debates on the Federal Constitution in the Constitutional Convention do not show that any serious or valid objections were made against the right or the wisdom of the people to elect United States Senators. Mr. Madison and Mr. Mason, of Virginia, and Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, all prominent men of the convention, advocated the election of Senators by a direct vote. They desired that the Republic should be created upon a solid and durable foundation. Mr. Madison expressed his idea in these words:

> The great fabric to be raised would be more stable and durable if it should rest on the solid foundation of the people themselves than if it should stand merely on the pillars of the legislatures.

Mr. Wilson said:

> If we are to establish a national government, that government ought to flow from the people at large. If one branch of it should be chosen by the legislatures and the other by the people, the two branches will rest on different grounds and dissension will naturally arise between them. I wish the Senators to be elected by the people, as well as the other branch.

The people of this country have for years been asking Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution to allow them to elect Senators by a direct vote. The legislatures of the great States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, California, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Nebraska, and others, thirty-four in all, have expressed the sentiments of the people of these States by memorials and resolutions, praying Congress to pass a joint resolution providing for the amendment desired. This House has at different times passed a measure similar to the one proposed by the minority report. Such a measure passed this House in the Fifty-second Congress. Joint resolution No. 20, on the same subject, passed the Fifty-third Congress by a vote of 141 yeas and 50 nays. A like measure passed the Fifty-fifth Congress by a vote of 185 yeas and 11 nays. Notwithstanding that the House, on these different occasions, has acted in accord with the will of the people, the Senate has ignored the popular sentiment of the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, I believe that very recent experiences in the election of United States Senators—Senatorial deadlocks, scandals, and charges of bribery—should convince the members in the other branch of the American Congress that something should be done at once to avoid the repetition of these disgraceful experiences. At the beginning of this session of Congress there were four vacancies in the Senate, caused by deadlocks in the State legislatures. Investigations were instituted as to the right of two Senators-elect to hold their seats. These investigations were brought about by charges of irregularities and bribery.

Much valuable time of the legislatures is unprofitably used in fruitless attempts to elect Senators. It demoralizes the legislature, corrupts legislators, prevents necessary legislation, causes the people to have a less regard for our political systems and for public officials. What stronger evidence do we need for the necessity of a change in the mode of electing Senators than we have had in the last fifteen months in the various deadlocks and in the election of a Senator in Montana? One State after another is being disgraced in consequence of the prevailing method of electing Senators. Even my own State, the great State of Ohio, has felt the blighting influences of this pernicious method. I hesitate here to say how the good people of that State have been mortified over certain Senatorial elections.

Under the present mode time is not only wasted in the State legislatures, but time is wasted in the United States Senate in the investigations of elections and the validity of the appointments of Senators. In this session of Congress matters of general legislation have been set aside and postponed in the Senate in consequence of these investigations referred to. What the Senate may do is problematical. What the people want it to do is certain.

Give the people the privilege to elect Senators by a direct vote and the evils incident to the present method will be very largely, if not entirely, remedied. Legislatures will be free to enact laws for the people. State capitals will not continue to be the place where Senatorial seats are sold. [Applause.]

Let the people elect the Senators, and there will be decidedly fewer investigations in the Senate. More time can be had for careful legislation. Fewer men will find seats in the Senate whose principal qualification under the present method is a long purse. The great corporate powers will not be able to place their own trusted attorneys and agents in the United States Senate to legislate for their special interests. Think of the number of attorneys for the great railroad companies and other gigantic combinations of wealth that have lately found their way into the United States Senate. Is it any wonder that the people are demanding the right to elect Senators by popular vote?

By the present method of electing corrupting influences are seen at work in the county primary elections. Through influences of political rings and machines persons are selected as candidates for the legislature on condition that they pledge themselves, if elected, to support a certain man for Senator. This is the chief purpose and motive of their candidacy. They frequently do not make known their intentions in this direction. They feel no burden of responsibility to represent their people in the matter. How can such persons be true representatives of the people on any matters? Submit the election of Senators to the people, and political bosses and rings will receive a severe blow. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, several of the Southern States have made commendable improvement on the mode of electing Senators. Their candidates for Senators go before the people at their primary elections. The candidate receiving a plurality of votes is the choice of his party. This is practically choosing Senators by a direct vote, although the legislatures ratify the choice of the people, or make the election in accordance with the requirements of the prevailing method. In these States there is a universal demand for the right of the people to elect. The method they now pursue does not result in deadlocks or produce great scandals.

Let Senators be elected by popular vote and there will always be a choice. We shall not have great States with half representation in the Senate, as we have to-day. State legislatures will not be so violently disturbed by bitter political contests. The Senate itself will be elevated in the estimation of the people; the Senators being chosen by the people, will have their confidence in a larger degree than they now have.

I shall support the proposition that comes from the minority of the committee. We want a uniformity in the method of electing Senators. The proposition recommended by the majority of the committee allows the people to elect whether they will choose Senators by the present method—through the legislatures—or by direct vote of the people. The proposition of the minority of the committee is to elect by direct vote. I believe that the States that have expressed a desire for a change of the method of electing Senators are all in favor of electing by a direct vote of the people.

I count it a happy privilege to cast my vote for the measure recommended by the minority of the committee. For one, I am willing to trust the people. It can not be maintained that legislatures select better men than would be elected by the people. He who is afraid to trust the people should not be trusted by them. Heretofore the Senate has stood in the way of this legislation. It may for a time refuse to adopt the pending joint resolution, but I believe it will be forced to yield to the pressure of public opinion in the end. [Applause.]

Rural Free Delivery.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN A. McDOWELL,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 24, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. McDOWELL said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I am opposed to the amendment striking out the word "experimental." I believe the rural free-delivery service is still in the experimental stage, and the Department is proceeding carefully and judiciously with the idea of giving it a fair trial. Furthermore, if this service is not to be regarded as experimental, the employees in the service would lawfully come under civil-service rules, and I doubt whether this House, after careful consideration, is ready to place rural free delivery under civil service.

In replying to some remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], it is true that Ohio had, on December 1, 1899, 83 routes established. That is not too much for the great State of Ohio. We never get any more than we want, and we are always going to get all that we can. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not believe it is true that it has taken begging, as some gentlemen have said, to get these routes established. I have had nine routes established in my district, more than have been established in the State of Georgia, according to the statement of the gentleman [Mr. MADDOX]. I did not have to beg for them. We presented good petitions, containing more than 100 families, oftentimes supplying five or six hundred persons. Some of these routes did away with fourth-class post-offices and eliminated carriers, and the showing that is now made on these routes is very favorable. It demonstrates that the expense is very little, if any, more than the delivery of the mail to some communities by the star-route service.

Referring again to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] said, I do not think members need to feel that they are compelled to beg to secure this service. They should advise their constituents interested in trying to get rural free delivery to get up good petitions in thickly settled communities. Then personal attention to the matter on the part of the Congressman will secure the service. These matters are not secured without the asking.

Mr. MADDOX. If my friend from Ohio will allow me to interfere, I never charged that there was any trouble in getting one established in the State of Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDOWELL. It will be a cold day when Ohio fails to get what she so richly deserves. However, I do not think it would be difficult to get rural free delivery in Georgia. I believe the disposition of the Department is to be fair. But there is a good deal in the kind of petition that is presented and in the personal attention given to the matter by the Congressman.

Another thing, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], perhaps a great many of these petitions that members speak of have been filed within the last few months. It is true that applications made in Ohio many months ago have been investigated only within the last few weeks. I do not know of an application that has been filed since last summer that has yet been investigated. It takes time, and there is a very small force of special agents at work in investigating routes.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, that ought to be attended to.

Mr. McDOWELL. That is true, and perhaps with a larger appropriation we shall have a larger force of special agents. We know the appropriation made last year was exhausted when we met here in December, and the Department was not able to go on investigating routes where applications had been made. There are on file hundreds of applications which the special agents have not been able to get around to investigate. I have reasons to believe that the postal officials desire to be fair in the management of establishing this service. I had a letter not long ago in reply to an application in my own district, a letter from the special agent, and he said that there were other districts in the State that did not have but one or two routes established, and it was necessary for him to go there and investigate proposed routes and establish the service, where found feasible, before he could go to districts that already had quite a number of routes in operation. I take it that no one can reasonably object to this method of procedure.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we are to have an appropriation for this service this year more than five times as large as that of last year. This will enable the Department to have in operation probably about five thousand free-delivery routes. It will not be found practical or desirable for the present to have the same number of routes established in each State, the same number in each Congressional district, or the same number in each county. The interest of the people in the service (whether they desire it or do not desire it), the density or sparseness of population, and the condition of the public roads are determining factors in the extension of this service. In public-spirited communities the service, no doubt, will rapidly find its way.

Rural free delivery and good roads are inseparably connected. We must either have good roads as a condition for rural mail service or the coming and continuance of rural free delivery will bring good roads. It is difficult to say which of these will be the more beneficial to the people. The coming of either should be hailed with delight. [Applause.]

When this Government went into operation under the Constitution, in 1789, there were but seven post-offices in the United States. To-day our postal service stands unequaled by that of any other country in revenues, cost, efficiency, or in the appreciation of the public. Every decade has been marked with steps of advancement. Letter postage has been reduced from 25 cents to 2 cents. Villages that a few years ago received mail once a week now receive mail once or twice a day. But the inauguration of rural free mail service marks the most important step in postal progress that this country has seen in the last half century. [Applause.]

Rural free delivery is certain to be a great factor in the development of the rural communities. It will have a most marked effect upon the intellectual and material progress of these communities. Who can estimate the value to the farmer of receiving daily papers at his door to give him news of current events and the daily market prices of products he has to sell or to buy? An accurate knowledge of market prices will often save him from being wronged by shrewd and tricky dealers. Give the farmer rural free delivery, and the time saved, which would be required to go after his mail, will be money in his pocket. He can well afford to take more newspapers and periodicals and write more letters. His home will become a school for the study of important public questions and great events.

Every community in which rural free delivery is established will be considered a more desirable locality in which to reside. There will be found better educational and social influences, more refinement and culture. Farm property, other things being equal, will be more valuable in such communities. In our country homes have been reared the brightest, the wisest, and the ablest men of the past and the present, and by giving to the rural regions the increased mail facilities afforded by rural free delivery the educational agencies of these homes will be further increased and the rural homes will continue to give to the professions, the trades, and the various vocations the strongest and best men and women. [Applause.]

I am glad to see members of this House so much disposed in favor of legislation to benefit the farming communities. There seems to have been a grand awakening on some of the subjects in which farmers have a vital interest. For years the agricultural population of this country has been asking for rural free delivery. Congress has been gradually increasing the mail facilities of the cities, giving them from two to nine free deliveries a day and establishing branch offices accessible to all. It is only fair and equitable that the farming interests should have a fair share of the modern facilities of our admirable postal system.

The farmers bear a very large part of the burden of taxation. They pay taxes as cheerfully as any other class of citizens. But it is an indisputable fact that farmers have not had equitable consideration in matters of general legislation.

It is time that Congress should cease to legislate continually and exclusively for other interests, and to ignore the interests of farmers, who are the very foundation of our social and commercial institutions and the bulwark of our Government.

It is gratifying that the Post-Office Department is able to make so favorable a showing of the successful operation of this service. On many routes the service is already self-supporting. In consequence of the establishment of this service the postal receipts have materially increased. We may reasonably expect continued favorable showings from the workings of this service.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of rural free delivery. I could cheerfully support even a larger appropriation than the bill under consideration carries. But I commend the committee in their generous response to the earnest and just appeals of the farmers of the country. [Applause.]

HON. WILLIAM A. JONES,
OF VIRGINIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 7, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that suitable tribute may be made to the high character and eminent public services of the Hon. RICHARD PARKS BLAND, late a most distinguished member of the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Missouri.

"Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these memorial exercises, shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman, and inform the Senate of the action of this body"—

Mr. JONES of Virginia said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I met the distinguished Missourian, in whose honor these memorial exercises are held, for the first time at the opening of the Fifty-second Congress. That was the beginning of his tenth term as a Representative in Congress and my first.

For years Mr. BLAND had occupied a conspicuous position in national politics, and long before it was my good fortune to form his personal acquaintance he had attained high distinction as a patriot and a statesman, and had impressed his views on a great public question upon the legislation of his country.

He was born in the State of Kentucky, but was of a family which had settled in that region when it was a part of Virginia. Among the patriots whose names reflect luster upon the history of that Commonwealth are those of the Bland family of colonial and Revolutionary fame, and from that historic family was descended RICHARD PARKS BLAND, so that the strong conviction, inflexible purpose, indomitable courage, and intense patriotism which dominated his life and illustrated his long and splendid public career, may be said to have been his birthrights.

The House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress, the second of which Mr. BLAND was a member, was the first since the year 1859 over which the Democratic party exercised control. In 1873 silver was denied free access to the mints, and the financial panic which so soon followed its demonetization swept the Democratic party into power at the ensuing Congressional elections. Mr. BLAND, in common with almost every member of his party in Congress, and with many of those of the opposition party, believed that the ills which had befallen his country resulted from this financial legislation, and he at once set himself resolutely to the task of righting what he regarded as a monstrous wrong inflicted upon the American people, and the proud distinction is his of having written the free-coinage measure which passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority in December, 1877, just four years after his advent upon the national theater.

It was this legislative achievement which first brought Mr. BLAND into national prominence, and from that moment until the close of his useful life he was justly regarded as the foremost advocate of bimetallism in America.

It is true that this bill never became a law, but it made possible the passage of the compromise measure known as the Bland-Allison Act, by which the Treasury was authorized to purchase not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion monthly at the best rate obtainable, and to coin it into dollars for which certificates might be issued, the dollars to remain in the Treasury to meet their redemption upon presentation.

Under this act, which became a law on the 28th of February, 1878, by far the larger part of all the silver currency now in circulation was coined or issued, and it must be conceded to be the most beneficial measure of silver legislation in all the history of the United States. Whilst it is true that Mr. BLAND lived to witness, twelve years later, the repeal of this act, it is equally true that, however much the minds of some others may have undergone change upon this great monetary question, there was no abatement in his loyalty and devotion to the silver cause up to the last moment of his life.

When the national Democratic convention assembled in Chicago in 1896 Mr. BLAND was very generally regarded as the logical candidate for the Presidential nomination of his party. Indeed, it is not too much to say that but for the electrical effect of Mr. Bryan's matchless speech the great silver champion would have received the nomination. I recall with a feeling of pride that, as the chairman of the Virginia delegation in that memorable assemblage, I had the honor of announcing upon three successive ballots that the 24 votes of my State were cast for RICHARD PARKS BLAND, and it was not until it became apparent that he could not be nominated that he failed to receive those votes. The failure to realize his great ambition, if, indeed, he ever coveted that great distinction, to lead his party in the great contest in which the dominant issue was one with which his name was more prominently connected than that of any other living man, caused no diminution in his zeal for the Democratic cause and its chosen leaders. In the stupendous struggle which followed he bore a conspicuous part and contributed no small share in bringing about that great popular indorsement which the Democratic doctrine of the free coinage of silver received at the polls.

Although Mr. BLAND was profoundly interested in the monetary question, and devoted the best energies of his life in strenuous efforts to restore silver to its ancient place as a money metal, those efforts did not comprise the sum of his political creed or the measure of his legislative achievements. He was a Democrat in the truest and best sense of the word. He was thoroughly imbued with the fundamental principles of Democracy, and his belief in those principles was a part of his very life. He was not in politics for personal advantage, but because of a firm conviction that the advancement of the principles of Democracy would redound to the general welfare, and because he was profoundly interested in all those great public questions which, in his judgment, affected the well-being of society. He advocated the cause of silver not because he believed it would become popular, but rather because he was convinced it was a just cause. His mind was never occupied with devising shifts and turns for his own advancement. He despised with a righteous scorn the tricks and wiles of the small politician.

Mr. BLAND'S tastes were simple and his life was plain and unostentatious. He loved the simple virtues. In truth, he was one of nature's noblemen. His ability was great, his character stainless, his life pure; but his most marked characteristics, in my opinion, were his steadfastness of purpose and his modest courage. His Congressional career was distinguished rather by sincerity, earnestness, courage, and firm resolution than by any extraordinary exhibition of genius. He was not eloquent, but he was forceful and convincing, and at times his speech was most impassioned.

In advocating what he believed to be just and right and in combating what he believed to be wrong he was unflinching, inexorable, and unyielding. The poet Lowell might well have had RICHARD PARKS BLAND in mind when he wrote of another:

To front a lie in arms and not to yield,
This shows, me thinks, God's plan
And measure of a stalwart man.

Memorial Address on the Late Representative Bland.

HON. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
OF IOWA.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Tuesday, April 10, 1900.

The Senate having under consideration the following resolutions, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL:

"Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. RICHARD P. BLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

"Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

"Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the widow of the deceased."

Mr. ALLISON said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: Almost from the very beginning of his service in the House of Representatives it was my fortune to know Mr. BLAND well, and I fully appreciate the tributes paid to his memory by his friends and associates here.

The House of Representatives is a great forum in which to achieve distinction if a man has the opportunity to remain there, as Mr. BLAND had, for nearly a quarter of a century. I have sometimes thought that no man could so long remain in that body unless he had great qualities—first, the quality to endear himself to the popular heart of his local constituency, and next, to secure the confidence, respect, and esteem of his associates in the body in which he served. It is also necessary, however, that his environment politically should be of a friendly character.

Mr. BLAND'S term of service in the House of Representatives began on the 4th of March, 1873. We have now passed the 4th of March, 1900. Elected to the present Congress, if he were still living, he would have served here, with the exception named by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], for more than twenty-eight years. There is but one man now serving in the House of Representatives who was serving there during the first term of Mr. BLAND.

So that, without in detail speaking of the character and nature of his services in that body, it is a fitting eulogy upon him to say that during that long period he served uninterruptedly a single district in his State, and all the time enjoying their confidence and esteem. One can count on the fingers of his hands the men who from the beginning of the Government have served in the House of Representatives for so long a period. Therefore I am glad to say of him what so many before me have said—that he was an earnest, an honest, and modest man, but withal a man of highest ability.

He entered the House of Representatives at a time when many questions which had agitated the country, though not entirely settled, were practically disposed of. He entered that body at a time when not only in this country but in all the civilized countries of the world there were new agitations respecting the money question. Germany, with its hosts, had marched through the streets of Paris and secured from France an indemnity of a thousand million dollars and also two of her most valuable provinces. That success of Germany had a great political effect upon Europe, and it had a special effect upon the money situation of Europe. Therefore it was that in Europe the question of confining the money standard of Europe or of some of the great European nations to gold alone was agitated; and Germany, which had been for so many years a silver country, having the opportunity to use this enormous indemnity as a means, and a ready one, to change her money system from silver to gold, did so, without considering the effect such radical change would have upon the money standard of Europe and upon the exchanges in all the money markets of the world. At that time we were upon a paper basis, having neither gold nor silver in general circulation, though by law having nominally the double standard. The United States by law followed the action of Germany, hoping to soon be able to make our paper currency convertible into gold. This soon became a great economic question, not only in our country, but in the countries of Europe as well. Mr. BLAND early in his service in the House became a student of this question and a patient, honest, earnest student of all its important phases.

How far his mind was influenced by political surroundings it is as impossible for me to say as it would be to say how far the minds of others were influenced by political considerations in the discussions that followed for many years and which still continue in a degree. It is enough for me to say of Mr. BLAND now that I believe his advocacy of the free coinage of silver in our country, without the concurrence of other nations, was an earnest advocacy. He believed it could be accomplished without impairing the general credit of our country or without impairing either the rights of debtor or creditor. Whether that view was a wise one or an unwise one, I will not say. It is sufficient to say that Mr. BLAND became its earnest and principal advocate in the House of Representatives during the whole period of his service from 1876 to 1899.

I quite agree with those who have already said of him that he was the logical candidate of his party in 1896 for the Presidency; because it was to him more than to any other one man that the House of Representatives from Congress to Congress and from year to year was committed to that principle, which was incorporated in 1896 in the platform of the party to which he belonged. That fact was recognized, and I believe in every ballot, except the last, he received a larger number of votes than any other candidate in that convention.

Mr. BLAND at many times took rather pessimistic views of the situation of our country. He believed, and I have no doubt sincerely, that nothing but the free coinage of silver would restore prosperity and activity to our business, to our mechanical industries, and to our agriculture, and also thereby bring about remunerative compensation to labor. How far his views have been sustained by the history of the recent past I shall not now stop to consider.

Although devoted to the advocacy of free silver, the question which was nearest to him, Mr. BLAND was an efficient and faithful legislator, giving close and careful attention to every public question which came before the House of Representatives for consideration. He was influential there with all parties and especially with those who agreed with him on public questions, often carrying his party according to his views and wishes.

In his advocacy of a measure he was always serious and argumentative, and I know of no man in either House of Congress who made better arguments or a stronger presentation of the great questions he had at heart than did Mr. BLAND.

I think the death of Mr. BLAND is a great loss to the House of Representatives, in which he served so long and in which he was so influential, as I am sure it must be to the State of Missouri and to the entire country. Missouri has had many eminent and many faithful public servants, as she now has, but I think she has had very few more eminent or who will be more and better known in the history of the State than will RICHARD P. BLAND. He has left a memory of faithful public service, an inheritance and a record which will be of inestimable value to those who are nearest and dearest to him.

The Late Representative Richard P. Bland.

ADDRESSES AND RESOLUTIONS
SUBMITTED BY
HON. DAVID A. DE ARMOND, OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday April 7, 1900,

On the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that suitable tribute may be paid to the high character and eminent public services of the Hon. RICHARD PARKS BLAND, late a most distinguished member of the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Missouri.

"Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these memorial exercises, shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman, and inform the Senate of the action of this body."

Mr. DE ARMOND submitted the following addresses, etc., made at Mr. BLAND'S funeral, which were ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

The committee appointed by the citizens of Lebanon, upon the occasion of the death of R. P. BLAND, to draft appropriate resolutions, unanimously adopted the following expression of the common bereavement:

To the will of an overruling Providence which has removed from our midst our beloved and illustrious fellow-townsman, who for more than a generation was an honored and distinguished figure in the legislative chamber of the nation, we bow in sorrow and submission.

The citizens of Lebanon, with one common accord, upon the occasion of so great a public bereavement, desiring to honor the memory of the departed statesman, and sharing the grief of the State and the nation, as an expression of their regard and reverence for his public and private virtues and distinguished national career, do hereby

Resolved, That we profoundly and thoroughly appreciate the private worth and domestic virtues, as well as the public services, of our late fellow-citizen, RICHARD PARKS BLAND. That we point to him as an inspiring example of the possibilities of American citizenship—a man who, by the simplicity of his life and manners and his devotion to what he so earnesty championed as the people's cause, won the heart of a great people and rose from the condition of humble beginnings to the heights of honor and fame. And we feel that the memory of his character for integrity and unswerving fidelity to his convictions during all the vicissitudes of a long public career, and of his high endeavor and faithful, patriotic life, will ever be treasured as a priceless heritage by a people whom he so long and so devotedly served.

And be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mrs. Virginia E. Bland and family, with the assurance of profound sympathy in their deep personal affliction, and with the expression of the sincere condolence of this entire community.

DEATH OF MISSOURI'S "GRAND OLD MAN"—THE FUNERAL SERVICES.

In all Lebanon's history no event has been the occasion of such universal sorrow and regret as the death of Missouri's great commoner, RICHARD PARKS BLAND. The great love and esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the immense number that gathered Saturday to do honor to the distinguished dead. From the surrounding country they came and from the neighboring towns, while from the country at large came the nation's greatest men to pay their last tribute to the departed statesman.

At 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon were performed the last sad rites for the dead, and the solemn, impressive services were, in their simplicity, in keeping with the character of the man. The event was marked by a general suspension of public business, and on all sides were the signs of mourning. The business houses were heavily draped in black and white bunting, and conspicuous everywhere were pictures of Mr. BLAND, shrouded in funeral draperies.

The opera house, where the remains had lain in state for twenty-four hours, guarded by a detachment of Knights Templar of Lebanon Commandery, of which the deceased was a member, had been decorated under the supervision of Sergeant-at-Arms of the National House of Representatives B. F. Russell, of Steelville, Mo. The pillars were wrapped in black and white, while draperies of the bunting adorned the walls and gallery. On the stage were banked palms, ferns, and flowering plants, which formed a beautiful background for the somber catafalque. The white casket, with its silver trimmings, stood out in striking contrast with the somber black of the pall and bier, and on the lid was a silver plate bearing the simple inscription:

RICHARD PARKS BLAND,

Died June 15, 1899.

Grouped around the bier were the floral offerings. Among them were a pillar of roses and carnations, presented by the Bland Glee Club; a "Gates Ajar," from the Mitchell family; a bunch of lilies and roses, from Major Towles; a wreath, from Senator and Miss Cockrell; a bunch of carnations and roses, from the Lebanon Shakespeare Club; a bunch of roses, from the Bachelor Girls' Club. A bunch of exquisite wild roses and other flowers lent a touch of sweetness and beauty to the impressive scene.

At 4 o'clock entered the Masonic fraternities. Soon after came the Congressional delegation and the visiting friends for whom seats had been reserved. After the arrival of the family the doors were thrown open, and the house was soon filled to its utmost capacity.

Hon. J. W. Farris was master of ceremonies. The services opened with the song "Nearer, my God, to Thee," given by a selected choir composed of Misses Williamson, Aycock, Farris, Fisher, Wright, and Steinberg, Messrs. Wehe, Barrows, Manchester, and Billings. After the opening prayer and scripture reading by Rev. John Wilkinson, that beautiful song, "Rock of Ages," was rendered by the choir. The funeral oration was delivered by Rev. W. K. Collins, who took as the theme of his discourse the text from Hebrews ix, 27: "It is appointed unto men once to die."

Then followed the impressive Masonic services, Past Grand Commander Gillis conducting the the Knights Templar ritual, while J. W. Farris led the Masons in their solemn service for the dead. At the conclusion a prayer was offered by Rev. J. E. Alexander, and the beautiful, impressive service was ended.

The procession was very imposing. First in order came the Lebanon Cornet Band followed by Lebanon Commandery, Knights Templar, mounted and in full regalia. Next came the Congressional escort in carriages preceding the hearse and pallbearers, after whom came the family carriages, the Masonic lodge, Hobart's Military Band, of Springfield; St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar, of Springfield; then other visitors, and finally the general procession.

The procession formed on Jefferson avenue and proceeded north to Second street, west to Monroe avenue, then south to Commercial street, down which the funeral cortège slowly passed to the beautiful but mournful strains of the Dead March from Saul, played by the Lebanon Cornet Band. The pallbearers were F. S. Clark, B. F. Pasley, Joe McMillen, A. W. Bradshaw, E. M. Easley, Ed. S. Ivey, C. E. Joslyn, and Oliver Sharp.

At the cemetery Father J. F. Wood made brief but appropriate remarks, at the close of which the silent sleeper was left to his last long rest.

The following is the sermon from the text, "It is appointed unto men once to die" (Hebrews, ix, 27), preached by Rev. W. K. Collins:

This dark truth is written upon every page and into every paragraph of Nature's great volume, and yet, lest man in his folly and heedlessness might disregard it, our merciful Creator, who is always planning for our security, has seen fit to repeat it over and over in the great Book of Life.

How inexorable is death! "All that live must die, passing through nature to eternity." How solemn are the words—

Death enters and there's no defense;
His time there's none can tell;
He'll in a moment call thee hence
To heaven or down to hell.

How intrusive is Death! There is no age, nor hour, nor circumstance into which he will not intrude his presence. Life's chamber door can not be barred against him. He regards not the sacredness of infancy nor the innocence of childhood's glee, but obtrudes his dark presence—the voice of mirth is hushed and the rosy cheek is paled with his cold kiss. How pathetic the "May Queen" of Mr. Tennyson:

You must wake and call me early, call me early, mother dear;
To-morrow 'll be the happiest time of all the glad New-year;
Of all the glad New-year, mother, the maddest merriest day;
For I'm to be Queen o' the May, mother, I'm to be Queen o' the May.

Then Death insinuates his unwelcome presence, the cheek fades, the spirit is broken, and in languid voice we listen to the plaintive words:

If you're waking call me early, call me early, mother dear,
For I would see the sun rise upon the glad New-year.
It is the last New-year that I shall ever see,
Then you may lay me low i' the mould and think no more of me.

Man enters the broad field of industry and lays his plans for an abundant harvest, and just when his arduous toil is culminating in success, and in his pride he says, "I will build me larger barns wherein to store my goods," a startling voice from unseen lips, in deep, sepulchral tones, says: "Thou fool; this night shalt thy soul be required of thee."

A broken and melancholy dreamer saw in the dark night an ill-omened bird perched upon his chamber door, and to all his prayers and imprecations he received only the response, "Nevermore, nevermore."

And so there is an ill-omened spirit which haunts man night and day, waking or sleeping, in toil or sport, in sin or in righteousness, and keeps evermore repeating in his ear the melancholy warning:

"Vain man, thy fond pursuits forbear;
Repent; thy end is nigh.
Death at the farthest can't be far.
O think before thou die."

How dreadful is death! Into the presence of what an awful, unknown world of terrible possibilities it introduces us!

"To die, to sleep; to sleep, perchance to dream.
Ay; there's the rub; for in that sleep of death
What dreams may come when we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause."

The unpardoned man lives in dread apprehension of the issues of death. To him "the meanest and most loathed worldly life which age, ache, penury, and imprisonment can lay on nature is a paradise to what he fears of death."

It is the wisdom of life to prepare for death. The wisdom that came to us from out the depths of the unknown world and "spake as never man spake" said but little to us about the conditions of well-being in this life. He established no school of sociology; He founded no college of the arts and sciences; He planned no system of statecraft. He passed these by as matters of minor consequence, and the burden of His teaching was preparation for eternity: "Prepare to meet thy God." "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

A question of deep interest to us now and pertinent to this occasion is: How did Mr. BLAND regard the warnings of the Son of God? Had he considered the number of his days and applied his heart unto wisdom? Had he made his peace with God and laid up treasure in heaven?

A gentleman who has known Mr. BLAND intimately for years said to me that he believed him to be a Christian in all but name. If we are to decide the matter by the criterion which the Master laid down and assign him a place according to the "fruit" found clustering in his noble character, then he must have an exalted seat indeed.

We observe first the charming simplicity of the man. Mr. BLAND was unassuming, unostentatious. He loved not the pomp and display which pleases men of lighter weight. He was plain and simple, not given to heartless ceremony and cold conventionality. He exemplified in a marked degree that most beautiful humility which we are taught is the virtue most pleasing to the great Father.

He was a tribune of the people. The common people sought and greeted him, assured of friendly recognition and interest, and the children were at home in his presence.

HIS UNIMPEACHABLE HONESTY.

So true had he lived in all his dealings, private and official, that he had won from all the people the soubriquet, "Honest Dick," the highest compliment that can be given to anyone, for "an honest man is the noblest work of God."

He was honest in speech. He would not prevaricate nor use ambiguous terms. He stooped not to sophistry, nor did he "darken council by multitude of words." His nay was nay, and his yea was yea. In his manuscript there was nothing to be read between the lines.

He was honest in his opinions. He did not trim his sails to catch the breeze. He would not compromise himself with expediency and policy. He chose the plainest Anglo-Saxon words to express the honest convictions of a noble mind. And honesty of purpose imparts an unwonted power to discern and vigor to grasp the truth. And the convictions of an honest man are always current as pure gold.

He was honest in dealing with men and government. He lived during times when it was easy for one in his position to accumulate a fortune, yet he died poor. His idea of manhood would not permit him to—

"Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift might follow fawning."

Mr. Emerson says, "The State depends upon the veracity of men," and we, the people, may well beware of statesmen who are too thrifty.

Senator Colquitt, of Georgia, used to enjoy telling of an incident which happened to him at Hot Springs, Ark. A Westerner approached him and grasped his hand, saying, "I always love to shake hands with you old-fashioned Southern Senators, for you are as poor as church mice, and as honest as the noonday." Probably Mr BLAND was not as poor as a church mouse, but it is the verdict of all who knew him well that he was honest as the noonday.

HIS UNSWERVING COURAGE.

His greatness consisted not in a genius which discovered new inventions and proposed unheard-of theories, nor in a brilliance that illumined or dazzled, nor in an eloquence that secured the applause of the unthinking throng, but in some sterling quality or lionlike courage which made him stand with his very life in defense of some old-fashioned and fundamental principles.

And this is why the people loved and trusted him. The great principles upon which the strength of the citizen and the State depend are not, as some may suppose, numerous and difficult of discovery, but they are few and lie upon the surface. They are as old as the laws of God, as unalterable as the constitution of life, and as wholesome as the trundle-bed prayer which our mothers taught us. Hence, it is not more brilliant, not more astute statesmen that we need, but more like RICHARD P. BLAND, always found standing like a stone wall in defense of plain and well-known principles.

HIS UNFAILING BENEVOLENCE.

He entertained the most generous feelings toward men. Some one has said:

"I know some men who lay in wait
And get up soon and stay up late
To catch some fellow they can hate
For going with a faster gait."

These words do not apply to our friend here.

"He lived for those who loved him,
For those who knew him true;
For the heaven-bright above him,
And the good that he might do.

"For the cause that needed assistance,
For the wrongs that lacked resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that he might do."

Behold, these are the fruits, rich and fragrant, clustering about the life that has just gone out; and in answer to the question, Did MR. BLAND heed the counsel of the Savior? I must refer you to a little poem by Leigh Hunt:

"Abou Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase!),
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw within the moonlight of his room,
Making it rich like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the presence in the room he said:
'What writest thou?' The vision raised its head,
And with a look made all of sweet accord,
Answered, 'The names of those who love the Lord.

'And is mine one?' asked Abou. 'Nay, not so,'
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still and said: 'I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men.'
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great awakening light,
And showed the names of those whom love of God had blessed,
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest."

Mr. BLAND'S life was upon the altar of human want.

And is BLAND dead? Good BLAND! Honest BLAND! Wise BLAND! Great BLAND! Our BLAND! Did he die? Could not the pitiful tears of children, the deep, sweet love of a devoted wife, the constant prayer of a trusting constituency, the exigency of a nation, neither bribe, nor placate, nor importune the grim monster, Death, that he might pass him by? No; he died as other mortals, and we must lay him low beneath the lilies, where the mountain breeze will murmur a requiem over his grave, and soothe him into a slumber that shall never be broken.

No; he is not dead. By the Lord Jesus Christ I affirm he is not dead, but sleepeth.

Parallel with the dark sentence of death in the Bible is the declaration of life. There was One commissioned from Heaven to break the power of him who had the power of death. He declares, "I am come that they might have life;" "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

The story of His wondrous triumph over man's mortal foe is finely told in the tearful hymn of Mr. Watts:

He dies! the friend of sinners dies!
Lo, Salem's daughters weep around;
A solemn darkness veils the skies,
A sudden trembling shakes the ground.

Come, saints, and drop a tear or two
For Him who groaned beneath your load;
He shed a thousand drops for you—
A thousand drops of richer blood.

Here's love and grief beyond degree:
The Lord of Glory dies for man!
But, lo, what sudden joys we see,
Jesus, the dead, revives again.

The rising God forsakes the tomb;
In vain the tomb forbids him rise;
Cherubic legions guard him home
And shout him welcome to the skies.

Say, "Live forever, wondrous King!
Born to redeem and strong to save;"
Then ask the monster, "Where's thy sting?
And where's thy victory, boasting grave?"

"There is no death, but angel forms
Walk o'er the earth with silent tread;
They bear our best loved things away,
And then we call them 'dead.'"

THE LION OF LEBANON.

[Extract from a speech delivered at Eldon, Mo., by T. O. Towles, of Jefferson City, Mo.]

FELLOW-CITIZENS AND FRIENDS: Less than a year ago, before an audience composed largely of persons who are now present in this hall, it was the privilege of the speaker to address the citizens then here assembled on the public and political questions of the day, and especially as to the wisdom and propriety of the reelection of Hon. R. P. BLAND to the Congress of the United States. Mr. BLAND was himself present and spoke briefly on the occasion, being then in feeble health. Only a few months have intervened, but the passing time hath wrought a cruel work, and our great leader and true friend has fallen in the midst of his life work for good government, equal rights and privileges for every individual, and the fullest liberty and freedom of each person consistent with the safety of all.

Let us pause to pay a tribute of respect and affection to the memory of R. P. BLAND, who for so many years and so ably represented this district in the House of Representatives of the United States. Mr. BLAND was a man of marked simplicity of character and habits of life. He was an upright man, and purity and truth dwelt in his heart. He was modest almost to diffidence, and wholly free from selfish ambition. Strong in all his convictions of the right, he was fixed and immovable in his purposes, and when occasion demanded could lead a forlorn hope, against a host of opponents, with the vigor of a Titan, and the courage that despiseth fear and that maketh martyrs. He was an earnest lover of his country, a Democrat in the noblest and truest sense of the word, a useful citizen, a firm and true friend, a devoted husband and father, and a "friend of human liberty throughout the world."

Mr. BLAND was first elected to Congress in 1872 from the former Fifth Congressional district of Missouri, taking his seat at the organization of the House of Representatives of the Forty-third Congress, in December, 1873. He was reelected continuously from that district, and from the Eleventh and Eighth districts, as subsequently changed by the legislature, to Congress from the Forty-fourth to the Fifty-third Congress, both inclusive. He was defeated by a few votes in the contest for the Fifty-fourth Congress, but was reelected to the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses. He thus served continuously as a member of Congress for twenty-two years, and after a lapse of two years he again served a term of two more years, making in all twenty-four years of service, with a full term of two years upon which he was just entering at the time of his death.

In all these years of public service, beginning with President Grant's second term as President and ending under President McKinley's Administration in 1899, he took an active and leading part in all great public and political questions, and no word or sentiment he ever uttered or expressed in debate or argument, no vote he ever cast on any "call of the roll," was ever questioned or criticised by his constituents. No public man from this or any other State of the Union has left a nobler, purer, or more enduring record of faithful and useful service to his people.

His lifelong efforts and work in behalf of the free coinage of silver and its restoration to its constitutional place in the coinage of the United States are too well known to need any reference thereto; but if the record of all BLAND'S service in the cause of silver coinage was stricken from the archives and written history of Congressional proceedings, he would still have left, on other public questions, the longest, the most useful, and most honorable record of service of any man who ever served this State in the lower House of Congress.

He took an active part and did faithful, intelligent work on all tariff questions, and issues relating to internal revenue taxation; on currency legislation and bond issues by the General Government; on the the matter of the "Electoral Commission," which he opposed and voted against; on river improvement; on foreign relations, and on every grave question relating to our national affairs pending or discussed in the last quarter of a century of our history. He bitterly opposed the "force bill," the right of United States marshals to interfere with elections in the States, the presence or use of United States soldiers at polling places, and government by injunction of the United States courts.

On all party questions he was a typical Democrat, the ablest and most fearless advocate and champion of the people's rights and the untrammeled liberties of the individual citizen since the days of Jefferson and Andrew Jackson. The fact that there is to-day an organized, active, and purified Democratic party is due more to his fearless leadership, his untiring zeal, and his wise championship than to the work and efforts of any one man. At times he seemed to stand almost alone, as it were, upon the ramparts of militant Democracy, holding aloft its banner and struggling with heroic valor for the principles of the party, until he forced faltering leaders and wavering hosts to rally to his support.

The nomination of his party for the Presidency which so narrowly missed him, to my personal knowledge, he did not seek, and he honestly and earnestly advised against the use and presentation of his name for this highest office among men, when his party in his own State decided to make the trial and effort for him. He sought no other official honor than to represent this people and district in Congress, and his highest ambition was fully satisfied to serve this constituency faithfully and well.

In the calm light of coming years, when the student of that day and time reads and ponders over the records and the history of these times, measured by the test of fully developed truth and the fruition of experience and actual trial, the life work and public services of BLAND will rank him among the foremost statesmen of his day, and no one will contest his right to be called the "Great American Commoner."

He died on an early morning in June, at his home, and we buried his body under the oaks and elms in the midst of the people whom he loved so well. Surrounded by his family and his nearest friends, just as the dawn of a new day appeared in the eastern sky, the brave champion breathed his last, and his spirit passed to rest, not as sinks the evening star in the darkness and gloom of night, but like the morning star, which—

"Sinks to rest beneath the ocean's bed,
And ere anon repairs its drooping head
And flames with new spangled ore
In the forehead of the morning sky," giving up its own light only when the glowing sun, the king of day, floods the earth with radiance. A mighty man of our Israel has fallen. An high priest of our political faith has passed away, and a brave champion and leader of our people is taken from us. Peace to his ashes, rest to his soul, and honor to his memory.

Rural Free Delivery.

SPEECH
OF
HON. HENRY C. SMITH,
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 25, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Rural free delivery, while called in the law experimental, has come to stay.

This tardy recognition of the rights and the intelligence of the farmers should not be curtailed, but should be extended.

The real object of the post-office ought to be quick and effective transmission of mail matter from addressor to addressee in the shortest possible time from posting to delivery.

The United States has never looked upon its Postal Department as an institution for taxing the people. It has always considered it as one for the general use and benefit of the people, and therefore as one which should not make a business of taxing them.

Accommodation to the public is the first consideration, and the means for paying for it the second.

We have never attached much importance to profit or loss on the transaction. Such for many years, at least, has been our policy. And so long as service to the public and not profit is the supreme test it can not well be seen why the farmer, the representative of the largest and most important business of our land, the most extensive reader of any class, the most appreciative and best deserving, should not receive fair, adequate, and equitable mail facilities.

A brief comparison of our postal system with that of other countries will show the real situation.

In England, the United Kingdom, the postal system is conducted at a large profit. The same is true of France, and Germany reaps some profit. But in these countries the population is not scattered, and for this reason in a well-governed old country the post-office pays, while in a new one it does not pay.

This deficit is most conspicuous in countries of wide territory, scarcely peopled, like our country, Canada, and the Argentine Republic, in which countries there are annually large balances of expenses over receipts.

The cause of the principal part of the excessive expenditure, compared with the greater possible economy of an old country, is obvious. It lies in the distance letters and papers have to be carried during collection, transit, and delivery in the new country. For example, the United States has to carry a letter three times as far for the same money as does the United Kingdom.

Then, again, in the United Kingdom 51 letters per year to each inhabitant are posted; in Germany, 24; in France, 17; in the United States, 37.

We post twenty-eight newspapers to each inhabitant to seventeen in the United Kingdom. In France there are six times as many registered or insured letters as in the United Kingdom, which adds much to the profit.

Then, too, in the United States there is a post-office to every 986 inhabitants, which is not exceeded in any country in the world except Canada and Switzerland. So it will be readily seen that the deficit can not be all laid at the door of the Government.

The delivery of mail from house to house, direct to the people, has been of slow growth.

In France the only thing in the way of the traveling post-office is the courier conveyancer, who goes along in a second-class carriage provided with a box containing a bag to hang up on the umbrella rack and a list of places he has to deal with.

He takes in and gives out only ordinary letters and post cards and newspapers, of which the publishers have permission to utilize his services, making up his mails in gummed envelopes instead of bags.

This service is confined to the large cities. In Germany there is a complete delivery in Berlin and other large cities.

In England orders may be left and the carriers may call for mail and parcels of certain kind.

Now, one-third of the people of the United States have their mail brought direct to their doors, but this is in the cities and larger towns and villages, where the mail is delivered free from one to eight times a day.

It is much credit to our system, which costs $105,000,000 per year and handles 6,214,447 pieces of mail matter, distributed in every part of our broad domain, that but one error is made in the distribution of each 10,000 pieces of mail.

This is an era of marvelous progress and advancement. Every industry and every enterprise has written in unfading colors upon its banner the word "Forward." The farmer, slow to anger, has waited with patience and dignity the dawning of his day of relief, and at last he sees the bow of promise span his sky of hope.

Under President Harrison's Administration, in a time of supreme prosperity, a meager appropriation of $10,000 was made for rural free delivery of mail, merely as an experiment.

The authorities predicted that the service could not be made practicable. The experiment was made, and the test refuted the theory.

The appropriations have been steadily increased, until the Fifty-fifth Congress appropriated $300,000 for this service, and now rural free-delivery routes are in successful operation in forty of the States of the Union, operating from nearly 400 distributing points.

And this day we all rejoice with the farmers of the land that this bill appropriates one million and three-quarters for this much-needed and highly appreciated service, and which I believe will prove self-sustaining, if not profitable, in the most thickly populated farming communities.

It seems to me that there are many better reasons why the farmer should have his mail brought to his door than that this service should be accorded to any other citizen.

In the first place, he works more hours and has greater responsibility than any other man for the return his toil and care bring him.

I believe that it takes more skill, forethought, and real ability to successfully operate a farm than to successfully carry on any other business in which the equal amount of capital is invested.

And yet, while 77 per cent of the business men in other pursuits fail and are stranded on the rocks, the farmer never makes an assignment, he never does business through a receiver, but manfully meets his obligations 100 cents on the dollar. And this without much direct aid from tariff laws and in spite of high taxes, from which, with him, there is no escape.

He can not hide his farm from the tax assessor's vigilant eye, if he would. It lies right out in the light of day, where all can see it, and this is true of all of his property. The cattle on the hillside can not escape; all is taxed, and that to full value.

Let us give this honest man a fair opportunity in the contest for life and for property.

Again, he has much farther to go to get his mail at the post-office than does the man in the city, village, or town. He has no sidewalk upon which to travel, no lamp, gas, or electric light to guide his weary steps.

The farmer has more need for daily papers and market reports than do other business men. He is isolated, and no one is near of whom he can make inquiry. His meager business will not permit of his employing a broker or sales agent. He alone must manage the production, distribution, and sale of his products.

Must he go into the market place blind, to accept, unaided by market reports, the offer of the buyer wholly intent on making gain?

Honest himself, he has been wont to consider all mankind the same. But now he is thinking for himself, and should be given all reasonable assistance.

A larger proportion of the farmers take newspapers, periodicals, and other reading matter than do those of other classes; and they read them, too.

If the people in cities, villages, and towns took newspapers in the same proportion farmers do, what a business the newspaper enterprise would be.

The Government has not done anything for the farmer within my memory which meets with such universal approval as does this service.

In the district which I have the honor to represent the special agent's coming to establish a rural free delivery is greeted with open-handed welcome. The proposed routes are ablaze with banners and he is feasted as a king. If the routes now asked for in my district are all established, the greater proportion of the farmers will be supplied with daily mail.

The postmasters join in the petitions and help on the work, willing to throw up their offices for the common good—the greatest good to the greatest number.

Recently it was stated in the public press that the carriers were to receive more compensation for their work, and all will concede that their pay is not at all adequate. Four hundred dollars per year and he to furnish horse and rig—everything.

Still our people were so fearful that the routes established might be taken away or the prospect of having more dimmed, if the carriers were to receive more pay, that I was fairly flooded with remonstrances against the change, and many of the carriers signed the remonstrances.

The farmer knows a good thing when he gets it, and he proposes to cling to it.

The opinions expressed during this debate indicate an almost unanimous desire to increase this appropriation to $2,000,000, and I am quite certain this would now be done, except for the statement made by one gentleman, a member of the committee, that the Postmaster-General told him that not more than one and three-quarters of a million dollars could possibly be used at this time.

This feeling is, to say the least, most encouraging.

The only opposition encountered here is from the Representatives of the large cities.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] argues that the receipts from the post-office in Chicago are far in excess of the expense of that office.

A like argument has also been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]. And it was urged that the large cities yielded the principal part of the revenues of the Post-Office Department. These arguments were made in behalf of the pneumatic-tube service.

And the first-named gentleman made an eloquent, strong, and impassioned appeal that the latter service be extended to the stockyards in his city.

I want to inquire from whence came and whither go the letters and newspapers and the other mail matter which yield the large receipts of these offices?

I respectfully submit that this wonderful correspondence is not carried on among the citizens of Chicago, nor among the citizens of other large cities.

On the contrary, the large proportion of these letters go to and come from the rural districts, and from the smaller cities, villages, and towns throughout the country.

In my State, of late at least, I find that the people are reading the Chicago newspapers quite extensively. If these large cities were not fed and sustained by the country they would soon perish from the earth and cease to be known among men.

"God made the country, and man made the towns." From creation's dawn till now the honest farmer has been the pride and glory of the world. He is the best hope of this Republic.

He ought to be protected, and he ought to be fairly treated.

And I rejoice in the favorable sentiment toward this appropriation, and hope it will pass without a dissenting vote.

Rural Free Delivery.

SPEECH

OF

HON. WILLIAM T. ZENOR,

OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. ZENOR said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: This discussion has taken wide range. While the bill under consideration is the regular annual Post-Office appropriation bill, and while such a bill is always one of more than ordinary interest, yet this one contains matters of the utmost importance, both to the Government and the great body of the people. This is not only true because of the fact that it carries a larger appropriation than any ever heretofore passed, but for the further reason that it more clearly indicates and recognizes the policy which it is hoped shall become the fixed and settled policy of the Government for all future time upon the subject of rural free delivery.

No question has of late years attracted more widespread public attention or excited more earnest and thoughtful consideration among the masses of our people than that of better facilities of mail distribution through the agency of an extension of rural free delivery. This is one of the subjects, Mr. Chairman, upon which I confess that I am an enthusiastic expansionist. For years past our policy has been one of great liberality in securing to the great mass of our people the benefits of cheap and inexpensive literature, and to afford to them the advantages of every improvement in our mail facilities. Postal rates have been reduced on all first-class mail matter.

A classification of the matter passing through the mails has been so arranged that newspapers, periodicals, pamphlets, prints, and reprints of books of a certain character have been admitted to and carried through the mails as second-class matter at the 1 cent a pound rate. This extremely low rate has stimulated the efforts and developed many large, enterprising, and reliable publishing houses and firms throughout the country to publish and circulate at exceedingly low prices many of the most valuable works on the subjects of science, literature, and art, and furnish them to the people at popular prices. Through this means inestimable blessings are brought home to the masses in the way of good, wholesome reading matter that otherwise would be beyond their reach.

Recognizing the fundamental truth that our institutions rest upon the common intelligence and the general dissemination of knowledge among the masses, every effort has been made to accomplish this patriotic purpose through the enactment of liberal postal laws. As an aid to this beneficent policy, supplementing it in the most effectual way possible, the Government has entered upon the experiment of "rural free delivery." I say experiment, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the fact that the Assistant Postmaster-General has in his last report said that this service has passed beyond the experimental stage, this word "experiment" perhaps should be omitted. This service has, in my judgment, been so successful and entirely satisfactory wherever and whenever given a fair test that it has become a permanent feature of our postal system.

It has met with such universal favor among the people and proven so beneficial in expediting mail delivery, as well as profitable in its tendencies to develop, improve, and build up good roads throughout the country, that it has become one of the most popular features of this public service. And while there are some provisions of this bill that do not command my approval, yet the bill in its general scope is cast along lines in harmony with the spirit of progress that has so distinctly marked our advance in the past, and with some few exceptions must commend itself to the sanction of this House and the country. I am, however, opposed to the provisions proposing to grant subsidies to certain railroads mentioned.

In this bill it is proposed to grant to trunk lines from New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans $171,238.75, and to trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000. These subsidies are not asked for by the Department and are not regarded by the Postmaster-General or the Department as necessary to facilitate the mail deliveries upon or along these great lines of railroads.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do not understand why the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, whose chairman, Mr. LOUD, is so generally watchful and careful to protect the Government and people from unjust and unwise expenditures of the public moneys, allowed these items to be incorporated in this bill. If given the opportunity—and I trust such an opportunity will not be denied to any member of this House by any unjust rule—to vote separately upon these obnoxious provisions, I shall vote against these items.

There are some other provisions of the bill which, in my judgment, are open to just criticism; but, Mr. Chairman, the only special feature of this bill to which I desired more particularly to address myself is that of "rural free delivery." I represent a district that, while embracing several large cities and towns, may yet very properly be denominated a rural district. Many of the counties have entered upon the construction of systems of gravel and macadamized roads, and many miles of this kind of road have in some of the counties been completed and in operation and use for many years. In others the people are fully alive to these advantages, and while not as far advanced as their more enterprising neighbors, and may have been to some extent embarrassed by less favorable surroundings and natural conditions, yet they are rapidly taking advantage of the very liberal laws in force in my State to secure the establishment of a very high grade of public highways.

As it is now generally understood through the country that rural free delivery and these new and improved facilities in the mail service will only be extended to sections and localities where the condition of the public roads are such as to render such extension feasible, there is no doubt in my mind, when it is once known that this branch of our system of mail service has become a part of the permanent policy of the Government, that it will only be a few years until the popular demand for these additional mail facilities will stimulate such enterprise and energy among the people for better roads that every community will soon be in a condition to entitle them to the benefits of this service.

Mr. Chairman, good roads and rural free delivery are inseparably connected, and this fact must and will be readily recognized by every community, and thus, acting upon each other, will prove potential factors in generous and friendly rivalry in the development of their mutual interests. As pertinent to this discussion and appropriate to this occasion I wish to incorporate as a part of my remarks an address of Mr. Francis M. Dice, special agent in charge of the western division of rural free delivery, delivered at a meeting held by the citizens of Iowa, at Des Moines, October 6, 1899, in which he quotes from a speech delivered by the governor of my own State upon a similar subject and occasion. In the course of this address Mr. Dice said:

It is comparatively easy to present a multitude of reasons in favor of the universal construction of good roads.

There is no argument against it. This is one reform at least that has this advantage over all others: The argument is all on one side. Nobody is opposed to good roads. It is not a controversial question. The only practical inquiry is, "How to get good roads?"

There is but one answer to that question, and that is to build them. But like every other improvement it costs labor and money to do it. So the only real question after all is, How can the sum necessary to do this be obtained? As a very distinguished candidate for the Presidency once said about a very important national measure, this is largely a "local" question and about which there may be and there are wide differences of opinion. Into such discussion I will not enter, for no universal method could be adopted. The conditions being so very different in different sections and localities, whether the construction of good roads shall be by General Government or by State and local authority or by all three combined or in conjunction is perhaps the only question which admits of discussion. From such meetings as these the proper ways and means will yet be evolved to provide for the expense necessary for their construction, and by the proper authority and under the proper supervision.

Every farmer knows that bad roads often keep him from the markets when prices of grain are high, and thereby cost him a good profit. Every farmer knows how much time he has lost by traveling over bad roads. Every farmer knows how much larger a load his team would haul if the roads were hard and smooth. Every farmer knows what a considerable item in his annual expenses is the repair of wagons and harness whose strength and safety have been crippled by bad roads. Every farmer knows how much more it costs to keep four or five horses instead of two or three, as he might with equal service with good roads over which to haul his products. Every farmer knows that his farm would increase in value if by good highways it could be brought into ready communication with village or city. All these things farmers know, when they think about it, and they know that the sum of these pecuniary advantages in favor of good roads would vastly outweigh the cost of procuring them.

My birthplace and my home are in Indiana, and in this presence I am reminded that a great many Indianians, at an early day in the beginning of the settlement of this great State, came here as emigrants as to a new El Dorado, and by their thrift and intelligence have contributed very largely to the development of the natural resources of the State and the building up of its institutions.

We who still live there greatly rejoice to know how well Indiana sons have honored the mother State, wherever else they have gone, as well as in your State, for which they have furnished three United States Senators and many other worthy and honorable citizens.

When I spoke of being from Indiana, however, I had intended to do so only as preliminary to saying that our present governor, who has been all his mature life a practical farmer of the county in which I live, in an address delivered before the Indiana State Board of Agriculture, at Indianapolis, last winter, spoke, among other things, on the subject of "good roads and rural free delivery," and his remarks were so pertinent to the object of this convention, as I understand it, that I desire you to know his views upon the subject. He said:

"I desire to call attention for a brief while to another subject of vital moment not only to the farmers, but to all the people of our Commonwealth. Good roads are inseparably connected with progress. Like abundant harvests, they contribute to the good of all. The isolation of the country home is the farmer's greatest barrier. Bad roads enlarge this barrier. 'Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.' This proverb reveals a truth found in everyday experience, that by friction of mind through frequent contact the intellect is quickened and the mind expanded. Conditions that tend to isolate should be removed as speedily as possible.

"Facilities for daily contact with the world's best thought and progress should be accelerated. The highest success socially, financially, and intellectually can not be attained until we have good thoroughfares. The restriction of marketing farm products to periods when the roads are passable prevents marketing to the best advantage, both as to time, cost, and price.

"I heard a farmer in southern Indiana say that $2,000 was lost to the farmers on hay alone on one road extending 8 miles from the market into the country. This loss, which was sustained in one year, was caused by impassable roads when prices were best. One year's loss on one crop would have paid for improving one-eighth of the distance. This illustrates the financial loss caused by bad roads.

"The farmer whose family is held in the thraldom of bad roads for a large part of the year is subjected to an ordeal that trammels progress, fetters social growth, and retards intellectual development. The farmer who lives on a mud road will be likely to have all his environments in harmony therewith. He sees the passer-by plodding his weary way through the heavy roads, and likewise moves in a sluggish manner; goes with muddy boots into his home; sits down with hat on; chews his tobacco, and spits in the fire. Such a farmer is apt to lose much of his pride and self-respect. His home has but little of brightness and good cheer, and his family are subjected to the necessity of staying at home or going out in a manner that humbles their pride, and, as a result, their dislike for the country is intensified.

"The farmer located on a good thoroughfare, who sees the fine turn-outs rapidly hurrying by, the occupants handsomely dressed people, is inspired by the scene, steps quicker, thinks faster, and keeps his home surroundings in harmony with what he sees. A sense of pride prompts him to greater efforts to have for his family a good conveyance, to provide about his barn good drives, free from mud, and to have about his home good brick or cement walks. His children go to school over good roads; his family goes to church, to lectures, to town; they are in touch with the world's progress. The need of combining small country schools, the demand for township high schools, will heighten the need of road improvements.

"Rural free delivery of mail, so much needed among our farmers, can never obtain except in localities possessing good thoroughfares, insuring rapid transit at all seasons of the year.

"The United States is the only country among all the countries that comprise the International Postal Union that fails to deliver the mail to the addressees. In thickly settled districts, where there are good roads, the conditions are ripe for the farmers to demand some consideration of fairness from the Post-Office Department. Hon. Perry S. Heath, First Assistant Postmaster-General, recommended and secured an appropriation of $150,000 for experimentation in rural free delivery of mail. I am amazed that objection should be made to the appropriation of this paltry sum for so wise and just a purpose. Mr. Heath informs me that a Senator from one of the Eastern States said to him, 'You have acted unwisely in this recommendation. You will have these farmers demanding a rural delivery of mail and causing a great deal of trouble.' I am astonished that an Eastern man should have the effrontery to speak slightingly of the rights of the men who are contributing so much to the nation's wealth and power.

"The people who produce the food and fiber that feed and clothe the world must not be overlooked in their just demands. The past year the farmers of the United States, after supplying home demands, sent abroad $856,000,000 worth of farm products. They bear a large part of the burden of taxation, and are justly entitled to some of the privileges accorded to others. Recently I was invited to go through the Southwestern Limited through mail train on the Pennsylvania Railroad. I found the clerks engaged for hours distributing two publications from Augusta, Me. I was informed by those mail clerks that in one day on one through train there were 115 sacks of this mail for the State of Texas alone. I was informed that this trashy stuff was handled by the Government at a loss of 7 cents a pound. These large sacks, filled with papers wrapped and packed by machinery, probably contained 100 pounds to the sack. The expense to the Government in one day, carrying mail to one State, would pay the expense of two rural routes for one year. Before this Eastern Senator again criticises the wise action of Mr. Heath, he should remember the farmers have some rights that even an Eastern Senator should respect.

"These Eastern cities should no longer be allowed to deluge our mails with thousands of tons of trashy stuff, destructive rather than constructive in its influence, thus costing the Government millions of dollars. These publications are not sent in good faith to bona fide subscribers, but to many unwilling subscribers, whose names are surreptitiously obtained. It would be far better if the amount thus unwisely expended were devoted to free rural routes. The result would be the farmers would take daily papers, and tens of thousands of our home daily newspapers, with all their elevating, refining, and educating influence, would find their way into rural homes. Of all men the farmer needs the daily paper. He is enabled thereby to keep in touch with the world's advance, to be posted on current events, and to understand daily markets. Nothing, in my judgment, gentlemen, will do more to hasten this desired end than good roads. The farmer's family must be kept in close touch and intercommunication with the world's thought and action, or they will migrate from the country to the already overcrowded cities."

I can not add to this comprehensive epitome of the advantages of good roads by one who speaks from years of experience and whose opinions are worthy of the highest consideration.

Mr. Chairman, wonderful progress has been made since the inauguration of this experiment. The first appropriation for this purpose made by Congress was for the year ending June 30, 1895, when an item of $10,000 was set apart to make some experimental tests. This was followed up by subsequent appropriations, as follows:

For year ending June 30—

And now in the present appropriation bill the very liberal sum of $1,750,000 is the amount appropriated for this specific purpose, an increase of $1,450,000 over the largest sum ever heretofore devoted to this service. The system in operation up to November 1, 1899, in the different States and Territories of the Union is shown in the following table.

On the 1st of November, 1899, rural free delivery was in successful operation from 383 distributing points, radiating over 40 States and 1 Territory, as follows:

Alabama	1	New Hampshire	5
Arkansas	1	New Jersey	7
Arizona	1	New York	24
California	14	North Carolina	1
Colorado	5	North Dakota	3
Connecticut	6	Ohio	49
Delaware	1	Oregon	3
Florida	4	Pennsylvania	15
Georgia	17	Rhode Island	5
Illinois	14	South Carolina	21
Iowa	23	Tennessee	6
Kansas	2	Texas	2
Louisiana	1	Utah	1
Maine	7	Vermont	6
Maryland	10	Virginia	4
Massachusetts	11	Washington	1
Michigan	15	West Virginia	7
Minnesota	7	Wisconsin	15
Nebraska	3	Total	383

Between the beginning of the fiscal year July 1, 1899, and the 1st of November, 1899, when the additional appropriation of $150,000 granted for the extension of the rural free delivery service previously established, which became available on said 1st day of July and exhausted on said 1st day of November, 1899, new service was established, as follows:

State.	Number of routes.	Population served.	State.	Number of routes.	Population served.
California	5	4,100	New Jersey	1	565
Colorado	3	2,525	New York	11	8,535
Connecticut	2	1,700	Ohio	38	26,040
Delaware	1	1,000	Oregon	2	1,490
Illinois	12	8,580	Pennsylvania	14	11,216
Indiana	25	18,307	Rhode Island	5	3,530
Iowa	21	11,791	South Carolina	2	1,200
Kansas	16	12,882	South Dakota	1	580
Kentucky	4	3,000	Tennessee	4	2,400
Maine	3	1,500	Texas	2	1,435
Maryland	1	1,500	Utah	1	2,000
Massachusetts	3	1,850	Vermont	3	1,800
Michigan	13	10,725	West Virginia	1	750
Minnesota	10	5,410	Wisconsin	19	14,167
Missouri	9	4,528
New Hampshire	11	14,025	Total	243	179,131

This list has been materially increased since.

It will thus be seen that up to November 1, 1899, rural free delivery had been extended to about 180,000 persons, at an annual cost of about 84 cents per capita. No account is taken in this estimate of the great increase of postal receipts (averaging from 50 to 75 per cent) which always follows the establishment of rural delivery, nor is any reduction made for the cost of fourth-class post-offices and star routes practically superseded by the new service, which have been or might be discontinued. There is ample and convincing proof of the success of this service to be found in the reports of the special agents appointed by the Post-Office Department to make investigation of this subject and of the experiments made.

There is strong proof also, Mr. Chairman, tending to show that, with prudent and economical administration, when once this branch of the service is reduced to a well-organized system and wisely extended as the public needs and improved local conditions may justify, it will be self-supporting. I am therefore heartily in favor of rural free delivery, and congratulate the committee in their generous response to the requirements of this branch of the public service and demands of the farmers of the country.

Post-Office Appropriation Bill.

OF

HON. HENRY H. BINGHAM,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 25, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. BINGHAM said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The paragraph on page 15, commencing at line 22, down to and including line 4 on page 16, reads as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $40,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper, and other supplies from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $33,870,000.

For railway post-office car service, $4,561,000.

There has been much misinformation scattered broadcast over the country in regard to the compensation paid to railroads for carrying the mail, and for the use of railway post-office car service. Some have contended that the mails should be paid for as freight; that the use of the postal cars is equivalent to the rent of a store-room, and other vagaries without limit have found exponents and advocates.

The postal service of the United States is unique in this, that it is the greatest postal system in the world in extent, in receipts, and expenditures, in perfection of dispatch and delivery, and in the accomplishment of the most excellent results with the least expenditure of money.

ITS EXTENT.

The population of the United States is distributed over 3,500,000 square miles of territory. Large cities—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco, Augusta, Me., Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, La., Minneapolis, Minn., Portland, Oreg.—suggest intervening distances of thousands of miles, and in all this vast area—sustaining 70,000,000 of busy people—the most excellent facilities for quick and frequent intercourse are afforded.

THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE AND PAY.

This service is in operation on 176,726 miles of road with a frequency that makes an annual travel of 287,591,269 miles, or an average of 1,627 miles for every mile of road, at a cost of 11.1 cents per mile of transportation. Twenty years ago the cost per mile was 10.88 cents, so that notwithstanding the postal revenues have increased 200 per cent, with a corresponding increase in weight of mails carried, this rate per mile of transportation has increased but a little over one-fifth of a cent a mile. The total tonnage in 1879 was 44,428,619 tons carried 1 mile, at 21½ cents per ton per mile. In 1898 the total tonnage had risen to 272,714,017 tons, while the cost had fallen to 12½ cents per ton per mile.

This is a marvelous showing, and could only have been brought about through a perfectly arranged system, as is provided in the act of March 3, 1873, under which the rate of compensation decreases as the volume of mail carried increases. Thus for 200 pounds per day the pay is $42.75 per mile per annum, and at the same rate for 5,000 pounds it would be $1,068.75 per mile; whereas the law fixes the pay at $171 per mile. Then 16,000 pounds additional must be carried to earn $171 per mile additional. This is the principle that has produced the low rate per mile for transportation, and is continuously operative in the same direction.

It has been formally published that the railroads receive an average of 40 cents per ton per mile for transporting the mail, and the suggestion coupled with it was that the rate should be reduced 25 per cent. Professor Adams and others ascertained that the average rate received by the railroads is 12½ cents per ton per mile, and now the suggestion that the pay be reduced 25 per cent is directed to the 12½ cents per ton per mile. In fact, 75 per cent of the whole weight of mails is carried now at less than 8 cents per ton per mile.

This 8 cents per ton per mile would be entirely too much for this mail transportation if it meant simply the transportation of tons of mail subject to the conditions under which freight is carried. But the conditions are so entirely different that no fair and competent critic would think for a moment of applying freight conditions and rates to the mail. This, because the mails are carried in frequent and broken shipments on passenger trains and in traveling post-offices, so that an average load of mail is from 4,000 to 5,000 pounds per full car.

On the other hand, 50,000 pounds is not a heavy load for a freight car, while the actual loading is often greater than 50,000 and reaches the limit at 100,000 pounds, and yet the weight of the postal car with its load and the weight of the freight car and its load are not far apart in total tonnage. Hence it is that a car of mail of 5,000 pounds, at 8 cents per ton, would earn but 20 cents per mile, while the freight car, with 50,000 pounds of fast freight, at 1½ cents per ton per mile, would earn 37½ cents per car per mile. This illustrates in few words the peculiar conditions under which the mails are carried.

The sliding scale of pay to railroads for carrying the mails is as follows:

SCHEDULE OF RATES FOR RAILWAY MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Average weight of mails per day carried over whole length of route.	Pay per mile per annum. Rates allowable under act of March 3, 1873.	Rates allowable under acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.	Rates allowable to land-grant railroads, being 80 per cent of allowance to other railroads, under act of July 12, 1876.	Intermediate weight warranting allowance of $1 per mile under the custom of the Department, subject to acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.
				Pounds.
200 to 500 pounds				12
500 pounds	75.00	64.12	51.30
500 to 1,000 pounds				20
1,000 pounds	100.00	85.50	68.40
1,000 to 1,500 pounds				20
1,500 pounds	125.00	106.87	85.50
1,500 to 2,000 pounds				20
2,000 pounds	150.00	128.25	102.60
2,000 to 3,500 pounds				60
3,500 pounds	175.00	149.62	119.70
3,500 to 5,000 pounds				60
5,000 pounds	200.00	171.00	136.80
For every additional 2,000 pounds	25.00	21.37	17.10
Over 5,000 pounds				80

No allowance is made for weights not justifying the addition of $1.

Rates allowable per mile per annum for use of railway post-office cars when authorized.

Railway post-office cars—
40 feet, per daily line	$25
45 feet, per daily line	30
50 feet, per daily line	40
55-60 feet, per daily line	50

To constitute a "line" of railway post-office cars between given points, sufficient railway post-office cars must be provided and run to make a trip daily each way between those points.

RAILWAY POST-OFFICE CARS.

I wish to call attention to the frequent statements on the floor of the House that the compensation allowed for the railway post-office cars is an improper expenditure of money and an abuse. I have observed that in most of these statements on the floor of the House the vital facts in regard to the payment for the use of the postal cars have not been presented. The statements give the rate per annum received by some road for a line of railway post-office cars. Even some who have attempted to discuss this question appear not to know the difference between "a single daily line of postal cars" and the number of cars that may be necessary to operate the line.

As a result of this confusion, one who has attempted to enlighten the public on this subject (claiming that on a certain line ten 60-foot postal cars earned $219,000 per annum) has found it necessary to issue a supplement saying that his former statement should be changed to "10 lines 60-foot post-office cars." He might have added that on the line receiving $219,000 per annum for postal cars about 30 full 60-foot postal cars are employed in operating the 10 lines, instead of 10 cars, as would have been generally understood from the original statement. The true analysis of the compensation for the use of railway post-office cars is this: For a line of 40-foot railway post-office cars each way daily (over a route, say, 150 miles in length) the pay would be $3,750 per annum; therefore to earn this sum these cars must be run 109,500 miles per annum, making the earnings per mile run 3.43 cents.

Now, as compared with passenger-car earnings I quote from testimony before the Senate committee on passenger-coach earnings as follows:

It is entirely possible for a passenger coach on the main line of our road to earn over $200,000 a year. It can make a trip twice over the road from Chicago to Burlington in a day, with fare $6. The cars are generally, on the first-class trains, crowded. They could contain 60. If they contained an average of 50 passengers, that would be $300 one way, or $600 a day, and over $219,000 a year. The car itself costs only about $5,000.

This would make the earnings $1.34 per car per mile run, and hence it is clear, from the great difference between the amount paid for use of the postal car, with the pay for the limited weight of mail carried in it, and the earning capacity of a passenger coach, that the Government really enjoys an advantage in its transportation. Again, the earnings for passengers have been placed in the evidence before the Senate committee at 20 cents per ton per mile. On this basis the ascertained rate of 12½ cents per ton per mile for mail shows that the passenger rate is 60 per cent greater than the mail pay per ton. Illustrating this, I give in comparison actual passenger rates and mail earnings as follows:

From New York to Chicago:
Mail per ton	$71.39
Passengers per ton (10 to ton), actual fare	200.00
From New York to St. Louis:
Mail per ton	87.52
Passengers per ton (10 to ton)	242.50
From New York to New Orleans:
Mail per ton	117.18
Passengers per ton (10 to ton)	340.00
From New York to San Francisco:
Mail per ton	265.63

Some statisticians have fixed the number of passengers per ton at 15; and if this number of passengers had been used in this computation, the earnings per ton for passengers would be 50 per cent greater in each instance; but the 10 passengers to the ton is a most conservative statement, and it is surely within the actual number of passengers per ton.

When I found the foregoing facts, I will frankly say that I was astonished; and while the gentlemen of the House who are members of the Postal Commission of course have this information, I am sure many members of this House, as well as myself, had no idea that passenger rates were so greatly in excess of the rates paid by the Government for carrying the mail. The mail and passenger service are performed on the same trains and are very closely allied. These lines cover the great mail routes, and the fact that the passengers pay 200 per cent per ton more than the Government pays per ton for its mail must go far to clear the atmosphere of all of the indefinite and baseless charges which have been made against the present rates of mail pay.

In this connection I would say that emphasis has been laid upon the rates paid by commutation passengers, and it has been claimed that this commutation passenger service is more closely allied to the mail service than any other form of traffic. The consensus of opinion, however, by those familiar with the two services is that they are not approximately alike, because in the commutation business the transportation is limited by its character to short hauls with cars filled to their full capacity, while the rates are so arranged as to produce adequate compensation for the work, the shortest hauls being charged the greatest rate.

By far the greatest number of commuters use the cars for the shorter distances and consequently pay the higher rates and the actual result of the commutation is about 1 cent per mile, but the average earnings per passenger on a road having a very large commutation business is 1.82 cents per mile.

The postal service is rendered under no such conditions, but is a continuous service made up of pouches going off and coming on the trains every few miles, with other peculiar requirements, which I will not take the time to state here. This subject of commutation service and rates has been very ably stated by Mr. C. Stuart Patterson in a speech before the National Board of Trade, in which he says:

> It can readily be seen that the conditions are such as to render any comparison inapplicable. In the first place, a commutation passenger rate is made, as a general rule, only for short distances; secondly, it is based upon the theory that by allowing to the commuter lower rates you will obtain full loads for passenger cars, and you will obtain, also, a large amount of incidental business in the payment of full passenger rates by noncommuting members of the family and by visitors, and in the incidental transportation of freight and packages for the commuter and his family; and it is based, also, upon the theory that a certain proportion of the transportation sold to the commuter will not be used, and that, therefore, the railroad will receive higher pay for that which is used.
> It is obvious that these conditions are in no sense applicable to the transportation of the mail. Assuming that a passenger car seats 60 people, and assuming a commutation rate of 1 cent per mile per passenger, that car would earn, if 60 passengers were carried at the commutation rate, 60 cents per mile run. If the car were only half loaded and 30 passengers were carried at the commutation rate, it would earn 30 cents per mile. Yet these rates are largely in excess of railway mail rates.

POSTAL CLERKS.

There is another feature of the postal service which is deserving of especial attention in estimating the value and character of the service rendered by railroads. It is the relation of the postal clerks to the subject of transportation. Mr. Bradley, Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, ascertained that the total mail tonnage is over 283,000,000 tons per annum. The report of the Postmaster-General for 1899, shows that the postal clerks travel over the railroads in the discharge of their duty in distributing the mail 358,743,151 miles per annum, and hence, on an average, a postal clerk travels a mile for every 1,600 pounds of mail moved 1 mile.

This indicates very clearly the extraordinary character of the mail service. Consider, for a moment, 16,000 pounds of express matter in a car, accompanied by 10 men, or 50,000 pounds of freight in a car, accompanied by 30 men, and the work of postal distribution in transit, with its vast army of clerks, will stand out as a peculiar and distinct service, and one of the highest value, with which no comparison can be made so far as any class of railroad freight traffic is concerned. The burden of perfecting the mail service of the country at almost every point is thrown upon the railroads.

This will appear by noting the last report of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, who describes the work of city distribution in railway post-offices by railway postal clerks. They handled 519,870,465 pieces of mail matter intended for city distribution. A far larger number of pieces were handled by city distributors sent out to meet incoming trains. This work, from this date on, is to be all thrown upon the Railway Mail Service. It will thus be seen that not only the ordinary distribution of mails in transit is performed on the cars, but the space and facilities which would be required in the city post-office are thrown upon the postal cars in which the separation for city delivery is performed.

The General Superintendent of Railway Mail Service states that the separation for city delivery is commenced hundreds of miles away from the city of destination, and he says the Department will be able to provide this improved service at a comparatively small increase of cost and without retarding the distribution of the regular mail received in railway post-offices. There can be no increase in rate of pay to railroads by reason of this separation, because this refinement of distribution does not increase the weight.

MINORITY REPORT.

The minority report on the pending bill is a remarkable public document. I really doubt if there is a single member of this committee who could explain and make clear the statistics given in that report.

As preliminary to some remarks on that report, I wish to insert in the RECORD the laws governing the rates of pay for the transportation on railroad routes.

LAWS RESPECTING PAY FOR THE TRANSPORTATION OF MAILS ON RAILROAD ROUTES.

[For the information of parties concerned, the sections and paragraphs hereto appended are transcribed from the Revised Statutes and from acts of Congress making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department.]

The Postmaster-General shall, in all cases, decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed.—Act of March 3, 1879, section 3, 20 Stats., 358.

SEC. 3999. If the Postmaster-General is unable to contract for carrying the mail on any railway route at a compensation not exceeding the maximum rates herein provided, or for what he may deem a reasonable and fair compensation, he may separate the letter mail from the other mail, and contract, either with or without advertising, for carrying such letter mail by horse express or otherwise, at the greatest speed that can reasonably be obtained, and for carrying the other mail in wagons or otherwise, at a slower rate of speed.

SEC. 4000. Every railway company carrying the mail shall carry on any train which may run over its road, and without extra charge therefor, all mailable matter directed to be carried thereon, with the person in charge of the same.—Act of March 3, 1873.

SEC. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed; and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $300, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds; the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.—Act of March 3, 1873.

ADDITIONAL PAY FOR RAILWAY POST-OFFICE CARS.

SEC. 4003. In case any railroad company now furnishing railway post-office cars shall refuse to provide such cars, such company shall not be entitled to any increase of compensation under the provisions of the next section.

SEC. 4004. Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars, and $50 per annum for 55 to 60-foot cars.

NOTE.—This statute does not authorize a pro rata compensation to be paid for cars which are less than 40 feet in length.

And hereafter when any railroad company fail or refuse to provide railway post-office cars when required by the Post-Office Department, or shall fail or refuse to provide suitable safety heaters and safety lamps therefor, with such number of saws and axes to each car for use in case of accident as may be required by the Post-Office Department, said company shall have its pay reduced 10 per cent on the rates fixed in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of July 12, 1876, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," and as further amended by the act of June 17, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes."—Act of March 1, 1881, 21 Stats., 375.

That all cars or parts of cars used for the railway mail service shall be of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner as shall be required by the Postmaster-General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, and lighted by and at the expense of the railroad companies.—Act of March 3, 1879, section 4, 20 Stats., 358.

MAILS TO BE WEIGHED BY AGENTS OF THE DEPARTMENT.

* * * And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes, as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874," approved March 3, 1873; and he is hereby directed to have the mails weighed as often as now provided by law by the employees of the Post-Office Department, and have the weights stated and verified to him by said employees under such instructions as he may consider just to the Post-Office Department and the railroad companies.—Act of March 3, 1875.

REDUCTION OF 10 PER CENT.

* * * Provided, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, for transportation of mails on railroad routes by reducing the compensation of all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 10 per cent per annum from the rates fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight. * * *—Act of July 12, 1876, section 1.

ADDITIONAL REDUCTION OF 5 PER CENT.

And provided further, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, for transportation of mails on railroad routes by reducing the compensation to all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 5 per cent per annum from the rates for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1876.—Act of June 17, 1878.

ALLOWANCE ON LAND-GRANT ROADS.

SEC. 4001. All railway companies to which the United States have furnished aid, by grant of lands, right of way, or otherwise, shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such price is fixed by law, the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.—Act of March 3, 1873.

That railroad companies whose railroad was constructed in whole or in part by a land grant made by Congress, on the condition that the mails should be transported over their road at such price as Congress should by law direct, shall receive only 80 per cent of the compensation authorized by this act.—Act of July 12, 1876, section 13.

PENALTY FOR REFUSAL TO CARRY MAILS ON FASTEST TRAINS.

* * * And if any railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails, when required by the Post-Office Department, upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent of the amount provided by law.—Act of March 3, 1885.

This report expresses the opinion that the main cause of the deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department is the cost of transportation allowed and paid to railroad companies on inland mails.

It speaks throughout of "contracts," and says the companies very properly secure the best terms they can from the Government to perform this service, and calls attention to "the excessive pay for the transportation of mails, not with the view of striking out this item of the appropriation bill, for that could not be properly done at this time under contract relations between the carriers and the Government."

The minority report is altogether in error in stating that contract relations exist between these carriers and the Government. This is not the fact. There are no time contract relations between the railroads and the Government guaranteeing future payments. There are not only no time contract relations, but Congress determines the rates to be paid in accordance with the laws above cited.

It seems strange that the minority committee, overlooking this vital fact, speak throughout their report of "contract relations" with railroads, and of the companies securing "the best terms they can from the Government."

The report says it costs 8 cents per pound to carry the mails. This 8 cents a pound proposition, by whomsoever made, has long since been exploded.

Professor Adams has ascertained that the average cost of carrying a ton of mail 1 mile is 12½ cents. Others have reached substantially the same result. This includes pay for postal cars. Therefore 1 pound is carried 2,000 miles for 12½ cents and 8 cents would carry it 1,280 miles.

The report says, incorrectly, that the average haul is 813 miles, which would make the cost a little over 5 cents per pound. But this is not the full extent of this 8 cents a pound inaccuracy.

The recent weighing of all mail matter, made by the Post-Office Department and published under date of February 21, 1900, enables any one of intelligence to demonstrate beyond any doubt or question that the average haul of mail does not very much exceed 400 miles. Therefore, with the rate per ton per mile fixed at 12½ cents, the amount paid to the railroads for carrying the mail is about 2½ cents per pound the average distance and not 8 cents. Hence the minority report is not only in error, but grossly wrong and misleading on this point in giving its sanction to the idea that an average of 8 cents per pound is paid to railroads for carrying the mails.

Then the report states that express companies pay the railroad companies 40 per cent of their earnings. Others, and among them Professor Adams, place the figure at 50 per cent of their earnings.

Without going into details, this vital fact in connection with express traffic must be kept in mind, viz: That the portion of the express business carried under conditions even approximately similar to conditions controlling in mail transportation, is that part covered by packages of 4 pounds and less in weight, as that is the limit of weight of mailable matter. Taking this class of traffic, it will be found that railroads receive very much more per ton per mile for the express than for the mail.

I call attention to the blind and misleading form in which other statements are presented in the minority report. For instance: "Fixed rate for haul of 200 pounds of mail, average distance a mile (365 days), $94.77." The impression upon reading this would be that for 200 pounds of mail daily over 1 mile of road the pay would be $94.77. In fact, the pay for 200 pounds daily in not less than 730 shipments per year, or 730 miles of transportation, would be $42.75 per mile of road per annum.

In the greater number of these cases the shipments would be 1,460 times a year and over per mile. With the 300,000 pounds per day illustration (and there is but one route, New York to Philadelphia, that carries that amount), the pay for weight would be $3,323.34 per mile per annum, and this mail would be carried in 29,940 shipments per annum, or 80 per day. This is altogether a different question from a mere transportation of tonnage.

The minority report gives what purports to be the annual revenue of a passenger car and the annual revenues of a mail car, but no intimation is given as to work performed—that is, the mileage run per annum—in each case, and without such information anyone can see that no comparison is possible.

The annual revenue from any car used for any purpose depends upon the number of miles the car is run. No comparison of any value whatever can be made without such data, and hence the minority report concerning car earnings, in plain words, means nothing, absolutely nothing.

Professor Adams has testified that the cost to the Government per ton for mail transportation has been reduced since 1879 39 per cent, while passenger rates have been decreased 21.4 per cent. It will thus be seen that there is a principle at work, an evolution of the law, reducing the cost of transporting the mails, and it must be clear to anyone that with this decrease continuing, so far as railroad transportation is concerned, a profit on postal business will soon be reached. The last report of the Postmaster-General shows that this result is near.

It is not necessary to go further into the details in connection with the errors of this minority report, but prominent among its mistakes I note especially:

A. The statement that 8 cents per pound is paid for carrying mails.

B. That the express companies carry the mails from Eastern cities to Chicago for 1 cent a pound.

C. Table bottom page 2. It defies the initiated to understand it.

E. Table bottom page 2. Second footnote incorrect.

F. Details in the tables on pages 2 and 3 entirely unreliable.

G. The citation, page 4, as to cost and use of postal cars.

H. The assumption that the service is rendered under time contract relations between the Government and the carriers.

OUR SERVICE COMPARED WITH ENGLAND'S.

Mr. Chairman, there is beyond question much misunderstanding in the public mind in regard to relative economy in the conduct of our postal establishment as compared with the postal establishment of other nations.

It is true that the United States is far ahead of any other nation in the volume of its business, as shown by its expenditure of $101,000,000 and its receipts of $95,000,000 for 1899. The only nation approximating the United States in postal affairs is Great Britain. The United States covers a great area—3,500,000 square miles—and the distances the mails are to be carried for 70,000,000 people are within the following limits:

	Miles.
Vanceboro, Me., and Seattle, Wash.	3,902
Vanceboro, Me., and Key West, Fla.	2,136
Key West, Fla., and San Diego, Cal.	3,137
San Diego, Cal., and Seattle, Wash.	1,567
Boston, Mass., and San Francisco, Cal.	3,407
Washington, D. C., and San Francisco, Cal.	3,211
Savannah, Ga., and Los Angeles, Cal.	2,661

These immense distances, with the great intermediate centers of population of Buffalo, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Chicago, and St. Louis indicate most forcibly the great length of haul necessary to the interchange of mails in this country. It is to be noted that the mails do not follow straight lines. A letter posted at Key West, Fla., for Port Townsend, Wash., crosses the country diagonally and travels about 3,987 miles. This subject of the great length of haul must be kept constantly in mind as a natural, reasonable, and controlling factor in the cost of transporting the mail in order to a correct and intelligent understanding of the conditions under which our postal system must be operated. Then, too, 8,460 postal clerks are required to make this great distribution in transit.

Turn now to Great Britain. The United Kingdom—England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales—comprises an area of about 121,000 square miles. The greatest distance that can be measured from Lands End, England, to Dunnet, Scotland, is less than 700 miles. But the point of greatest significance in a comparison between the postal systems of the United States and Great Britain is this: The postmaster-general of Great Britain in his annual reports has repeatedly stated that 85 per cent of the mail matter of the Kingdom is delivered in England and Wales, and 30 per cent of that in the London district. Now, the area of England and Wales is but 58,000 square miles (population about 26,000,000).

The longest haul out of London within this district (London to Carlisle) is not over 300 miles, 140 miles less than the distance from New York to Pittsburg. Bear in mind that the combined area of the States of Massachusetts and New York is 57,485 square miles (population about 8,000,000), and that notwithstanding the population of England and Wales is more than three times that of Massachusetts and New York, yet these two States yield a net postal revenue of over five and one-half million dollars, or a net revenue of 70 cents per capita.

At the same ratio England and Wales should show a profit of $18,200,000; but Great Britain shows no such profit. If 85 per cent of the postal business of the United States were transacted in Massachusetts and New York, the net revenue on the ratio furnished by the existing business in these two States would be about $22,000,000 per annum. Thus, when conditions as to length of haul and density of population are taken into account—and no reasonable or valuable conclusion is possible without doing so—it appears beyond cavil or question that the postal system of Great Britain is not superior to that of the United States from any point of view.

DEFICIENCY IN POSTAL REVENUE.

What I have just stated explains in part why the mail service in this country shows a deficiency, and why it is reasonable that it should do so. But aside from rates of postage charged and cost of transportation, there is another strong factor that constitutes a most serious obstacle to the economical conduct of the postal business, and that is the fact that a proportion equal to one-fifth of the paid mail matter handled yields no postage whatever to the Government. This is made clear by the recent weighing of all mails mailed in the United States, the results of which were published by the Post-Office Department February 21, 1900:

Paid mail matter mailed per annum:
First-class	pounds..	94,888,341
Second-class	do....	394,417,505
Third and fourth class	do....	145,874,518
Total paid matter	do....	635,180,364
Total revenue June 30, 1899		$95,021,384.00
Revenue per pound	cents..	14.944
Free matter:
Second-class	pounds..	32,750,550
Government	do....	96,132,692
Total	do....	128,883,242
If postage at average rate for paid matter were collected for this free matter, the result would be per annum		$19,260,311.68
The deficit June 30, 1899, was		6,610,776.75
Therefore, if postage were collected on this free matter, the result would be, instead of a deficiency, a surplus of		12,649,534.93

The weight of the equipment is not included in these figures.

It will thus be seen that the total amount of paid matter mailed per annum was 635,180,364 pounds, on which a total revenue of $95,021,384 was collected. This shows a revenue per pound of 14.944 cents. The total amount of free matter carried was 128,883,242 pounds. If this free matter had been subject to the same average rate of postage, there would have been collected from it the sum of $19,260,311.68.

I am able, therefore, to make good the statement made to the House April 26, when I said I would be able to prove that the deficiencies in the postal service are due to an entirely different cause from that claimed by those who oppose this measure.

The deficiency reported for June 30, 1899, was $6,610,776.75.

If the average rate of postage had been collected on this free matter, instead of a deficiency there would have resulted a surplus of $12,649,534.93.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN WEIGHING.

The public press recently contained startling headlines of great frauds in weighing the mail. The interest of a member of the Post-Office Committee was aroused, and he addressed a letter to the Post-Office Department for information, and the answer is so instructive that, with his permission, I will give the correspondence:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT DIVISION,
Washington, April 21, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of even date, which I will quote, as you desire specific replies:

Hon. W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

SIR: It was some time since stated in the public press that there is on file in your office an affidavit of B. C. Fechtig to the effect that when he was employed as station agent on the Colorado Midland Railway he was directed to and did fraudulently aid in "padding" the mail on the said road.

I will thank you, if you have it on your files, for information concerning this matter, as follows:

First. The date of the affidavit.

Second. The name of the station at which B. C. Fechtig was employed at the time he says he committed the fraud.

Third. What was the date of the weighing in question?

Fourth. What was the number and termini of the Colorado Midland mail route on which the station at which Fechtig was employed was situated?

Fifth. What was the average weight of mails per day and pay per mile on that route prior to the weighing in which fraud is alleged, the same data for weighing when Fechtig was station agent, and the same data for weighings and adjustment since?

Sixth. Was it possible for Fechtig to have been concerned in padding the mails passing over the Colorado Midland Railway, the weight of which would not have been shown on the route on which he was located?

An early reply will oblige.

Very respectfully,

SMITH McPHERSON.

In reply, I have the honor to state—

1. An affidavit signed by B. C. Fechtig was filed in this office in November last. It appears to have been sworn to on the 2d day of November, 1899, but the date at the head of the affidavit is October 31, 1899.

2. The name of the station at which Mr. Fechtig states he was employed is Newcastle, Colo.

3. The date on which the weighing in question commenced was April 16, 1894.

4. Newcastle is on Colorado Midland route, No. 165039, the termini of which are Aspen Junction (n. o.) and Newcastle.

5. The average daily weight on this route for the term preceding the weight of 1894 was 528 pounds; for the term commencing July 1, 1894, 113 pounds, and for the term commencing July 1, 1898, 141 pounds. The pay per mile per annum for the term prior to 1894 was $64.98; for the term beginning July 1, 1894, $42.75, and for the term beginning July 1, 1898, $42.75.

6. As compensation for railroad mail service is based on the average daily weight, no weight not shown in the figures above given, could have affected the compensation on this route. Under the rules and instructions of the Department in relation to mail weighings, it would have been impossible for the mails in question to have passed over this route and not been reported, unless there was dereliction of duty on the part of some postal employee.

The weight claimed to have been sent was 2 sacks of 125 pounds each, or 250 pounds; this, it is claimed, was sent during the thirty-day weighing period. The average per day, as affecting the whole weighing, would have been 8¼ pounds. The Department allows, under the law, $42.75 per mile per annum for an average daily weight of not exceeding 200 pounds carried over the whole length of the route; hence it will be noted that even though the two sacks mentioned were carried during this weighing, they would not be enough, added to the 113 pounds daily average on the route, to bring it up to an amount which would have entitled the company to any additional compensation.

Very respectfully,

W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. SMITH McPHERSON,
House of Representatives.

This correspondence shows that, so far as the Government's interests are involved, the alleged fraud, if actually perpetrated, had no effect whatever.

Trade of Porto Rico.

OF
HON. WILLIAM A. JONES,
OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, April 11, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes, and the Senate amendments thereto—

Mr. JONES of Virginia said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] who has just taken his seat concluded his speech in support of the pending bill by asking us upon this side of the Chamber, with some attempt at dramatic effect, what we propose to do for Puerto Rico.

Speaking only for myself, but, as I believe, voicing the sentiment of every Democrat upon this floor, I answer the gentleman by saying that first of all I would prevent, had I the power to do so, the consummation of the cruel wrong which the advocates of this measure of oppression would perpetrate upon a helpless and inoffending people, to whom instead we promised the blessings of liberty and happiness.

I would not withhold from them, as this bill is designed to do, the guaranties of the American Constitution and the protection of the American flag. I would give to them a Territorial form of government, such as is enjoyed by every other American Territory, a system of local self-government certainly no less free and liberal than that which it is proposed shall be given to the people of the Hawaiian Islands in the measure which but recently passed this House. I would treat them as citizens of the United States and not as conquered subjects, possessing no rights which the President and the Congress of the United States are bound to respect. I would leave in their hands the power to protect themselves against the rapacious greed of those in whose interest, as I firmly believe, this measure of cruelty and perfidy has been cunningly and devilishly devised, a power of which this bill absolutely and unqualifiedly robs them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, that the Republican leaders in this House should have selected this day, the anniversary of that upon which the ratifications of the treaty of peace were exchanged—a treaty by the terms of which the island of Puerto Rico became a part of the territory of the United States—to enact this measure of injustice and bad faith must be incomprehensible even to themselves. To me it appears the very irony of relentless fate, the refinement of a studied and shameless cruelty, that such an anniversary should have been chosen to mark the departure of the American Congress from those principles of liberty and justice which lie at the very foundation of our Republic. It was to be assumed, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Indiana would have devoted at least a part of his address to an exposition of the governmental features of this bill. That he has not done so is to my mind a confession that they are indefensible and that the least said about them the better.

During the discussion of the despotic rule under which this bill is being considered, a rule which limits all debate to three and a half hours, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] defended the action of the Committee on Rules, of which he is a distinguished member, upon the ground that the measure had been thoroughly discussed heretofore, and that there was therefore no good purpose to be served by permitting any extended debate now. How the gentleman could reconcile that statement with the notorious facts in the case I can not understand. The bill covers 28 pages, 22 of which relate to and purport to be a complete system of civil government for Puerto Rico. Not one line of the civil-government feature of this bill has ever been discussed or even read in this House.

Indeed, I venture the statement that not one in ten of its members have either read or in any other way acquired a knowledge of even the more important of the many governmental features of this measure. A bill providing a complete system of government for a million of people, containing features unknown to any Territorial form of government on earth, and for which the history of the world is to be searched in vain for a precedent, is to be rushed through this House under whip and spur, with no reasonable opportunity afforded for either an examination or a discussion of its provisions.

In the limited time at my command I can not be expected to attempt an analysis of the measure. Many of its features are so outrageous, so iniquitous, so undemocratic, and so un-American that when they become known and understood they can not but offend the moral sense and shock the conscience of the American people—a people who abhor injustice, despise hypocrisy, and contemn dishonesty.

The first amendment proposed by the Senate changes the name of the island to that of Porto Rico. For more than four centuries this island, "the pearl of the Antilles," has been called "Puerto Rico," and to that name its inhabitants are deeply and profoundly attached. Against this change they have earnestly protested, and yet, to the many other wrongs which they will be called upon to endure, should the bill pass this House, is to be added the humiliation of being deprived of their country's name—a name which they revere and love and which, in their estimation, is nothing less than sacred. Nor with them is it purely a question of sentiment. Puerto Rico is their historical name; their records, both church and state, bear that name.

Every deed and other muniment of title contains the name of Puerto Rico—a name that is now to be blotted out because, forsooth, some Republican politician, ignorant of its derivation and meaning, and insensible to the wishes and the feelings of those who are attached to it, has abitrarily and wickedly determined that it shall be so. President McKinley, after advising with the Board on Geographic Names, provided, by Executive order, that the name should be spelled Puerto Rico. Among the reasons for retaining the present name advanced by the Hon. Henry Gannett, president of the board, I am permitted to quote the following, taken from a letter recently addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs. Mr. Gannett says:

> Puerto Rico consists of two good Spanish words, meaning rich port. This form is the one originally given by the Spaniards more than four centuries ago, and consistently and uniformly followed by the people of the island to this day. It is their name—a name which they have the same right to expect other people will adopt and use as we have to expect that others will adopt and use the personal names we bear. It is the form universally used by Spanish-speaking people everywhere. Porto Rico is a corrupted form, the word "porto" finding no place in the Spanish language or dictionaries.

In a communication, also addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the representatives of Puerto Rico, lately in this city, urged in pathetic terms that no change should be made in the spelling of the name of their island home. They say that there does not even exist the pretext of changing the name to Americanize it, since porto is not an English but a Portuguese word.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that if the policies of imperialism and the demands of sordid greed, as set forth in this bill, are not to be resisted, we may at least leave to the people of Puerto Rico such consolation as they may find in the continued use of a name endeared to them by the history and traditions of more than four hundred years.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to the discussion of some of the more practical provisions of this measure. In every essential particular the government which you are about to provide for Puerto Rico is a despotism. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoints the governor. In like manner there is to be appointed a secretary, an attorney-general, a treasurer, an auditor, a commissioner of the interior, and a commissioner of education, who, together with five other persons, also to be appointed by the President, are to constitute an executive council, at least five of whom shall be native inhabitants of the island. The local legislative powers are vested in a legislative assembly, of which the executive council is to constitute the upper house.

The house of delegates is to consist of 35 members, to be elected biennially by the qualified voters. Only such persons shall be allowed to vote for delegates as have been residents of the island for one year and who possess the other educational or property qualifications prescribed by the military laws in force on the 1st day of March of this year, which qualifications shall be subject, mark you, "to such modifications and additional qualifications and such regulations and restrictions as to registration as may be prescribed by the executive council. In other words, the executive council, appointed by the President, may prescribe such additional qualifications for the elective franchise as may limit the exercise of the right of suffrage to a mere handful of the inhabitants of Puerto Rico, if, perchance, it shall so desire. This places it within the power of six, or a bare majority, of the members of the executive council, every one of whom is appointed by the President and may not even be residents of the island, to prescribe the qualifications of the voters, and thus dominate the election of the lower house of the legislative assembly, virtually making the executive council the lawmaking power of Puerto Rico.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is the free, local self-government which was solemnly promised the inhabitants of Puerto Rico! Was ever before such a travesty upon justice enacted by the American Congress? As a scheme for the despotic government of a subject colony it can not be improved upon. As a means to reward political favorites and to provide for broken-down Republican politicians there is nothing like unto it, either in the heavens above or the earth beneath.

The salaries, with one exception, are all to be paid by the poor Puerto Ricans. The governor is to receive $8,000 and perquisites; the secretary, $4,000; the attorney-general, $4,000; the treasurer, $5,000; the auditor, $4,000; the commissioner of education, $3,000; a chief justice of the supreme court, $5,000, and each of the four associate justices, $4,500; a marshal, $3,000; a United States district judge, $5,000; a United States district attorney, $4,000, and a United States district marshal, $3,500.

The President is also permitted, of course with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three commissioners, two of whom may be nonresidents, at a salary of $5,000 each per annum, to revise the laws of Puerto Rico. All of these high and mighty officials are allowed "all necessary clerks and other assistants," the salaries of which are also to be paid out of the insular treasury. These salaries are far in excess of those paid in my own and many other of the Commonwealths of this Union, and in the aggregate constitute a sum sufficiently large to be a heavy burden upon the impoverished people of Puerto Rico.

Unlike every other Territory, including that of Hawaii, the Puerto Ricans are to have no Delegate to Congress. Instead, they will be permitted to send a commissioner to Washington to look after departmental work, who is to be paid by the United States $5,000 per annum. What his duties are to be the bill does not disclose. He is not even given the privilege of warming his heels in the cloakrooms of Congress. Hawaii, with one-tenth of the population of this island, is to send a Delegate to Congress, who, like all other Territorial Delegates, will have no vote, but will at least have the right to speak upon the floor of this House.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding Puerto Rico is to be treated as if it were not a part of the United States, and its inhabitants are hereafter to be known as "the people of Porto Rico," this bill provides that "all officials authorized by this act shall, before entering upon the duties of their respective offices, take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Porto Rico." The people of Puerto Rico are either citizens of the United States or they are aliens. This bill denies to them the right of citizenship, excludes them from the enjoyment of the protection of the Constitution of the United States, and yet requires their numerous and high-salaried officials to take an oath to support that Constitution!

The Constitution is the supreme law of the United States; inoperative, you Republicans tell us, in Puerto Rico, because Puerto Rico is not a part of the United States, and yet the officials of this island are required by this bill to be sworn to support it. They are to administer the laws of Puerto Rico and those of the United States not locally inapplicable exclusive of the Constitution, and yet they must swear to support that Constitution. This measure is to constitute the organic law of Puerto Rico. The Constitution of the United States is by express intendment not to be operative there, and yet the officials in Puerto Rico are to swear to support it. Denied, as the Puerto Ricans are, the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution, refused its protection and its blessings, unable to obey its provisions and requirements because not a part of their organic law, they are yet required to swear to support it and every line of it. Was there ever such an impossible legislative requirement, such an anomalous monstrosity as this upon the statute books of any country beneath the skies?

There is just one other feature of this bill to which I desire to direct the attention of the House. Despotic as are its provisions throughout, flagrant as it is with injustice to a prostrate and helpless people, and bristling as it does with inconsistencies, if I were asked to name the feature most glaringly obnoxious and most repugnant to my own sense of justice, I would unhesitatingly say it was that which puts into the hands of a carpetbag executive council, with only the approval of a carpetbag governor, the power to grant and dispose of every franchise, right, privilege, and concession of a public or quasi-public nature in the island.

Mr. Speaker, I venture to affirm that no such dangerous and absolute power as this was ever before lodged in an irresponsible carpetbag government. If this bill becomes a law, this single provision is capable of being made to work the complete and well-nigh actual enslavement of practically every man, woman, and child in Puerto Rico. If such arbitrary and limitless power over the franchises of this island is given to an executive council, the majority of whose membership may not be, and will not be, residents of the island, sixty days will not elapse after the organization of the government here proposed before corporate wealth will practically own it. To-day there are no corporations in Puerto Rico. It will not be long after this bill becomes a law before organized capital will own everything of any value in sight, including the very soil. For months the representatives of great railroad, telegraph, and other corporations have been besieging Congress to grant them the most valuable concessions in this island.

I have reason to believe that syndicates are now being organized to buy up practically all the rich sugar, coffee, and tobacco lands. A large part of these lands are heavily mortgaged and greatly depreciated in value. In truth, they were laid waste by the hurricane of 1898, and their nominal owners will be the prey of the greedy speculators who are behind this obnoxious bill. I say behind this bill, because no sane man believes that such a provision as this crept into it by accident. It is the handiwork of a crafty and desperately wicked mind. It was conceived in greed and, if suffered to remain in the bill, will be mercilessly executed. In the Hawaiian act it is expressly provided that—

> The legislature shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress.

The legislature of Hawaii is not even permitted to grant private charters; and no corporation, domestic or foreign, can acquire or hold real estate in Hawaii in excess of 1,000 acres. Under the provisions of this bill the sugar trust may acquire every acre of sugar land and the American Tobacco Company every acre of tobacco land in the island of Puerto Rico, and force its inhabitants, under pain of starvation, to cultivate them at a daily wage of 10 cents.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that there are no serpents or other reptiles in Puerto Rico; but if this bill is passed in its present shape, it will not be many days before human vipers, more dangerous than the crawling snake, will infest its borders.

It can not be doubted but that the franchise clause in this bill was drafted to accomplish just what I have endeavored to demonstrate would inevitably follow its passage. Practically all the valuable lands of Hawaii have for years been owned by corporations—not so with Puerto Rico. And yet the Hawaiian Territorial act safe-guards its franchises, and protects its people, as far as they can now be protected, from the curse of land monoply. Is it because there is little left in Hawaii upon which corporate greed can feed and fatten that this Republican Congress has treated it so much more justly than it proposes to treat Puerto Rico? Perhaps, after all, this legislation is incited only by a desire to make the civil-government act of Puerto Rico serve as a precedent for that which is to follow for the Philippines. Although there are many valuable concessions to be disposed of in Puerto Rico, they are as nothing compared to those which exist in the Philippines. The syndicates, trusts, and monopolies are well aware of this, and it is this knowledge, born of cupidity, which has fastened upon the Republican party the deadly policy of imperialism. I know of no other way to account for the discrimination of the Republican party in its legislation for Hawaii.

There surely can be no question of race prejudice involved, for only one-fifth of the inhabitants of Hawaii are white, while seven-tenths of those of Puerto Rico belong to the Caucasian race.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one thing further I desire to say. You Republicans deny that the Constitution follows the flag. Your slogan is that "trade follows the flag." To this extent only have our recent experiences proven that to be true: The facts of history, recent history, at least, prove that the products of our distilleries and breweries follow the American flag wherever it goes. During the fiscal year of 1897 the entire exports of American distilled and malt liquors to Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines amounted to $31,076, whilst during the last calendar year the sum total was $1,446,979. If we have not carried to our new possessions the protection of the Constitution and the blessings of liberty, we have surely carried to them the curse of the saloon.

However I may differ from my Republican friends as to the Constitution following the flag, there is no room to doubt that whisky is following "Old Glory," and is following it with alarming rapidity and in alarming quantities. Not only is it following the flag, but it is doing its deadly work wherever the American soldier has planted it. When the American Army entered Manila, there were not more than one or two saloons in that city, and we have the testimony of no less a person than Prof. Jacob G. Schurman, president of the first Philippine Commission, to the effect that he had "never seen a Filipino drunkard." Now there are said to be about 500 liquor saloons in the city, and drunkenness is almost universal. This same distinguished American is authority for the statement that "the spectacle of Americans drunk awakens disgust in the Filipinos." On another occasion Professor Schurman, in a public address, quoted a native as saying:

> You have brought us the blessings of civilization, and you have lined our most beautiful street in Manila, Escolta, with 500 saloons.

Thus far the cost in money of subduing the Filipinos, in addition to the $20,000,000 paid to Spain for what she did not possess and could not deliver, has been at least a hundred million, and some 6,000 American soldiers have yielded up their lives in this useless and wicked warfare. Hundreds of others, driven to madness by the drink which followed the flag to Manila, fill asylums for the insane. The secular as well as the religious press of the country is vainly endeavoring to arouse a Republican Administration to a realizing sense of the enormity of the crime which it has so long permitted and still permits to exist in the Philippines. And this is the Christianity which we are told it is our mission to carry to the Filipino! Does any man question the accuracy of these statements? Have I in any way overdrawn the picture? Let me read you only two extracts from the testimony of the many who have spoken and written upon this subject—testimony that no one will dare to question.

Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, said, after a visit to the Philippines:

> Every alternate place of business seems to be a liquor shop of some kind, and the soldier has temptation before his eyes whichever way he may turn. * * * Drunken soldiers meet me everywhere, and it is painful in the extreme to remember that many of them have come from Christian homes and that they have been thrust into the very jaws of temptation, from which only a strong man can be expected to escape.

And Army Secretary Peyton, sent to the Philippines by Bishop Doane, chairman of the Board of Domestic and Foreign Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, said, after a stay of six months:

> At the present time there is no chance for Protestant effort. It is practically useless to undertake to do anything there until the United States troops depart or reform. The United States has in and around Manila at this moment, or had when I left a few weeks ago, 45,000 drunkards, rakes, and gamblers. Of course, there are exceptions (but they are not worth mentioning). The statement is sufficiently accurate. When the American troops landed in Manila there was only a saloon or two in the whole place. To-day Manila is a hell hole. There are 400 or more saloons, typical places of the Western frontier or worse, and the saloons are more respectable than are many of the other places within the city which Americans have either planted or keep alive by their support.
> I am aware that it may be an ungracious thing to characterize American soldiers as drunkards, rakes, and gamblers. I can not help it; the sin is not mine. Nor is the sin wholly that of our troops. I mean there are a few mitigating circumstances. The men are far from home, and restraint is absent from them. They are in a hot climate and surrounded by temptations unknown in colder ones. They have fallen, and that lower than anything I ever imagined. Just before I came away from Manila I had a talk with Señor Publetti. He is almost the only Protestant native there. He was educated in Europe and is a most devout and intelligent man. He said to me: "So long as this army is here and it remains such an army as it is, there is not the shadow of a chance for Protestant effort." And I think Señor Publetti is right.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to show what the imperialistic and commercial policy of the Republican party has cost in money, in blood, in ruined lives, and in shame. I ask, Is the game worth the candle? Every day we are receiving letters from enlisted soldiers in the Philippines entreating us to procure discharges for them in order that they may return to their homes. Would it not be better to bring them all back to their homes, and put a stop to this miserable business? The distillers and the brewers, the whisky trust and the beer trust, may find that they do not represent all the honor of this American Republic. Neither are they the exponents of all the patriotism. And that love of liberty which exists in the great American heart, that hatred of vice which, I believe, still dominates this Christian nation, will some day—I pray God it may be in the near future—answer the question put by President McKinley as to who will pull down the flag in the Philippine Islands. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I shall print as an appendix to my remarks a letter which I recently received from a constituent who takes a great interest in public questions. It will be found to be a most scholarly and thoughtful article, that will richly repay perusal. Its author, Mr. William Baird, of Essex County, Va., is a profound student of political history, and his opinions, the result of exhaustive research and mature thought, are entitled to more than ordinary weight. Mr. Baird treats of the general subject of constitutional government and of imperialism from the standpoint of a Jeffersonian Democrat. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX.

MY DEAR MR. JONES: Your letter and speech have both been received. I read both letter and speech with much interest and pleasure, and am fully in sympathy with you on the constitutional question. The judicial decisions you cited in support of your contention were not familiar to me, and I was very glad to have my view thus strengthened and reenforced. The Puerto Rican tariff measure, bad in itself, is still worse as a precedent, a sort of entering wedge prepartory to further assumptions of power on the part of the Government. The truth is the Republican party and the Constitution can not flourish together.

A man can not possibly serve these two masters; he must choose between them. The party as a party—I do not now speak of individuals—stands, in a broad sense, for paternal—i. e., arbitrary—government. It is continually claiming and reaching out after fresh powers, and thus, by a process of gradual absorption, is weakening and sapping the reserved rights upon the maintenance of which the free constitutional system founded by our fathers absolutely depends. The powers thus unwarrantably assumed are, then, freely employed for the benefit of favored interests, which, in their turn, by campaign contribution, and, indeed, by every means, direct and indirect, which wealth, practically unlimited, can wield, support the party so favoring them, trusting for their reward to fresh assumptions of power by the Government to be used in like manner for their aggrandizement.

And so wealth fattens upon the gifts of power, and power increases by the aid of wealth, while every revolution of the wheel marks another advance on the road to imperialism. If not checked in some way, the result of this will be the virtual transformation of what was intended to be a Federal republican government of carefully defined and strictly limited powers into a practically imperial government, construing its powers according to its own pleasure, recognizing no really effective limitations upon them, and using them at the behest and for the benefit of a few special classes and interests. The old machinery may indeed be retained and the people permitted to amuse themselves with the names and forms to which they have been so long accustomed; but the spirit having departed, these will be really only the convenient instruments of absolutism. The student of history is mournfully familiar with this process. Those who desire to establish despotism among a people accustomed to free institutions will, if they are wise in their generation, carefully preserve the forms while in the very act of destroying the substance of liberty.

It is thus that they most certainly and easily, often with the acquiescence and even aid of the deluded masses, arrive at their end. It is here emphatically the first step that costs, and it should be watched and guarded against with that sleepless vigilance which our fathers have taught us is the price of liberty. Once concede that the Government enters the new acquisitions freed from all constitutional restraints and what is there to control or check it? Why may it not establish a church, erect an order of nobility, fetter the press, fill the land with bastiles, and the bastiles with prisoners, and "do all the other acts and things" which czars and sultans, themselves being judges, "may of right do?"

Even supposing that the power thus arbitrarily assumed should be, in the first instance, at all events, moderately and judicially exercised, what would this avail? Arbitrary power gently and wisely employed may for that very reason be of all kinds the most dangerous. It is thus that that watchful jealousy which is the best safeguard of freedom is lulled to sleep and that nations are soothed into a false security and then disarmed and manacled. Our fathers would not have trusted mortal man, not Washington himself, with such power, nor would he have accepted it, not because there was any risk that he would abuse it, but because the precedent would have been fatal to liberty, and because, even if secure of a succession of Washingtons, communities can only retain and develop the powers of governing themselves by manfully accepting and patiently discharging the tasks which it imposes. As has been well said, a paternal government and a childish people are correlatives; the one implies the other.

But, it may be urged, in dealing with a childish people, it is necessary that the Government should be paternal, in other words despotic, and this brings us face to face with the question: Is it wise for the United States voluntarily to assume the task of governing a people in a politically childish condition and likely to remain so for an indefinite period, such a people, in short, as those of the Philippine Islands? This is the question that presses now for decision. It covers the whole ground and may be considered as presenting the issue in its broadest aspect, for, if it is wise to undertake the permanent government of these islands, no good reason can be assigned why similar conquests and acquisitions should not be made over every race and in every quarter of the globe.

To enter upon a career like this involves a tremendous, a fearful responsibility, for in spite of the efforts so persistently put forth to find or make precedents for it in the past, it is in truth utterly unprecedented in American history, a new and strange departure in American politics. Unpromising as the task may well appear, its supporters would do better even to try to defend it upon its own merits rather than continue the vain and hopeless attempt to shelter themselves behind the great names of early history—above all, to evoke the authority of Jefferson in behalf of a policy against which Jefferson's whole life and teachings were one long and vehement protest.

Jefferson an imperialist, Jefferson in favor of the red-handed conquest and subjugation of a people struggling to retain their independence! Jefferson! But the naked absurdity of the proposition places it beyond the pale of rational discussion. To state is to refute it. No! Imperialists must seek other sanction for their creed and practice than that of the author of the Declaration of Independence, the zealous, devoted almost fanatical advocate of popular rights and struggling nationalties throughout the world. Nor will they find it in the scarcely less celebrated document emanating from the other of the two great schools of political thought which divided the country in its early history. The Farewell Address, which may fairly be taken as embodying in large measure, Hamilton's views as well as Washington's, condemns such a policy not less emphatically and more directly than the Declaration itself.

Unquestionably there has heretofore been expansion, wonderful expansion, an immense increase in area. But surely there is a very clear distinction between the peaceable acquisition of coterminous territory, highly conducive, if not absolutely indispensable, to the natural growth and healthy development of the country, either virtually unsettled, or settled by a race akin to and easily assimilable by our own, and the forcible seizure and subjugation of a country separated by thousands of miles from the nearest frontier of the United States and inhabited by an alien, hostile, and unassimilable people. There is here a question not of colonization, but of conquest and all that conquest implies. It is perfectly possible, no doubt, to conquer the Filipinos and to hold them permanently in subjection; but is it either just or expedient to do so? Is it "benevolent assimilation" or "criminal aggression?" We ought to be able to distinguish between the two, for it is only in official, not in ordinary English that these have lately become convertible terms.

At any rate, be it called what it may, to pursue such a policy effectively Americans must break with their historic past and trample upon their traditional priciples and ideals. What becomes of the deep-rooted American hostility to standing armies, and of the solemn and repeated warnings against them left by the early patriots and statesmen of all parties? To suppress resistance in every shape throughout the islands and then to hold down eight or ten millions of reluctant subjects, still more to defend a possession thus acquired and thus held against possible, not to say probable, attack—for the entrance upon this new line of policy will at once involve the United States in all the complications of European politics—will necessitate the indefinite maintenance of a large standing army. Militarism having come to stay, imperialism is next in order, looming large already upon the horizon of the future.

Nor will a single army suffice. In addition to that stationed in the Philippines there must always be maintained a large force at home ready to relieve or reenforce the army of occupation. Meanwhile officers of every grade, civil and military, as well as the soldiery, will be gradually growing more and more habituated to the rule, not of laws, but of men—in short, to government by the sword. It is a habit by no means difficult to form. The domineering instinct, the "lust of sway," is deeply imbued in our own nature. Burke has forcibly pointed out the effect it had in encouraging the oppressive conduct of the British Government toward America, and it is an appetite, moreover, that grows by indulgence, with no hope of check through repletion or satiety. Is there no possibility that such a force, largely increased from its original proportions by the necessity of being constantly in a state of preparation for war, in consequence of the new policy of encouraging instead of avoiding European entanglements, might be dangerous to liberty at home as well as abroad?

The founders of the Government would have said that there was not only a possibility but a probability, nay, almost a certainty, of this. Plausible pretexts would not be wanting. A labor strike of unusual dimensions, a race feud of unusual bitterness, a prolonged and dangerous riot, a hotly contested State election, any one of many events not unlikely to occur, might be held sufficient ground for the employment of United States troops "to restore order and protect life and property," not only without any demand but against the solemn protest of the State authorities. If resistance were attempted there would be thousands of soldiers, trained to the work of "suppressing insurrection" by the most summary methods abroad, ready at the beck of the Government to shoot down citizens of Pennsylvania or Illinois as promptly and ruthlessly as natives of the Philippines or other enslaved dependencies.

The precedent once established would be followed again and again, the sphere of the central government expanding and that of the State governments contracting constantly, until nothing was left of the original federal character of our institutions but the name, until "local self-government" became an antiquated tradition and the States were reduced to mere subordinate municipal corporations, useful only as instruments to carry out the will of the one supreme, unchecked authority, already fully accustomed to enforce unquestioning submission throughout the subject provinces of the empire. And thus, after the manner of all previous republics, would end the great American experiment, to the success of which Jefferson once fondly looked for the political regeneration of mankind. Once fairly enter upon this downward course and it is difficult to see what mortal power could avail to check it. The thirst for gold itself is not more consuming and resistless than that for dominion when it takes full possession of the public mind.

At what precise period in the evolution of this strange hybrid, this piece of political composite, this monster of a government—republic at home, empire abroad—the baser element of its dual nature would gain complete ascendency it might be rash to predict, but that it would finally gain it we are warranted by all experience in anticipating. The oft-quoted example of Great Britain is not a case in point; the conditions, so far from being identical, or even similar, are widely different. Indeed, whatever the external resemblance, the agreement in forms and detail, in origin and structure, the two Governments—those of Great Britain and the United States—are as wide asunder as the poles, and in nothing do they differ more essentially than in the very point under consideration. Nor are the circumstances of the two countries less dissimilar. From her insular position and limited area, impossible to increase by coterminous annexation, the acquisition of foreign and distant territory, in spite of its great and manifest disadvantages, might have seemed to British statesmen a necessary condition of Britain's greatness, but the most ravenous land hunger could hardly desire, the most gorgeous dreams of territorial ambition could hardly picture, a goodlier heritage than that which nature herself has bestowed upon the United States.

In all this I have heretofore been considering only the consequences of holding the Philippines as a vassal dependency, for the reasons that forbid their admission as a State or States into the Union are so manifest that it seems superfluous to point them out. Surely by this time every sane man in the United States must have had enough of mongrelism, of the attempt to incorporate and assimilate alien and inferior races. The result has assuredly not so far been sufficiently favorable to encourage further experiments in the same direction, and it is hardly to be presumed that any man not a candidate for a lunatic asylum would have the hardihood to suggest further complicating the situation by adding millions of Asiatics to the millions of African voters we already have, to assist in governing us, to hold in their hands the balance of power, and perhaps, at critical moments, to decide the most momentous political questions. Yet if the Philippines are to be admitted to statehood, all this must follow, unless, indeed, we should carry the process of "benevolent assimilation" so far as to exterminate the present inhabitants and, by rendering a populous country a desert, should open it to American colonization. These things may come in time, but as yet the spirit of imperialism is hardly full grown; it must wait for a season ere it is ripe for such achievements.

But are we, it may be asked, to make such a sacrifice as this, to renounce our conquest, to set free our subject people? In order to avoid the evils which stare us in the face there are few sacrifices which it would not be wise to make, but there is in truth no sacrifice involved. So far from strengthening in a military sense, the retention of the Philippines would serve merely to weaken us. On this continent the United States can be made practically unassailable and may laugh to scorn the threats or efforts of any enemy on the globe, but the permanent possession of the Philippines would invite attack and at the same time furnish a highly vulnerable point upon which to direct it. To defend our own shores is one thing; to secure a lately subjugated and half or wholly hostile province, at a distance of 7,000 miles, is quite another.

I do not say that it can not be done, but it is obvious that to make it secure would require immense armaments, naval and military, and entail enormous expenditure, and proportionally heavy taxation, while the possibility of foreign wars would be incalculably increased. As these facts can hardly be controverted, it is alleged as a counterbalancing advantage that the country will reap great commercial advantages from this policy. "Trade follows the flag" we are told. Never was there a greater fallacy. Trade follows the interest of the traders; it goes where the best goods can be had for the lowest price and is governed by practical, not by sentimental, considerations. The colonial experience of the continental powers of Europe is sufficient to refute this doctrine.

No; trade will not follow the flag unless it would have flowed naturally in that channel with or without the flag, or unless it is intended to use bayonets or bullets as instruments of commerce, and to force recalcitrant nations to buy and sell in one exclusive market, whether they will or not. Nay; we need not go so far as Europe to see this demonstrated; the rapidity with which American products are superceding all others by purely voluntary action of other countries is amply sufficient.

"The open door" is what is wanted, and this can much better be obtained without aggressive war and forcible annexation. Tariffs and wars hinder, they do not promote trade. So, then, when Americans have abandoned their principles, bartered their birthright, and betrayed their most sacred trust, they will not even receive for it the wretched reward by which they have been tempted. The 30 pieces of silver soiled and blood stained will elude their grasp.

Very sincerely, your friend,

WM. BAIRD.

The Operation of the New Financial Law to May 1, 1900.

OF

HON. MARRIOTT BROSIUS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 3, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11212) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes—

Mr. BROSIUS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I embrace this occasion to lay before the House some facts showing the operation of the new financial law during the month and a half of its existence. It will be gratifying, I am sure, to every member and to the country to know how successfully the law is working out the results which were anticipated in its passage. It has more than met the most sanguine expectations of its friends, and disappointed every adverse suggestion of its enemies.

REFUNDING PROVISIONS.

The refunding provisions of the law are working out an achievement in finance without a parallel in the history of the world. The statement I submit is official, and shows the amount of bonds of each kind exchanged since the law went into operation, March 14, to the 1st day of May, 1900, together with the saving in interest, the premium paid, and the net saving. This is the statement.

	Amount refunded.	Saving in interest.	Premium paid.	Net saving.
Threes of 1908	$60,980,200	$5,080,415	$3,465,587	$1,614,828
Fours of 1907	158,791,700	22,998,909	18,522,306	4,476,663

The "net saving" shown by this statement represents the difference between the amount of interest the Government will pay upon the bonds refunded to the date of their respective maturities and the amount of interest the Government would have been obliged to pay had not the bonds above described been thus refunded.

It will be observed that the total amount of bonds exchanged is $260,020,750. The Treasurer has already made full settlement for bonds amounting to $259,051,950, and of the premiums paid and to be paid, $26,034,771. The Treasurer has already paid $25,923,732, leaving unpaid only about $110,000. Of the $260,020,750 bonds exchanged $48,508,000 were from institutions or private persons other than national banks.

The Secretary of the Treasury assures me that the Department has been able to promptly exchange all bonds offered for that purpose; but the permanent 2 per cent bonds are not yet ready for delivery, owing to the pressure of work in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, growing out of the demand for national-bank plates and new national-bank currency. Temporary bonds, however, have been issued in accordance with the plan laid down in the circulars of the Department.

LEGAL-TENDER REDEMPTION.

The operation of legal-tender redemption under the provisions of the law exhibits a highly satisfactory condition of public confidence in our Government paper, and is a happy omen for the success of that branch of our monetary system in the future. The Secretary of the Treasury informs me that the amount of United States notes redeemed in gold out of the reserve fund since the new law went into operation is $5,133,289. As these redemptions occurred from day to day the reserve fund was replenished from the general fund, as the law provides.

It may be noted in passing that the redemption of United States notes would not have amounted to anything like the sum named but for the fact that under the provisions of the law currency certificates are no longer available as reserve money, and several millions of those certificates were turned in for United States notes which were converted into gold certificates.

The amount of Treasury notes canceled during the same period is $4,361,000. The amount of standard silver dollars and subsidiary silver coined during the period are, respectively, $5,792,377 and $1,192,320.45.

I will print at the end of this statement, with the consent of the House, a circular of the Treasury Department containing instructions in accordance with which the exchange of bonds under the provisions of the law has proceeded, as well as a statement showing the profit on national-bank-note circulation issued on the new bonds, and also a statement exhibiting the present worth of the outstanding bonds upon a 2½ per cent basis daily during the months of April and May, 1900.

BANKING AND CURRENCY PROVISIONS.

I submit now a statement from official sources showing by States the number of approved applications for authority to organize national banks, the number of banks organized, and the amount of bonds deposited by them since March 14 to May 1, 1900. This statement shows the number and amount of capital of banks proposed to be organized with capital of less than $50,000 and of $50,000 and over. The same division is made in connection with banks organized.

Following this I will print a statement showing the total number of applications, informal and formal, for authority to organize national banks, arranged to show by States the number of original organizations and those proposed to be converted or reorganized.

I am advised by the Comptroller that on March 14 the bonds on deposit to secure circulation aggregated $244,611,570, while on April 30 the amount was $268,405,240, an increase during the period of $23,793,670. The total amount on the latter date includes new twos to the amount of $202,783,650. This shows how large an amount of the new bonds exchanged for old ones is availed of to secure bank circulation.

The bond-secured circulation on March 14, 1900, amounted to $216,374,794, and on April 30, 1900, to $246,067,162, an increase during the period of $29,692,368. It will be observed that this increase in circulation exceeds by about $6,000,000 the increase of bonds deposited during the period, showing that a portion of the increase is due to circulation taken out on bonds already deposited under the provisions of law authorizing circulation to the par of bonds deposited.

As an indication of the amount of currency the national banks may issue in the near future, as gathered from their expressed intention, I will print with my remarks some interesting figures tabulated from the answers of 3,000 national banks to inquiries addressed to them by William C. Cornwell, president of the City National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y., a few weeks ago. The questions asked were as follows:

How much new circulation do you think you will take out soon?
How much, say, within a year?
How much have you out now?
What is the capital of your bank?
Is circulation in your locality easily kept out, or is it returned quickly for redemption?

Mr. Cornwell condensed the results as follows:

Immediate increase in circulation		$69,065,049
Additional within a year		20,583,146
Total increase in circulation within a year		89,648,195
We have also received replies from a large number indicating intention to increase when bonds go lower, amount		22,140,663
Total		111,788,858
Circulation easily kept out	per cent..	88.44
Returned quickly	do....	11.56

These figures do not include whatever new circulation may come from new banks applying for national charters. Up to a recent date applications were as follows:

Capital $25,000 and less than $50,000—349 banks, with total capital	$8,930,000
Capital $50,000 and over—84 banks, with total capital	6,010,000

It is estimated by the Chicago Banker (as to the $25,000 banks) on a basis of some applications being denied and others falling a little below their full capital in taking out circulation, that increase of circulation from this source could safely be put at 7,000,000
And for the larger banks at 3,000,000

Making further increase in circulation	10,000,000
Grand total	121,788,800

[Department Circular No. 29.]

Circular to holders of United States 5 per cent bonds of the act of January 14, 1875, 4 per cent consols of 1907, acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, and 3 per cent bonds of 1908, act of June 13, 1898.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1900.

The attention of the owners of United States registered and coupon bonds of the 5 per cent loan of 1904, act of January 14, 1875, the 4 per cent consols of 1907, acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, and the 3 per cent loan of 1908, act of June 13, 1898, is invited to the provisions of section 11 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, as follows:

"SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to receive, at the Treasury, any of the outstanding bonds of the United States bearing interest at 5 per cent per annum, payable February 1, 1904, and any bonds of the United States bearing interest at 4 per cent per annum, payable July 1, 1907, and any bonds of the United States bearing interest at 3 per cent per annum, payable August 1, 1908, and to issue in exchange therefor an equal amount of coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, in denominations of $50 or any multiple thereof, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, payable quarterly, such bonds to be payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from the date of their issue, and said bonds to be payable, principal and interest, in gold coin of the present standard value, and to be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That such outstanding bonds may be received in exchange at a valuation not greater than their present worth, to yield an income of 2½ per cent per annum; and in consideration of the reduction of interest effected, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to the holders of the outstanding bonds surrendered for exchange, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not greater than the difference between their present worth, computed as aforesaid, and their par value, and the payments to be made hereunder shall be held to be payments on account of the sinking fund created by section 3694 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That the 2 per cent bonds to be issued under the provisions of this act shall be issued at not less than par, and they shall be numbered consecutively in the order of their issue, and when payment is made the last numbers issued shall be first paid, and this order shall be followed until all the bonds are paid, and whenever any of the outstanding bonds are called for payment interest thereon shall cease three months after such call." * * *

Under the provisions of this law the Department will be prepared to receive on and after this date, until further notice, any of the bonds issued under the acts above mentioned, and as early as practicable thereafter will issue in exchange therefor a like amount of United States registered or coupon bonds bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, as provided by the act approved March 14, 1900.

To effect the exchange the outstanding bonds should be surrendered to the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the terms of this circular; they will be accepted for that purpose in the order of the surrender of them to him, and new bonds bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum will be issued in the same order in lieu thereof. A letter of transmittal should accompany each package of bonds for exchange, setting forth the purpose for which they are forwarded and giving the address to which the new bonds and checks for the interest thereon shall be sent.

Bonds, held by the Treasurer of the United States in trust for a national bank, may be surrendered by letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied with the Treasurer's receipt representing the bonds, together with a resolution of the board of directors of the bank, authorizing the Treasurer to assign the bonds.

The priority of issue of the new bonds will be determined by the date of the receipt by the Secretary of the Treasury of the outstanding bonds or the papers representing the same, provided that the bonds or papers are in proper condition for such surrender, as set forth hereafter in this circular. If any correction is required, the priority of the bonds to be issued will take date from the receipt and acceptance of corrected bonds or papers at this office.

Any registered bonds forwarded should be assigned to the Secretary of the Treasury for exchange into 2 per cent bonds. The assignment should be dated and witnessed by one of the officers named in the note which is printed on the back of each bond. Where a new bond is desired in the name of anyone but the payee of the old bond, the old bond should be assigned to the "Secretary of the Treasury for exchange into 2 per cent bonds for account of ——" (here insert the name of the person in whose favor the bond is to be issued).

Registered bonds inscribed in the name of an institution, forwarded for exchange, must be accompanied by a resolution of the board of directors of the institution, authorizing their assignment to the Secretary of the Treasury for such exchange. The resolution must bear the seal of the institution, or, if the institution have no seal, there must be furnished with the resolution an affidavit setting forth that fact.

Upon acceptance of any bonds for exchange under the conditions of this circular the present worth of the surrendered bonds to yield an income of 2½ per cent per annum will be calculated as of the date of their acceptance, except as provided in the next paragraph, and the sum representing the difference between the present worth of said bonds and their par value will be paid to the owner thereof in due course by a check drawn in his favor by the Treasurer of the United States. The settlement will include payment by the Department of accrued interest on the old bonds to the date of their acceptance for exchange and a charge against the owner for accrued interest on the new bonds from the date of their issue to said date of acceptance. Bonds surrendered upon which interest has been prepaid need not be accompanied by a deposit to cover such prepaid interest, as the Department will deduct at the time of the settlement any amount which may be due on account of unmatured interest which had been prepaid.

The new bonds will be dated April 1, 1900; therefore all outstanding bonds surrendered for exchange and accepted for that purpose prior to that date will bear interest to April 1, when interest on the new bonds will begin; and the present worth of such surrendered bonds will be calculated as of the said April 1. The new bonds will be issued in denominations as follows: Coupon, $50, $100, $500, $1,000; registered, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000, $50,000.

All bonds forwarded for exchange will be regarded as the property of the person, firm, or institution in whose favor the new bonds are to be issued, and in each case the check in settlement of the "present worth," etc., above referred to will be drawn in favor of such person, firm, or institution; but if the agent forwarding the bonds shall desire and so request, the bonds and the check may be forwarded to such agent's address for delivery to the owner.

Packages containing bonds for surrender, or papers representing bonds held by the Treasurer of the United States in trust for a national bank, should be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, D. C., and be plainly marked "bonds (or papers) for exchange."

Blank forms of application for the exchanges herein authorized and blank resolutions for use by institutions have been prepared by the Department, and may be obtained on application to the Secretary of the Treasury.

In exercise of the discretion given to the Secretary of the Treasury under section 11 of the act, he reserves the right to suspend the exchange of bonds above contemplated, whenever, in his opinion, the interests of the Government may be best served thereby. The Secretary of the Treasury also reserves the right to change the terms of exchange above set forth, either by requiring a bonus or premium upon the 2 per cent bonds or by requiring the holders of bonds outstanding to surrender the same in exchange for the new bonds at a rate to yield income of more than 2½ per cent per annum.

L. J. GAGE, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1900.

Referring to the circular of information just published relative to the exchange of certain classes of outstanding bonds for the new 2 per cent bonds authorized by section 11 of the act of March 14, 1900, the following statement is made for the information and guidance of national banks and others desiring to avail themselves of the provisions of said act with a view to using the new bonds as a basis for circulation.

By the expression "present worth to yield an income of 2½ per cent per annum" is meant such a price as would yield to the investor a return of his money at the maturity of the bond, with interest on the sum invested by him at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum, realized in quarterly payments.

A bank exchanging its present bonds on April 1, 1900, will receive the following as the present worth of the bonds described: For a $10,000 bond of 1908, $568.51 cash, and accrued interest to April 1; for a $10,000 bond of 1907, $1,167.65 cash, and accrued interest to April 1; for a $10,000 bond of 1904, $1,007.51 cash, and accrued interest to April 1, and a new $10,000 2 per cent thirty-year bond in each case. In other words, the value of the outstanding bonds upon a 2½ per cent basis on April 1, 1900, is—

Fives of 1904	110.0751

If the bonds are purchased at a price above these figures, it will be equivalent to paying a premium for the new twos.

If, upon April 1, 1900, a bank can purchase outstanding bonds at these prices, the profit on national bank-note circulation will be as follows:

Capital invested		$100,000.00
Par value of bonds purchased		100,000.00
Circulation		100,000.00
Receipts:
Interest on circulation, 4 per cent	$4,000.00
Interest on bonds deposited	2,000.00
Gross receipts		6,000.00
Deductions:
Tax	500.00
Expenses	62.50
Total deductions		562.50

Net receipts	$5,437.50
Interest on capital invested, 4 per cent	4,000.00
Profit on circulation: Amount	1,437.50
Per cent	1.437

In this computation money is assumed to be worth 4 per cent per annum. The profit, however, will be the same, whatever the rate per cent assumed.

If the bonds are purchased or had been previously purchased at prices lower than these, the profit to the banks will be greater. If the bank has to pay more than these prices for the bonds to be exchanged, the profit on circulation will be less than that indicated.

If, upon April 1, 1900, the bonds were purchased—

Threes of 1908 at	$110.6851
Fours of 1907 at	116.6765
Fives of 1904 at	115.0751

Which would be equivalent to paying 105 for the twos, the profit upon circulation will be as follows:

Capital invested		$105,000.00
Par value of bonds purchased		100,000.00
Circulation		100,000.00
Receipts:
Interest on circulation 4 per cent	$4,000.00
Interest on bonds deposited	2,000.00
Gross receipts		6,000.00
Deductions:
Tax	500.00
Expenses	62.50
Sinking fund to liquidate premium	86.94
Total deductions		649.44
Net receipts		5,350.56
Interest on capital invested, 4 per cent		4,200.00
Profit on circulation: Amount		1,150.56
Per cent		1.096

Money is assumed to be worth 4 per cent per annum. If a higher rate per cent is assumed, the profit on circulation will be a trifle smaller than that indicated above.

If, upon April 1, 1900, the bonds were purchased—

Threes of 1908 at	$111.6851
Fours of 1907 at	117.6765
Fives of 1904 at	116.0751

Which would be equivalent to paying 106 for the twos, the profit on circulation will be as follows:

Capital invested		$106,000.00
Par value of bonds purchased		100,000.00
Circulation		100,000.00
Receipts—
Interest on circulation, 4 per cent	$4,000.00
Interest on bonds deposited	2,000.00
Gross receipts		6,000.00
Deductions—
Tax	$500.00
Expenses	62.50
Sinking fund to liquidate premium	104.33
Total deductions		666.83
Net receipts		5,333.17
Interest on capital invested, 4 per cent		4,240.00
Profit on circulation— Amount		1,093.17
Per cent		1.031

Money is assumed to be worth 4 per cent per annum. If a higher rate per cent is assumed, the profit on circulation will be a trifle smaller than that indicated above.

The "present worth" of the outstanding bonds upon a 2½ per cent basis during the months of April and May, 1900, is as follows:

1900.	Threes of 1908.	Fours of 1907.	Fives of 1904.
April 1	$105.6851	$111.6765	$110.0751

NOTE.—The foregoing tables are furnished by the Government Actuary.

The attention of persons desiring to effect the exchange of the three classes of bonds in question for the new 2 per cent bonds is especially invited to the importance of having all registered bonds properly assigned and all resolutions and applications properly prepared.

National banks now owning bonds lodged with the Treasurer of the United States as security for circulation will please take note that in every case the Department will require a resolution of the proper form authorizing the exchange of their bonds for the new 2 per cent bonds, and will also require the surrender of the duplicate receipts representing such bonds which were issued by the Treasurer of the United States.

National banks now owning bonds lodged with the Treasurer of the United States as security for public deposits will be required to furnish the resolution above referred to and surrender the duplicate receipts, and, in case the bonds now held are 5 percents of 1904 or 4 percents of 1907, there will also be required a certificate of deposit of an assistant treasurer of the United States showing a transfer of funds to the Treasurer of the United States of an amount equal to 5 per cent of the face value of such 4 per cent or 5 per cent bonds.

Institutions owning registered bonds inscribed in their name will please observe the requirement that the resolution authorizing their surrender for exchange must be certified to by a different officer from the one authorized in the resolution to execute the assignment.

Upon receipt of bonds, or papers representing bonds, to be exchanged for the new 2 percents, and upon their acceptance, the Department will issue an acknowledgment bearing the facsimile signature of the Assistant Secretary. This acknowledgment will not be negotiable, but pending the preparation and issue of the bonds, a process which may require two months or more, the Department will issue a temporary bond, which, in the case of bonds desired as security for circulation or deposits, will be lodged with the Treasurer of the United States.

In all other cases the temporary bond will be lodged with the Register of the Treasury. The Department will allow one transfer of these temporary bonds lodged with the Register, and the bonds issued on account of such transfer will retain the date and the priority rights of the original, but such bonds so issued will not be again transferred. In due time the permanent bond will be substituted in its place and will be delivered to the owner, after which the usual rights of transfer attached to all registered bonds of the United States will be recognized by the Department.

When the Register of the Treasury issues the temporary bonds he will mail a notice to the owner thereof, giving the denominations and the numbers. If the owner desires to avail himself of the privilege to make the one transfer above mentioned, he may give power of attorney to some one in the city of Washington to make the assignment for him. This power of attorney, accompanied by a letter giving the names and addresses of the payees of the new bonds, will be all that will be necessary to effect the transfer.

F. A. VANDERLIP,
Assistant Secretary.

Naval Appropriation Bill.

OF
HON. LAIRD H. BARBER,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10450) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes—

Mr. BARBER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: As to the naval vessels authorized by this act, as well as those authorized by previous acts but not yet completed, the members of this House almost without exception are of the opinion that they are absolutely essential to our national safety and that they should be completed with all possible speed. We well know that Manila and Santiago were decisive in the late conflict, and we anticipate that naval battles are likely to be equally decisive in coming conflicts, which we hope may be long deferred.

Party and political considerations should be entirely eliminated from the discussion of this question, and it should be considered from a business point of view. So far as I can learn, differences that have divided the committee who have made the report here are purely questions of dollars and cents, and that the question of building an armor plant is one of monetary expediency, for I can not conceive of any reason why the Government should undertake the manufacture of armor plate rather than any other commodity needed unless it be to overcome what is alleged on the part of these gentlemen to be a monopoly.

Now, in answer to that in general terms, I might say this: That these gentlemen have repeatedly said to the committee, and it is in print, that they would be glad to be relieved of their responsibilities in this matter and would be glad to have the Government take their plant at an appraised valuation in order that they might have the funds there locked up for their commercial business, which yields a very much larger percentage, without the constant annoyance and risk attendant upon this appropriation and having their business constantly questioned and their motives as well.

In the limited time allotted to me this evening I shall simply, without going into any other details, take up some of the points in the minority report and the insinuations there thrown out in relation to the business of these armor manufacturers. And I might say, in starting, that one of these plants is situated in the district I represent and that I have no other motive than that of seeing that justice and fair dealing prevail; and I am glad to recognize the courtesy shown me in this matter. I feel that I simply perform my duty in presenting the claims of the district I represent.

One of the first things that attracted my attention in the report of the minority was this:

> It seems to be pretty generally understood the armor-plate factories will not furnish Krupp armor for less than $545 per ton, but exactly where this information comes from we are unable to state, for there was no testimony before the committee on the subject.

It seems to me that is an unfair innuendo as to the relations existing between these armor-plate factories and the Government. Who makes the contract? The contract is let by the Department, the recognized officers of the Government, and it would seem very natural, therefore, that the correspondence and the offers on the part of these armor-plate men should come through these well-recognized channels. The committee had before them the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and the testimony of Admiral O'Neil in relation to the price asked for armor plate. In a letter from the Bethlehem Iron Company, dated February 3, 1899, printed on page 32 of the letter from the Secretary of the Navy, it is stated:

> The lowest price we are willing to accept for Krupp armor is $545 per ton. We base this price on an average royalty we will be obliged to pay of $45 per ton and on the fact that, so far as our experience goes, the additional cost of manufacturing Krupp armor over the cost of manufacturing Harvey armor will not be less than $100 per ton.

Now, there is a letter, a business proposition, made to the Department, and it seems to me that it is hardly fair to say that they are unable to state where this information comes from. There is a letter from the Carnegie Company, dated about the same time and printed in the letter from the Secretary of the Navy, saying that $545 is the minimum they could accept for this type of armor. There is no secret about it, and why the insinuation in relation to the source of the information in regard to the price asked for armor plate should have been thrown out I am unable to state.

Mr. DAYTON. Will it interrupt my friend——

Mr. BARBER. Not at all.

Mr. DAYTON. To suggest right in connection with that that the Department spent a year in trying to secure this armor at a less price.

Mr. BARBER. Yes.

Mr. DAYTON. And they did not succeed in doing it.

Mr. BARBER. This is the result of negotiations with those parties.

Mr. KITCHIN. I believe when they endeavored to secure it at a less price it was at a specific less price of $300.

Mr. DAYTON. They advertised for a large quantity of armor plate under the terms of the limitation in the appropriation bill, at $300, but they also gathered information for a year, as Admiral O'Neil has stated, to see whether or not they could get it at any less price than $545 a ton, and Admiral O'Neil's investigations extended to Europe to ascertain whether it was obtained at a less price there, and he reports that no nation in the world is able to get it at that low price.

Mr. KITCHIN. But as a matter of fact the advertisement for that was at $300 a ton, at which price the Navy Department were trying to get it, and it was absolutely useless to talk about any other price.

Mr. DAYTON. He investigated the price at which it could be obtained by any nation in the world.

Mr. KITCHIN. It was useless for the manufacturers to offer $400 or any other sum, because the Government only offered $300 a ton.

Mr. BARBER. And it was conceded that the price of $300 was so small that there was no possibility of manufacturing it at that price.

Mr. KITCHIN. And therefore the men would not bid on it.

Mr. BARBER. Because they could not.

Mr. DAYTON. And at the same time they refused to furnish it for less than $545 a ton.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know about that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARBER. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. Was it not brought out in evidence—sworn to—that this old Harvey plate was manufactured and sold to foreign nations at about $250 a ton?

Mr. BARBER. That has been gone over so often by older members here that I think it is scarcely necessary for me to say anything about it. I am a comparatively new member here, and I take it the gentleman is an old member, and so it hardly seems to me worth while to take up the time of the committee to review the reasons which have been fully stated why that one small contract was let at that figure.

Mr. RIDGELY. I am not asking for that, but I want to ask another question, prompted by these proofs that the Government has been overcharged in the past.

Mr. BARBER. The gentleman well knows that immediately after that particular contract was made for which they received about $250 a ton, for the purpose of introducing their armor in that country, they then received $520 per ton for the next contract——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Five hundred and twenty-seven dollars.

Mr. BARBER. For the next contract immediately succeeding that. It was a business venture upon which they embarked for the purpose of obtaining a start with that government.

Mr. DAYTON. And it was only for a very small quantity.

Mr. BARBER. Only for a very small quantity; and as soon as that particular contract had been finished they received $527 per ton for the next contract, and the result is that that nation is paying to these same contractors to-day more than they are asking our own Government.

Mr. RIDGELY. One further point. Was it not proven also that the cost of making the armor was less than $200 a ton?

Mr. DAYTON. No.

Mr. BARBER. No.

Mr. RIDGELY. Proven by expert testimony.

Mr. BARBER. No; because the Rohrer board and everyone who examined the question, including Secretary Herbert, as the result of that investigation found that the labor and material alone cost within a dollar or two of $200, without any allowance for royalty or the nickel which the Government furnished, or for other items which raised the cost far beyond $200 at that time.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, one other question and I am done. Does not the fact that these prices are held up so high to all of the nations of the world and the fact that there are so few manufactures of this particular kind of armor plate, do not those two facts suggest to the gentleman that possibly there is a combine or trust between the factories, and that therefore the Government ought to control the matter by manufacturing armor for itself?

Mr. BARBER. That does not suggest anything of the kind to me. Whether there is or is not a combination, I have no personal information beyond any other member of Congress.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is it not very suggestive?

Mr. BARBER. It does not seem to me so, for this reason: That these very men who have now invested $4,000,000 in these plants have said repeatedly to the Government that they would be glad to get rid of their plants, that they would be glad to have the Government take their plants at what is found to be a fair valuation by arbitration, and let them use their money in their private enterprises. I quote the exact language of one of these companies:

> We shall be delighted if the Government will let us out of the armor business. We can use the capital in several lines of our business to better advantage.

Mr. RIDGELY. Are they saying so now?

Mr. BARBER. They are saying so to-day. They do not say that in the letter to the Secretary; but here is what Mr. Schwab says in his testimony, which is given in Secretary Herbert's report, which I have here. He said this to Secretary Herbert, in 1897, and has repeated this same statement, so that it is the same to-day:

> If the Government now desires to undertake the manufacture of armor for itself, we shall only be too happy to sell our plant to it at cost. It is in splendid order, and we refer you to your experts as to whether it is not far more efficient now than when new, as we have continually made improvements upon it.
> The plant can remain where it is, and we will undertake to furnish the steel in the ingot at a price to be fixed by three arbitrators; or, we will remove the plant and erect it any point designated by the Government; also erect the additional plant for the making of the steel. We will superintend all this and start the works, and continue to operate them until they produce armor successfully; and for all this we will only ask the Government to pay the actual cost.

We undertake also to teach the Government officials how to make such armor as we are now supplying you, which, as you know, holds the world's record.

Having gone into this business primarily to help the Government when it could not obtain armor, we submit to you and to Congress that we have some claim upon the Government to take our plant at cost, and we hope this proposition will meet with favor.

We make about 150,000 tons of finished steel per month, and the two or three hundred tons of armor we make per month demand greater attention and give more trouble than all the 150,000 tons. We shall be delighted if the Government will let us out of the armor business. We can use the capital in several lines of our business to better advantage.

Mr. DAYTON. Let me suggest to my friend right there that they entered upon this business at the urgent request of the Govment itself.

Mr. BARBER. He says so here; and to-day this same company now tell me that they are manufacturing 3,000,000 tons of steel per year as against 2,000 tons for the Government, and that they would be delighted if they could be relieved of the responsibility.

[Here the hammer fell].

Rural Free Delivery.

OF

HON. GEORGE W CROMER,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 10001) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. CROMER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The appropriation of $1,750,000 which this bill carries for the continuation of the experimental rural free-delivery service not only commands my vote but my earnest advocacy and support.

As a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads I was willing to make the amount appropriated larger than that proposed in the bill, if the Department had asked it. I, however, appreciate the cautious prudence by which its recommendations for the extension of this service have been guided and am content to wait.

About $900,000 of the amount which this bill carries, I am informed, will be required to continue existing service through the fiscal year 1900–1901, leaving $850,000 available for putting in new service during the year. If this should be found insufficient to meet the expectations of the people, I am in favor of giving more. It all, or nearly all, comes back to us, Mr. Chairman, in one way or another, either in the saving of cost of small post-offices and the star routes discontinued, or in the increase of revenue resulting from the increase of matter mailed because of the enhanced facilities for distribution and collection afforded by rural free delivery. Frequently both these causes operate together and make a rural free-delivery route a source of profit from the start instead of an added expense to the General Government.

It is not possible at the present time to strike an accurate balance sheet to show these facts, because the accounts are carried under different divisions of the Post-Office Department; but the results, wherever we have been able to test them, show that rural free delivery costs very little more than fourth-class post-offices, fed by star routes, and gives an incomparably better service. We do not yet know to what length this great experiment will lead us. I for one am willing to follow it wherever it goes; and if, when the Fifty-sixth Congress meets in final session next December, a request should be made for more money to carry on this service for the fiscal year which expires June 30, 1901, I will vote for it with a full conviction that no money appropriated by the Congress of the United States has been or can be more beneficially expended than that devoted to rural free delivery.

Its development has been as surprising as that of the "little cloud" predicted by the Prophet Elijah, as recorded in the "First Book of Kings," which rose "out of the sea, like a man's hand." King Ahab, we are told, had to send up his servant seven times before he could see that cloud in any shape; but when the rain from that cloud descended, it was heavy enough to stop the king's chariots.

This has been pretty much our experience with rural free delivery. Official reports of the Post-Office Department (which this House has ordered reprinted for general information) narrate the history of the rural free-delivery movement in this concise form:

It was condemned by the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the Fifty-third Congress (Hon. John S. Henderson, of North Carolina, chairman) as a scheme impossible of execution, which "would require an appropriation of at least $30,000,000 to inaugurate it."

Postmaster-General William S. Bissell, in his report for 1893, concurred in the opinion of First Assistant Postmaster-General Frank H. Jones, that "the Department would not be warranted in burdening the people with such a great expense."

In his annual report for 1894 Postmaster-General Bissell declined to expend the small appropriation of $10,000 made by Congress to test the feasibility of the scheme, stating that "the proposed plan of rural free delivery, if adopted, would result in an additional cost to the people of about $20,000,000 for the first year," and that he did not believe the people were yet ready to involve themselves in such a large expenditure for the purpose.

When Congress increased the appropriation for a test to $20,000 in 1895 Postmaster-General William L. Wilson adopted the views of his predecessor, Mr. Bissell, and of the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, that the plan of establishing rural free delivery was wholly impracticable. He added that he had assumed control of the Department too late in the fiscal year to take any action under the appropriation, but should Congress see fit to make it available for the current year, he would put the experiment ordered to the test by the best methods he could devise.

Congress made $40,000 available, and in 1896 Postmaster-General Wilson, with many expressed misgivings, put the service to the test.

You know the result. I think I am justified in saying that the prompt response of the people was something which the officials of the Post-Office Department, as then constituted, neither expected nor desired. I know that in my own State of Indiana two locations were selected for the experiment which were, perhaps, above all others, least adapted to give immediate beneficial results. One of the initial rural routes in Indiana was so unsuitable that it had to be abandoned because every piece of mail delivered cost four times the postage received upon it. Yet from that same distributing point, after the rural free-delivery service passed into the friendly hands which now control it, a new service was started on improved lines, which within six months proved self-sustaining, and I am informed that urgent petitions have since been presented to the Department for an extension of rural delivery from this same point. I can supplement this experience by facts which have come under my own observation.

Before I had the honor of representing the Eighth Indiana district in Congress I went over three or four rural free-delivery routes in one of the counties now forming part of my Congressional district in company with the special agent of the Post-Office Department detailed for the investigation. We found at one point an organized opposition to the service on the part of some of the country storekeepers, who feared all sorts of injury to their business if the country people had their mails delivered by rural free delivery instead of their being compelled to come to the village to receive them. We persuaded these people to give the service a trial. Inside of six months they were not only satisfied with the service, but asked for more.

In a recent magazine article Hon. Perry S. Heath, of Indiana, First Assistant Postmaster-General, has discussed the broad national aspects of rural free delivery so pointedly and well, and his statements so accurately express my own views on the subject, that I ask to incorporate this article as part of my remarks. Speaking of his own strong personal interest in the rural free-delivery service (which he has done so much to foster and encourage), Mr. Heath says:

In the three years since the experiment was placed under my charge by President McKinley, and my immediate chief, the Postmaster-General, it has sprung from childhood to mature growth as rapidly as the mangrove trees do under the manipulation of East Indian jugglers.

Already the correspondence which the Department receives in regard to rural free delivery exceeds in bulk and diversity that of any other branch of the Post-Office service, and it increases day by day. The people are moving in the matter. The growth comes up from the subsoil. It is not an orchid, nurtured in the heated air of a conservatory, but a sturdy plant, raised on the American farm, and fruitful beyond the expectations of its most ardent cultivators. Congress and the Post-Office Department are simply following the lead of the people and are endeavoring to carry out their behests.

There seems to be an impression among a very few persons in Congress and elsewhere that rural free delivery is a kind of fancy or luxurious service. Those who thus raise objection to the free delivery of mail in rural communities forget that for a third of a century the farmers of our country have submitted without a murmur to taxation for the purpose of maintaining free delivery in the large cities, for which taxation they received no direct benefit. The people in the agricultural districts never complained that the city folks were given a service which could not be extended to them. They paid their taxes, sawed wood, and said nothing. That is, they said nothing until the idea was brought home to them that all other countries gave their farmers a proportionate share of postal benefits, while the United States, the pioneer in so many fields of advancement, alone lagged behind among the great nations that had entered into the Universal Postal Union at Vienna (which was adopted at our instance and was signed in compliment to the United States on the 4th of July, 1891) by failing to give full effect to the international obligation then entered into of delivering mails at the residences of the addressees. Finding now, as our farmers do, that by reason of increasing density of population and improved roads they can be brought within the humanizing influences of the postal service at less cost per capita than the people of the smaller cities, to whom free delivery has been accorded by law, is it to be wondered at that they ask their just share of postal benefits?

The item of cost is almost the only tangible basis of opposition at this time to the universal free delivery of the mails. I do not take into consideration the selfish and personal interests of a few postmasters who only desire the retention of their offices.

When the question of expense was under discussion before a committee of Congress some time ago, a member of the committee who was then much opposed to the service (but who has since changed his mind) observed that this was a measure of extravagance which would finally lead the Government into the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. When I asked why, he answered, because the vast area of our country was such that the possibilities of rural free delivery were beyond comprehension and could not even be approximated. Then I inquired why this same argument had not led him to ask a repeal of the law extending free delivery to cities, inasmuch as that law made it mandatory to give free delivery to every city of 10,000 inhabitants or $10,000 gross annual postal receipts. I suggested that there was no knowing to what extent of extravagance this expenditure might lead, with the enormous growth of our country. This was something he had not thought about. A further statement made in the course of the discussion, that the cost of delivering a piece of mail to a farmer on a rural-delivery route was less than half the cost per capita of initiating urban free delivery in the smaller cities was received by some members of the committee with expressions of surprise and incredulity. The discredit placed on the statement disappeared when figures demonstrated the fact. This is a point which is not generally known or understood.

Rural free delivery is not a costly, fanciful service. Within the short time it has been in operation it has given better results in increased postal receipts and in economies effected over the colonial service it supersedes than has been achieved in the same length of time in any small city where, by operation of law, free delivery has been established. It is susceptible of much greater development than it has yet had.

I believe that rural free delivery might be established over the entire country in each of the States north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi and that the cost would be less than that of the present service and the receipts much larger. This question has been put to the test in Carroll County, Md., with results which have exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The territory selected was not an ideal one for the experiment. It presented no especial advantages, either in the condition of the roads, the density of the population, or their appreciation of the new service offered them. It was a fair average test, and it has succeeded.

Having said this much of the practicability of the service, let me touch upon the more alluring topic of the benefits it will confer upon the people of the whole country. These are almost beyond description.

To begin with, what a boon it will be to have the isolation of rural life eliminated and town and country brought into closest touch. We may confidently expect that the tide of population which now sets steadily from the country into the overpopulated cities will in a brief period be reversed, and the free air and wholesome avocations of country life, relieved of their desolate monotony, will become as attractive to the children of the slums as the varieties of city life now are to the offspring of the farmer.

This generation has witnessed the marvelous commercial and industrial advantages which have followed the building of great trunk lines from ocean to ocean. Think how much greater will be the blessings brought close to the homes of the people when good, free, agricultural roads, passable under all stress of weather and at all seasons of the year, shall stretch from one end of the country to the other.

The old toll turnpike is doomed. It exists only in a few States and is even there regarded as obsolete. Rural free delivery will eventually impel the construction of free macadamized agricultural roads all over the United States, so that a man, if he chooses, can ride or drive from Boston to Omaha, or from Detroit to New Orleans. We are working in harmony with good-roads conventions everywhere to secure proper roads for the rural carriers to travel over. Great results have already been achieved in this respect, and more may be expected. On one route alone the farmers expended $3,000 for the improvement of roads as a prerequisite to the establishment of rural free delivery. The increased demands for the extension of the rural service places the Department in a position where it can insist, in future, that good roads shall be a prerequisite to any order for the establishment of rural free delivery. This course has practically been determined upon. If we are to have free good roads wherever we have rural free delivery, and this service should be extended in the future as rapidly as it has been during the present year, what a splendid prospect is opened up!

The direct advantages conferred on the immediate recipients of rural free delivery are as obvious as the general benefits received by the country at large. Farm lands enhance in value by being made more accessible. Crops bring better prices, because the growers can get their daily market reports and learn just exactly what their produce is worth. Daily papers and the numerous excellent and wholesome magazines now published bring a liberal education within reach of the farmers' children at little cost. The wife can do her shopping at the country store through the medium of the rural carrier without leaving her house. The goodman has no excuse for laying off half a day and wasting time and money at the village grocery on the pretext of seeing if there is any mail awaiting him. Relatives at a distance can write often with assurance of prompt delivery of their letters and early replies.

As the rural service progresses, it is taking on symmetry and uniformity. When it started, boxes were put up by the patrons in most irregular fashion. Drainage pipes, tomato cans, soap boxes, and all other kinds of unworthy receptacles were set out for the reception of the United States mails. Now boxes characterized by neatness and security are the rule and not the exception. I am strongly of the opinion that the Government should supply a regular rural letter box and rent it for a small fixed annual charge to each patron. This development of the service may come in a short time.

Few of the original carriers have yet adopted any uniform. Regulation uniforms and special conveyances will soon become frequent adjuncts of the service.

The rapid changes and improvements already made in the service during the short period of its existence encourage the hope that its future growth and development will be even more remarkable than its past.

I quite concur in these hopeful anticipations, and in my own State I can point to the facts which back them up. Wherever the service has been started in an appreciative community, it grows and spreads. And let me say that in recent years rural free delivery has never been established in Indiana except in an appreciative community. It is hard to find any others. In my own Congressional district, which comprises 7 counties, 30 applications, earnestly indorsed by the people and complying with the preliminary requests of the Department, have been transmitted to me and filed, and 15 services, with 18 carriers, have been started.

In the course of this debate one gentleman, the distinguished Representative from the Seventh Georgia district [Mr. MADDOX], complained that there had been unfair discrimination shown in the establishment of the service, and that his district in particular had been neglected. I thought at the time that the gentleman was probably misinformed as to the facts, and on inquiry of the Department I ascertained that from the thirteen counties composing the Seventh Congressional district of Georgia only three petitions for the establishment of rural free delivery had been presented, and that two of them were in course of investigation.

I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that there has been no improper preference shown to any State or district in the carrying out of this great experiment of rural free delivery. The States which have received the lion's share of the service have been those that have been the first to ask for it and the most persistent in pressing their requests, presented with accompanying maps and information, as suggested by the Department. South Carolina, in proportion to its population, has fared better than Indiana, Ohio, or New York. Iowa and Michigan are in a fair way to outstrip Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General, in the article I have quoted, speaks of the close connection between the rural free-delivery service and that greatly to be desired boon, the construction and maintenance of good roads. There have been some inquiries addressed on this subject to the postmasters of my own State, as well as to others where rural free delivery has been started, as to whether the establishment of this service had directly or indirectly caused an improvement in the country roads traversed. These are some of the replies received from Indiana:

Lafayette, Tippecanoe County.—Yes; very materially.
New Richmond, Montgomery County.—Indirectly; yes.
Noblesville, Hamilton County.—Yes.
Warsaw, Kosciusko County.—It has directly caused improvement of roads.
Parker, Randolph County.—Some improvement; but the roads were in good condition before the service was asked for.
Selma, Delaware County.—There has been a great improvement in our roads, and the indications are that there will be more work put on them this summer than ever before. Everybody wants the service extended to him.
Lebanon, Boone County.—Yes; $2,680 was spent on one strip, 2 miles long, in order to obtain rural delivery. The farmers have since built another 2 miles on the line. Other roads are being improved in anticipation of additional routes.
Newcastle, Henry County.—Yes; very materially.
Richmond, Wayne County.—Yes; though our roads were good before the establishment of these routes.
Hope, Bartholomew County.—Roads have been improved greatly.
Delphi, Carroll County.—Yes.
Crawfordsville, Montgomery County.—Yes.
Darlington, Montgomery County.—Yes; it has caused the construction of an iron bridge across a creek which was impassable at times, and the graveling of 1 mile of road, so that the entire route is now graveled and in good repair.

Mr. Chairman, we can not stop the wheels of progress, nor do we desire to do so. We can not, even if we would, go back to the condition of things when President John Quincy Adams proudly congratulated Congress on the fact that of the 7,000 post-offices then in existence, all of them were reached by the mails at least once a week and some of them as often as once a day.

The postal service must grow with the country, and rural free delivery is, in my judgment, its latest, greatest, and best development.

The Agricultural Bill.

SPEECH
OF
HON. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
OF IOWA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 9, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10638) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. HAUGEN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I have no desire to impose upon the good nature of this House. However, it is natural that I should have an interest in this bill, inasmuch as I come from the greatest agricultural district in the United States—the garden spot of the great and grand State of Iowa; a State which has given homes to two and one-quarter millions of the most prosperous, industrious, intelligent, patriotic, and law-abiding people on earth, embracing within her borders 55,000 square miles, or 35,000,000 acres, of the most productive soil ever fertilized by God's sunlight and rain; a State, according to her census of 1895, with land and improvements valued at $1,088,066,008; a State where 398,577 families are engaged in farming, and who give to the wealth of the world upward of $400,000,000 annually, and who are daily adding to the comfort and happiness of their homes; a State, as shown by the census of 1890, where there are 141,389 farms free from mortgage indebtedness, while but 104,072 farms are mortgaged, and that at only $88,553,000, which is less than 9 per cent of the value of all her lands, which has a total mortgage indebtedness of only $138,085,720, or less than 5 per cent of the value of all her property; and I might add, a State with a lower percentage of illiteracy than any in the Union except one.

I do not come here as a pessimist. I thank God I am an optomist, and I am not here pleading for poverty or for class legislation; but I feel that I have a right to advocate the interests of our agricultural districts.

Now that the money question has been so earnestly and eloquently discussed, and we have listened to you for days, weeks, and months, with so much patience, debating nearly every conceivable subject, the Committee on Agriculture has been given the right of way for to-day, and, through the courtesy of our worthy chairman, I have been accorded the privilege and honor of occupying a portion of this time, and in so doing I wish to devote at least a part of my remarks to the subject under consideration.

THE SCOPE OF AGRICULTURE IN THE UNITED STATES.

We find in the system of large land holdings and the system of subletting of these holdings to many tenants that there are 12,690,150 heads of families engaged in agriculture in the United States. Of this vast number 6,066,417 families own their own land, farm their own premises as best they see fit; and as a result of their good judgment, pluck, and energy we find there are 4,369,527 farms totally free from mortgage indebtedness, while there are 1,696,890 who have yet to complete payment on their lands. There are 6,623,735 of our farmers who are tenants, but we must remember that even this vast army is on the way to prosperity, and the good and thrifty tenant soon acquires sufficient means to purchase a farm of his own.

These industrious tillers of the soil now furnish 150,000,000 bushels of wheat and 200,000,000 bushels of corn for export, whereas in years past we were compelled to import the same commodities. In the United States we produce two-thirds of the cotton crop of the entire world. We do not as a people go on foot, for we had, according to the last census, 12,550,000 horses; for a part of our food and clothing we rely upon 38,000,000 sheep; that we may have our hams, bacon, and lard we depend upon 35,000,000 hogs; and that we have our own milk, cream, and make our own butter is fully demonstrated by the fact that we have 33,600,000 cows.

WHAT OUR FARMERS DEMAND.

Upon the subject of butter these 12,000,000 farmers are now demanding some national legislation, legislation that is in my opinion worthy of earnest and favorable consideration at the hands of this Congress; and I have no doubt but what their bill (H. R. 3717) known as the Grout bill will receive such consideration when the time comes for action. At least, it should receive the support of every member who really has the dairy interests at heart and who is here as their representative, notwithstanding the strong opposition made by the meat combines under the pretense that such legislation would ruin the cotton industry of the South and the ranchmen of the West.

I expect to have an opportunity to speak upon this subject at a later day, and will not now further take up your time.

THE SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY.

There is another subject to which I wish to call your attention, that of the sugar-beet industry. A few days ago the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee called our attention to the fact that we are annually importing 1,500,000 tons of sugar. Now that it is demonstrated beyond doubt that we have the climate and soil, and nobody denies but we have the skill, capital, and enterprise, it occurs to me that some encouraging legislation along this line would greatly aid in promoting this new industry.

When we stop to consider that we are annually importing 150,000 carloads of sugar, of 10 tons each, or 6,000 train loads of twenty-five cars, a train reaching from the Speaker's desk to his home in Iowa, and that we are annually paying foreign countries in actual cash an amount exceeding the commercial value of the total output of all the silver mines of the world, or the total output of all the gold and silver mines in the United States for 1898, for this single product, sugar, it is at once apparent that this is an important industry to us. And had it not been for the uncertainty of legislation as to our newly acquired territories, and legislation touching directly upon this question, I should have offered an amendment to this bill that would, in my opinion, have encouraged the sugar-beet industry of this country.

But realizing that a desperate effort is being made on the part of the sugar and tobacco trusts to defeat all legislation along this line; and in view of the fact of their partial success in defeating legislation heretofore, and the present influence these combinations seem to have on legislation and the country at large—under these conditions, in my opinion, it would be a great mistake to now encourage an industry which seems destined to be legislated out of existence at an early date.

However, since considerable time and money has been spent by the Government experimenting in growing sugar beets in the United States, there can be no objection to calling attention to the importance of such legislation, as well as the importance of such an industry.

Upon investigation it appears, as a result of the able efforts on the part of our worthy and efficient Secretary of Agriculture, that there are 30 sugar-beet factories in operation in this country, manufacturing at the rate of 100,000 tons of sugar annually. These factories pay farmers about $5,000,000 every year for sugar beet. As sugar has an almost unlimited home market, there is yet room for at least 300 factories with a capacity of 400 tons per day of sugar beets, to supply the 1,500,000 tons of sugar which we yearly import. The establishment of this industry to this extent would give employment to at least 100,000 laborers on the farm at about $300 for from four to six months' work, or two times the total number of men employed in all of the gold and silver mines of the United States.

The cost of seed, cultivation, and marketing of an acre of sugar beets is estimated at $36 to $45 per acre. Labor costs about $37 per acre, and the seed $3 per acre, or an average cost of $40 per acre. It will take 750,000 acres, with an average yield of 16 tons per acre, to supply the 12,000,000 tons of sugar beet required. This gives to the laborers on the farm—counting seed as labor—the handsome sum of $40,000,000.

Next comes the landowner for his share. The beet sells for from $4 to $5 per ton, or an average price of $4.50, and the yield is from 10 to 22 tons per acre, or an average yield of 16 tons, which equals $72 per acre. Deduct the $40 for labor, and we have $32 for land rent and fertilizing, or the net sum of $24,000,000.

Then comes the manufacturer. It is estimated that 300 factories are needed, at a cost of $350,000 each, or a total cost of $105,000,000.

What will the manufacturer realize out of his investment? He must purchase 12,000,000 tons of beets, at $4.50; total	$54,000,000
He employs 50,000 men, and here again the laborer receives a handsome sum of	10,000,000
It is estimated that the fuel, coke, limestone, and incidental expenses will amount to about	16,000,000
He is entitled, we will say, to 10 per cent on his investment of $105,000,000 for deterioration of plant, repairs, insurance, etc., or	10,500,000
A total of	90,500,000
He disposes of his 1,500,000 tons of sugar at 4 cents per pound; total	120,000,000
Deduct total expenditures	90,500,000
And we have a balance of	29,500,000

with which to pay dividends, or 28 per cent on his investment.

In view of these facts, does it not seem that this is a subject which is entitled to favorable and early consideration? It is entitled to encouragement in the way of a protective tariff rather than the free trade advocated in the interests of Havemeyer and his associates, which would be sure to give a deathblow to this profitable industry.

Rather than to pay foreign countries $320,000 every working day of the year we had better legislate so as to pay this money to our own laborers and farmers. In so doing we would not only legislate in the interest of the farmer and laborer, but we would legislate in the interest of every American citizen, be he banker, lawyer, business man, physician, laborer, farmer, or manufacturer. All go hand in hand. Nobody will deny but that the prosperity of our people depends largely upon the prosperity of the tiller of the soil and that our interests are in common. When we place $100,000,000 annually into the hands of the American people we add that much to our purchasing power, and we all share in its benefits.

THE PORTO RICAN TARIFF BILL.

This suggests to me the importance of a subject which has been under consideration by this House for some time and upon which many able and eloquent speeches have been delivered.

No objection is raised to the 58,000 tons of Porto Rican sugar coming into the United States free of duty, on the ground that this small amount would materially affect the sugar market in this country, but we do protest against establishing a precedent for the Territories which will have to be legislated upon by us later.

The same argument used for free trade with Porto Rico will be used as to the other Territories. Your claim is that Porto Rico is entitled to free trade and the same privileges we have under the Constitution. Now, if this argument holds good as to Porto Rico, it will hold good as to the Philippines, Hawaii, and Cuba—if in time she should become a part of the United States, which now seems more than likely.

Cuba alone can produce enough sugar to supply the United States, and so can Hawaii and the Philippines; and I have no doubt when we come to legislate for these islands that every free-trade Democrat and every free-trade Republican will be here advocating his free-trade theory as earnestly and eloquently as ever and that we will again be told by our friends across the Hall that we are absolutely helpless and have no power to legislate or to protect ourselves under the Constitution.

Nobody will contend that our farmers and laborers can compete with the farmers and laborers in the newly acquired Territories, where wages average from 5 to 30 cents per day, while we pay from one to two dollars per day. I believe it is safe to say that the price paid labor in the United States is fifteen or twenty times higher than wages paid in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico and four times higher than in Cuba. And besides they have the advantages in soil and climate.

Free trade with Porto Rico means free trade with the Philippine Islands; free trade with Porto Rico means free trade with Hawaii and Cuba. Free trade with these islands means death to the sugar and tobacco industries of this country and every other industry that comes into competition with the industries of these islands. It is driving the nail into the coffin of the cigar industry of this country, an industry with $100,000,000 invested, employing 125,000 people, paying them $60,000,000 in wages, consuming $50,000,000 worth of tobacco, producing $150,000,000 worth of cigars annually—saying nothing about the tropical fruits, vegetables, etc.

In my opinion this will be the result of your earnest labors should you succeed; and I feel that the time of my Democratic friends on the other side of this Chamber might have been better occupied than playing into the hands and following the dictates of Havemeyer and his associates, who are so numerous in and about Washington. You are now glorifying in your prospects; but time will tell whether the sugar trusts will dictate legislation or whether the memorials of our farmers and laborers will be heeded. It is a simple business proposition.

The question is whether we are to follow the dictates of the few against the wishes of the many or whether we are to accede to the wishes of our farmers and laborers. In view of these facts, do you wonder that our farmers were holding mass meetings all over this vast country, protesting against this unreasonable and injurious measure?

Let me read to you a memorial sent to Congress by the farmers of America:

I have supported protection for other interests, now I want them to support protection for the farmer. If fruits, sugar, tobacco, vegetables, etc., are to be admitted free from Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines, then admit free manufactures from England and Europe. If duties on the products I have to sell are reduced 12 to 15 per cent by "reciprocity," then make a like reduction on the manufactures I have to buy. So long as there is protection I want my share of it, especially on those things upon which a duty will really protect. Don't subject me to free-trade conditions and expect me to vote protection for the other fellow.

Much has been said as to the hardships imposed upon the poor, suffering Porto Ricans by this 15 per cent tariff of the Dingley rate. Let us see what hardships are imposed by this bill. The bill provides:

SEC. 3. That on and after the passage of this act all merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico and coming into Porto Rico from the United States shall be entered at the several ports of entry upon payment of 15 per cent of the duties which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles of merchandise imported from foreign countries; and whenever the legislative assembly of Porto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Porto Rico by this act established, and shall by resolution duly passed so notify the President, he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going into Porto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Porto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty; and in no event shall any duties be collected after the 1st day of March, 1902, on merchandise and articles going into Porto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Porto Rico.

SEC. 4. That the duties and taxes collected in Porto Rico in pursuance of this act, less the cost of collecting the same, and the gross amount of all collections of duties and taxes in the United States upon articles of merchandise coming from Porto Rico, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but shall be held as a separate fund, and shall be placed at the disposal of the President to be used for the government and benefit of Porto Rico until the government of Porto Rico herein provided for shall have been organized, when all moneys theretofore collected under the provisions hereof, then unexpended, shall be transferred to the local treasury of Porto Rico, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate the several ports and subports of entry in Porto Rico and shall make such rules and regulations and appoint such agents as may be necessary to collect the duties and taxes authorized to be levied, collected, and paid in Porto Rico by the provisions of this act, and he shall fix the compensation and provide for the payment thereof of all such officers, agents, and assistants as he may find it necessary to employ to carry out the provisions hereof: Provided, however, That as soon as a civil government for Porto Rico shall have been organized in accordance with the provisions of this act and notice thereof shall have been given to the President he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereafter all collections of duties and taxes in Porto Rico under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the treasury of Porto Rico, to be expended as required by law for the government and benefit thereof instead of being paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Is it a hardship when we say to these people, "You are now paying $1.60 per hundred on sugar exported by you into the United States; we will now give you a discount of 85 per cent, and all that you will be compelled to pay is 24 cents per hundred; every dollar collected as duty on merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico and going into Porto Rico from the United States will be placed in the hands of our President for your benefit; and in addition to this we will give you the $2,000,000 heretofore collected under the Dingley bill?" No, it is not a hardship, and the argument that we are imposing upon the people of Porto Rico is all bosh.

Upon this subject let me say to you, if you are the friends of the Porto Ricans I submit to you that you should have at least been in favor of a proposition to donate them the $2,000,000 which has recently been done by the friends of this bill. It is not in good taste for you gentlemen to appear before the country as philanthropists and friends of the Porto Ricans when you have voted against this proposition to donate the $2,000,000, and are endeavoring to defeat this bill, knowing well that if it is defeated the Porto Ricans will be compelled to pay the 100 per cent of the Dingley rate instead of the 15 per cent provided for in this bill.

This bill is a temporary measure. Whenever the legislative assembly of Porto Rico shall decide upon and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of that government, and they notify the President to that effect, all tariff duties on merchandise, both imported and exported, shall cease, and in no event shall duties be collected after the 1st day of March, 1902.

The gentlemen on the other side of this House claim that we are placed in an unfortunate condition; absolutely powerless to protect ourselves under the Constitution; and that when the flag was raised in these islands the Constitution jumped over there also, and that within the twinkling of an eye the Tagals, the Malays, the Negritos, and all the numerous savages and tribes who inhabit those islands were placed upon a level with the citizens of the United States—people who can not read or write (except a small percentage) and people who never heard of the United States given the same privileges, the same laws, and the same liberties as we ourselves have.

I am not a constitutional lawyer; nevertheless I have a high respect for the profession; but there are some things about the Constitution that need no constitutional lawyer to interpret. When I read Article IV, section 3, "that Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting territories and property belonging to the United States," viewing this from a layman's standpoint, it would seem that the Constitution is a constitution for the States and not for the Territories, except as it may be extended over these Territories by legislation; that these Territories, as all other Territories have done, must look to Congress for legislation, and that they are the property of the United States, and not a part of the United States or members of the Federal States.

The constitutionality of this measure has been ably and fully discussed by our able leaders on both sides of this Chamber, and I have no desire to impose further upon your good nature. I am inclined to believe as did our greatest constitutional lawyers and statesmen, such as Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Daniel Webster, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Benton, and others, and I feel safe in following their footsteps.

If we are powerless under the Constitution to legislate respecting these islands, and can not protect ourselves, then the sooner we know this the better, for we will soon be called upon to legislate for the Philippines and other islands.

The Democracy has thrown every possible obstacle in the way of the passage of this Porto Rican tariff bill, and could they accomplish its defeat they would have an opportunity to assert that a precedent had been established and must be applied to the Philippines and Hawaii or any other territory not contiguous to the United States with which we may subsequently have to deal. But this is not all. You would have contended, and justly, too, that the Republican party had been the cause of bringing the cheap labor of the Tropics into direct competition with our laboring men and farmers. Is it to be wondered at that the Democracy made such a desperate fight for the political opportunities just mentioned?

I feel justified in supporting this bill not only because I am unwilling that the prosperous, intelligent, and hard-working farmers and laborers of my State be placed on the same level with the cheap and savage labor of the Orient, but because I believe that our right to deal with these islands as seems best for our welfare and their welfare should be asserted at once; also because I believe that the 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff rate will bring no hardships with it, but, on the contrary, will bring a much-needed relief until such customs, laws, and internal-revenue system can be inaugurated as are adapted to their conditions and wants.

I am not surprised at the Democratic opposition to this bill, or any other bill, for that matter. They must have something upon which to make their campaign this fall. I really feel sorry for them. The tariff is a thing of the past; their free-silver theory has been thwarted by the enactment of a Republican measure which places us upon a sound financial basis, and they have practically abandoned that issue; they are trying to find refuge under the blanket of imperialism and military despotism, but the wisdom, skill, and tact with which our noble President is handling this is not in the least encouraging to them.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY—PROSPERITY.

Our country is prosperous; our people are at work; our exports are increasing in large proportions, and our imports are decreasing. What more could we ask?

In 1896 President McKinley said:

What we want is a sound money and a chance to earn it.

In this we were all agreed; and the voters of this magnificent country decided by a large majority to give Mr. McKinley and the Republican party an opportunity to carry this maxim into effect.

Something over three years have passed; the country has been lifted out of chaos, stagnation, and financial depression and placed into an era of prosperity the like of which has never before been written on the pages of history; and the confidence intrusted in the President by the people has not been betrayed. This confidence has been fulfilled, and for proof of this we need but turn to our national ledger and glance at the business entries.

The business for the fiscal year ending in 1899 tells a most eloquent story of prosperity. We sold foreign nations $1,227,443,425 worth of American products, and in return bought only $696,077,388, or a balance of trade in our favor of $531,366,037. For the fiscal year ending 1898 we sold foreign nations $1,231,329,950, and in return bought only $616,205,159, a balance of trade in our favor amounting to the enormous sum of $615,000,000, or a total for the two years of $1,145,000,000.

Compare this with the last two years of Cleveland's Administration under the tariff act of 1894. We then exported more than we imported only $278,000,000; and in the last two years of the McKinley Administration, and under the Dingley law, we have exported more than we have imported, as above stated, $1,145,000,000, a gain of $878,000,000 under the tariff of 1896, as compared with the tariff of 1894. This gain has been large, constant, steady.

We have not only been fortunately prosperous, but we have been fortunate in war; and this good fortune is largely due to the wisdom, diplomacy, and stalwartness of our honored President.

William McKinley since taking his seat as our Chief Magistrate has used great care and judgment, and has held the reins of the Government with a firm and steady hand from the moment he took control. He has acted wisely and humanely in the past; and if we retain him as our Chief Executive, we have the assurance that the honor, integrity, and glory of America will be maintained and that the inevitable rights, life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, which we now enjoy will be extended to the oppressed and downtrodden people of the West Indies and the Philippines.

We will have the fullest assurance that the grand and beautiful flag of America, now floating with its protecting folds over land and sea, will not be hauled down in shame and dishonor and that the fearless blood and matchless valor of our heroes, both living and dead, will not have been offered in vain on the sacred altar of our country and humanity.

Freedom is that for which our forefathers fought. The unity of our nation is what Lincoln, Grant, and Garfield stood for, and William McKinley stands for all that a true, patriotic American citizen can possibly ask for, namely, peace, prosperity, honor, and integrity, with no cry of the masses against the classes and no cry of the classes against the masses, advocating that an honest day's labor should be paid for with an honest dollar. [Loud applause.]

Rural Mail Delivery.

I want to see the day when the isolation inseparable from farm life will be illuminated at least once each day by the postman, bringing the humblest home in touch, through the press and the post, with all other homes in our broad land. Let there be one hour each day that shall lift the thought of each humble home above its sordid surroundings into contact with the better, nobler thought and aspiration of the nation.

HON. J. WILLIAM STOKES,

OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10538) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. STOKES said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I avail myself of this opportunity to submit some observations and conclusions upon the subject of free delivery of mail in rural districts.

I shall take as my text the bill which I introduced in the Fifty-fifth Congress, known as H. R. 11602, which I ask the Clerk to read as part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11602) to extend free delivery of mail along star routes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all contracts for carrying mail on star routes made after the passage of this act shall include the deposit in the proper boxes placed on the line of the routes for this purpose, without charge to the addressees, any mail matter that may be intrusted to the carrier for such distribution by any postmaster on the route.

SEC. 2. That it shall also be the duty of the said carriers so contracting, in addition to the duties imposed by section 687 of the postal laws, to take up such mail matter as may be deposited in said mail boxes and deposit same for mailing at the next post-office on his route without additional compensation.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of each postmaster, upon a written order from any person living on or near an established star route which comes within the provisions of section 1 of this act, to deliver to the proper mail carrier for that route any mail matter, with instructions as to the proper mail box at which said mail matter shall be deposited.

SEC. 4. That any person desiring his mail deposited along the line of any star route within the terms of section 1 of this act shall erect a box, as convenient as practicable on the roadside, and file with the nearest postmaster on each side of the box a request in writing for the delivery of his mail to the proper carrier for deposit in said mail box.

SEC. 5. That all mail boxes along such star routes shall be numbered consecutively, beginning from the initial point of the star route.

SEC. 6. That with a view to bringing the mail thus deposited ultimately under the protection of the general postal laws until received by the addressee or his agent, the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to invite submission of plans and devices for special boxes, with duplicate keys for the use of carriers and addressees, respectively.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, that bill was introduced January 14, 1899, and was reintroduced by me on December 7 of the current Congress as H. R. 2565. It is the same bill which a gentleman on the other side of the Chamber did me the compliment to reintroduce on February 7 of this year.

HOW IT WILL WORK.

The merit of this measure, Mr. Chairman, must be apparent as soon as it is understood. The proposition is to utilize an established network of star-route service for the purpose of extending free delivery of mail in such a way as not to materially embarrass the carrying of the mail under existing contracts and yet secure to a very large proportion of the rural people immense advantages at insignificant cost.

WHAT ARE STAR ROUTES?

It will be understood, of course, that star routes are routes through the rural districts, radiating from railroad points into sections more or less remote from railroad lines. Along these star routes mail is now carried in closed pouches from the initial post-office to the other outlying offices by private conveyance. The Post-Office Department of the Government is now maintaining 22,482 of these routes, which are let by contract every four years to the lowest responsible bidder, after wide advertisement.

THEY COVER THE COUNTRY.

The large number of these routes and their distribution at once suggests what is a fact, that they cover fairly well the entire rural districts of our country; and the method of giving out the contracts for the service insures cheapness, and, as a matter of fact, it is the cheapest carrying service in the world outside of the coolie chair service of India perhaps; and, I regret to say, is almost as discreditable, so far as appearances go, as it is cheap. But that is another story.

FREE TO THE PEOPLE.

My bill proposes to impose upon the contractors who undertake the carrying of the mail from one post-office to another along these 22,482 star routes the additional duty of delivering mail in boxes erected along the routes by persons living on or adjacent thereto. It also requires that the said contractors shall take up and mail at the next post-office on the route any mail that may be left in said boxes.

And this additional service the contractors are required to perform without charge to the people served.

PAID BY THE GOVERNMENT.

They are to include this service in their estimates and base their bids upon the whole service required, and of course it is paid by the Government like all Government contracts.

The people living on or adjacent to these routes are required to erect the boxes at their own expense and then direct the postmaster at the proper office to send out their mail to be deposited in the proper box.

I can not do better at this point, Mr. Chairman, as a means of conveying to the House a clear conception of the plan in its entirety, than to quote one of several very lucid and forceful editorials of the News and Courier, of Charleston, S. C., a few days after the introduction of the bill.

It is but justice to state here that the editor of that paper was one of the first to take up the proposition and has done incalculable service in pressing it through his columns:

FREE MAIL DELIVERY ON STAR ROUTES.

The bill introduced in Congress by Representative STOKES, of South Carolina, "to extend free delivery of mail along star routes" impresses us as being a wholly practicable and very desirable measure.

As explained yesterday, the bill provides, in substance, that mail boxes be placed on the roadside along the "star" routes, or country routes, and shall be numbered consecutively. Persons living near the route and desiring to have their mail deposited in these boxes will have only to leave with the postmaster at each end of the route a written request for the delivery of their mail to the carrier, designating the number of the box in which it is to be deposited, and thereupon it becomes the duty of the carrier to deposit it, without charge, and so every person living on or near the star route would get his mail every time the carrier passed without expense or loss of time in going to the terminal post-office.

Some necessary details are added, but this bare sketch of the scheme will suffice, we are sure, to commend it to the hearty support of the rural constituents of every Congressman. Whatever objections, if any, may be offered to it by the postal authorities or others will be promptly and effectually overridden, we are sure, by the very large number of persons interested in its early adoption. It is in practical operation already for the benefit of a few persons living on or near such routes, and it should be put into operation for the benefit of all of them. The wonder is that so simple and desirable a plan for the wide extension of mail facilities to out-of-the-way places was not devised and adopted long ago. The people concerned in its operation can be safely trusted, we think, to take care of the boxes and to bring to sharp account those who may undertake to meddle with them. The Government will need but few detectives for that service.

Mr. STOKES believes, with reason, that the system would be inexpensive, and would soon prove to be self-sustaining. "For the present the people who get this service would have to furnish their own boxes, but the bill contemplates that ultimately they would be furnished by the Government, if the service justifies it." The right plan would appear to be to have the Government furnish them at cost to the several persons served by each box, so as to insure the popular interest in the due preservation and protection of the depositories. A simple iron box made to exclude rain, fitted with a safe lock and keys enough for each person or family served, would not cost much, would cost that little but once in years, and the cost, whatever it might be, would constitute no considerable tax on the persons served. The great majority would gladly pay very much more for such service.

On the whole, we repeat that Mr. STOKES's scheme is an admirable and unobjectionable one, and it is bound to be a popular one when its merits become generally known. We believe that he will have little difficulty in having it promptly adopted by Congress, and that when it is adopted it is certain to become firmly established and to lead to the still further development of the service which he predicts for it, amounting practically to "a general system of rural free delivery."

SOME HISTORY.

As will be observed, the sixth section of my bill contemplates bringing all the rural mail boxes provided for in the bill ultimately under the protection of the United States statutes. I had not proceeded far, however, in the discussion of the merits of the scheme with the experts of the Post-Office Department before I discovered that this just but unessential feature would arouse, or have a tendency to arouse, opposition to a scheme which was considered, in all other respects, not only unobjectionable but highly meritorious. While the sixth section was essentially just in the abstract, it opened up possibilities of new and largely increased burdens upon an already overburdened bureau—that of post-office inspection and mail depredations. The fear seemed to exist in some quarters that rural mail boxes in secluded or isolated sections of the country would invite depredations by the wanton or the vicious, and thus greatly increase the burden upon this arm of the public service with a class of cases where the chances of detection and punishment would be small.

THE LINE OF LEAST RESISTANCE.

Being unwilling to jeopardize the whole scheme by insisting upon a nonessential feature, I introduced on January 25, 1899, another bill, which was identical with the bill read by the Clerk save that the objectionable section was omitted. This bill I submitted formally to the Post-Office Department for examination and suggestion.

INDORSED BY THE DEPARTMENT.

In response, I received within three days the following letter from the ever alert and progressive gentleman who presides over and directs this branch of the postal service, General Shallenberger. I ask the Clerk to read, as a part of my remarks, his letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 28, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, asking me for an expression of opinion in regard to bill H. R. 11602, introduced by you in the House on January 14, 1899, entitled "A bill to extend free delivery of mail along star routes," and in reply to state that the object of the bill has my entire approval and recommendation. I would, however, suggest several changes therein, so that the bill as changed would read as follows:

"That all contracts for carrying mail on star routes made after the passage of this act shall include the deposit in the proper boxes placed on the line of the routes for this purpose, without charge to the addressees, of any mail matter that may be intrusted to the carrier for such distribution by any postmaster on the route.

"SEC. 2. That it shall also be the duty of said carrier, in addition to the duties imposed by section 3993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to take up such mail matter properly prepaid by stamps as he shall find in said mail boxes and deposit the same for mailing at the next post-office at which he arrives on his route without additional compensation.

"SEC. 3. That any person desiring his mail deposited along the line of any star route within the terms of section 1 of this act shall erect a box as convenient as practicable on the roadside, and file with the postmaster at the post-office at which his mail is addressed, which shall be one of the two post-offices on the route on either side and next to the box, a request in writing for the delivery of his mail to the proper carrier for deposit in said mail box.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the postmaster at every such post-office, upon a written order from any person living on or near an established star route which comes within the provision of section 1 of this act, to deliver to the proper mail carrier for that route any mail matter, except registered mail, with instructions as to the proper mail box at which said mail matter shall be deposited; but no mail matter so delivered to a carrier for deposit shall be carried past another post-office on the route before being deposited in a box.

"SEC. 5. That all mail boxes along such star routes shall be numbered or marked as may be directed by the Postmaster-General.

"SEC. 6. That the Postmaster-General may prescribe regulations for the proper performance of service under this act."

I think it is entirely feasible to combine a system of box deliveries and collections in connection with the existing star routes, now numbering about 22,000, in such manner as to largely increase the mail accommodation to people residing in rural districts without detriment to the star service or without a large increase in the cost thereof. We know that it is the practice now on many star routes for the carriers to take the mail and deposit it in boxes along the line of the routes, but in the absence of legislation it rests entirely with the pleasure of the carriers whether they will give the people this accommodation or not. It also puts it in the power of a carrier to discriminate against some people while accommodating others on the same route. The proposed law would give equal accommodation to all people living on or near the line of star routes.

I do not think it would largely increase the cost, because the distance traveled by the carriers would not be increased at all. It would require a little more time, of course, for the carriers to stop and deposit the mail or collect it from the boxes, and in some cases it would require more intelligent carriers than are now employed, as all carriers must be able to read addresses on the mail matter taken by them outside of the bags to be placed in the proper boxes. It is also possible that in those cases where carriers are now charging the people along the line of route a fee for delivering their mail into boxes that there would be a tendency to slightly increase the price under the contract if the law prohibited the charging of such fees; but as these star-route contracts are let after having been widely advertised, and as there is much competition in bidding for them, I think that the increase in cost would be but slight compared with the additional facilities rendered to the public.

If it should be found impracticable to get this bill acted upon in both the House and Senate during the present session of Congress, I suggest that practically the same object could be accomplished by introducing an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill, now pending in the Senate committee, to the following effect:

"Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in making contracts for the transportation of the mail on star routes, is authorized to prescribe such regulations as will require the contractors to deliver mail into and collect mail from boxes located along the line of such routes; such boxes to be erected and maintained at the expense of persons living on or near such routes who may desire to have their mail so carried."

Very respectfully,

W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. W. STOKES, House of Representatives.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, the changes suggested, it will be observed, are purely verbal, and do not affect the principle of my bill.

THE STRENUOUS HOURS.

Although thus cordially indorsed by the Department, and favorably considered by many members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it seemed impossible in the closing weeks of an expiring Congress to get independent consideration in the House, even if reported by the committee, and so I adopted the suggestion of the Department. Then through the earnest and efficient efforts of my colleague in the other end of this building, Senator TILLMAN, the amendment was placed on the Post-Office appropriation bill, but by a clerical error it went out in conference.

WHAT IT WILL COST.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, the probable cost of any public enterprise should always be an important consideration. But it is not and should not be the first or the controlling consideration. Whenever it is determined definitely that the country needs any particular thing, it is entitled to the best of that thing; when it is definitely determined that the country needs a certain number of battle ships, the dominant consideration is the best ships.

THE BEST THE CHEAPEST.

There may be disputes about the need and about the number; but once the need and the number are determined, considerations of economy and of every other kind impel to get the best; and the people are always ready to pay the bills, provided they are sure they are getting the best.

And so in the postal facilities, what the country needs and what it wants is the best possible facilities for the transaction of business through the mails, and there will be no kicking about paying for it, if the country is convinced that it is actually getting the best and getting what it is paying for. What it wants is service, and it is willing to pay for efficient service. Still the inquiry, what it will cost, is pertinent and proper; and it is incumbent upon the proponent to answer in a rational way.

NOT WITHOUT DATA.

Fortunately, we are not entirely without data of the most significant character. The effort to fix the scheme in the Post-Office appropriation bill last year having miscarried through a concatenation of incidents frequently attendant upon the closing hours of an expiring Congress, I suggested to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General the propriety of making an experiment of the scheme in those States whose quadrennium will expire July next, and which were to be relet for four years in the then coming fall (1900).

A TENTATIVE APPLICATION.

After mature deliberation from all aspects, it was determined to put the provisions of the bill into operation tentatively in limited areas of the section to be let anew in the following fall. My own State—South Carolina—was selected for the experiment, and the results so far attained fully vindicate the wisdom and the progressive spirit of the Department. Accordingly, the instructions for the bidding on star-route contracts within South Carolina, in addition to the usual requirements, were as follows:

Mail carriers to deposit mail in boxes along the routes.

In addition to proposals for carrying the mails on the routes and subject to the conditions hereinbefore set forth, proposals will also be received for carrying the mails on the same routes in the State of South Carolina, subject to the same conditions, and also subject to further requirements, as follows:

Any person living on or near any star route herein described who desires his mail deposited in a box on the line of the route by the carrier on said route may provide and erect a suitable box on the roadside, located in such manner as to be reached as conveniently as practicable by the carrier, and such person shall file with the postmaster at the post-office to which his mail is addressed (which shall be one of the two post-offices on the route on either side of and next to the box) a request in writing for the delivery of his mail to the carrier on the route for deposit in said mail box, at the risk of the addressee.

It shall be the duty of the postmaster at every such post-office, upon a written order from any person living on or near the star route, to deliver to the proper mail carrier for that route any mail matter, except registered mail, with instructions as to the proper mail box at which said mail matter shall be deposited; but no mail matter so delivered to a carrier for deposit shall be carried past another post-office on the route before being deposited in a mail box.

The carrier on the star route will be required to receive from any postmaster on the route any mail matter that may be intrusted to him outside of the usual mail bag, and shall carry such mail matter to and deposit it in the proper boxes placed on the line of the route for this purpose, such service by the carrier to be without charge to the addressees.

The mail carriers must be able to read and write the English language and be of sufficient intelligence to properly handle and deposit the mail for boxes along the routes.

Proposal blanks for service in South Carolina will be furnished in such form that bidders may submit proposals on one blank for the two classes of service, viz: (1) For carrying the mails between post-offices only (or to and from other routes), without being required to deposit any in boxes along the line of route; and (2) for carrying the mails between post-offices (or to and from other routes), including the depositing of mail in boxes along the line of route.

As will be understood, this left the Department free to accept whichever bid seemed most advantageous to the service. The opening of these bids in December last was watched with keen interest by all who realized their significance in the premises. When the totals for the State of South Carolina were footed up and comparison made of the footings, with and without the free-delivery feature, it was found that the additional expense of delivering the mails free along all the star routes in the State of South Carolina—some 372 in number, covering a very large proportion of the population of the State—was only about $6,600, or only about one-third cent per mile traveled. The exact figures were:

For pouch service and free delivery along the 372 routes in South Carolina	$62,844
For pouch service only along the same routes	56,183
Net increase for the free-delivery feature	6,661

It will be seen that this makes less than 12 per cent, or about one-third cent per mile traveled, as the difference in the cost of service due to the free-delivery feature. Now, there are in the United States, as already stated, 22,482 star routes, covering 269,482 miles, and costing last year $5,114,943.83½.

The cost of the service per mile of length, therefore, was $18.98. The cost per mile traveled was only 3.87 cents.

APPLYING FIGURES TO FACTS.

Now, apply the data derived from the South Carolina experiment to these facts and figures, and what do we get? The cost of inaugurating the free-delivery feature upon the star routes in South Carolina, as already seen, was only 12 per cent additional, and as the conditions in that State are not exceptional or abnormal it is fair to assume the results obtained there as average results. At least the relation of the pouch service only and the same service with free-delivery feature is not abnormal.

Computing 12 per cent on the cost of the entire star-route system—namely, $5,114,943.83½—we have $613,793.25 as the probable net cost of extending free mail delivery to the residents on and adjacent to the 22,482 star routes in the United States.

Or, taking the other basis of computation, at the rate of one-third cent per mile traveled, the rate of increased cost in South Carolina, we would have as the net cost only $440,229. In other words, the mails can be delivered free along all the star routes in the United States at a net additional cost of not to exceed $613,793.25 per annum. Now, it has been estimated that the star-route delivery (as the star routes now exist) would serve in the neighborhood of half the rural residents. But assume that they serve only one-third—though I believe the other estimate is nearer the truth—and what do we get? Three times $613,793.25 would be $1,841,379.75 as the total net additional cost of rural free delivery by the method proposed in my bill. It is scarcely worth while, I take it, to point out that the star routes could be multiplied almost indefinitely to meet the requirements of such service. Doubtless some supplementary service would be necessary to meet special conditions in limited areas, but in the aggregate the cost for these would be relatively small. Upon the facts and figures demonstrated, it seems highly probable that rural free delivery may be had practically through the star-route method—supplemented in limited areas, as stated, where the star route might not be applicable—at a net additional cost of not to exceed $2,000,000 for the whole United States. In no other part of the service can such vast values be bought for so trifling a sum relatively. In view of all that rural free delivery means to the 40,000,000 farmers and rural residents of our country, who will rise in his place here and oppose this pitiful sum for their benefit? Whether we take this or the other as a basis of our estimate, compared with the service rendered to the rural population of the United States, the cost is trifling and not to be considered for a moment. It is the cheapest mail-delivery service in the world.

A COMPARISON.

Now, let us glance for a moment at the cost of the proposed service in contrast with that of other branches of free-delivery service.

Marvelous as the figures appear, as marshaled above, it is only when comparison is made with rural-free delivery proper and city delivery that its full significance is comprehended.

The showing so far made is no less surprising than it is gratifying, as will be more fully appreciated when it is understood that the net cost of rural free delivery proper is about 5 cents per mile traveled. Or, adopting another basis of comparison, the cost of rural free-delivery service, so far as it has been tried, is about 84 cents per capita of rural residents served.

SOME ESTIMATES.

There are, of course, no definite data bearing upon the number of people who will be served under this star-route experiment in South Carolina; and even if there were, such basis would be useful only in comparison with rural routes in South Carolina where the density of the population and length of routes and other conditions are similar. But assuming that the average star route in the sections covered by the rural delivery service would serve only one-half as many people, the ratio of cost per capita of people served would be as two-thirds of a cent is to 5 cents, or as 2 is to 15. That is to say, the cost per capita of people served free by the star-route delivery proposed in my bill would be less than one-seventh as great as the cost per capita of people served free by the rural delivery proper. Or, translating this into cents, if the cost of rural delivery proper be 84 cents per capita of the people served, as estimated by Mr. Heath, then under the state of facts and relations assumed the cost per capita of people served under the method proposed in my bill would be 11¼ cents—a comparison highly favorable to the star-route method, surely, wherever it can be applied.

COMPARED WITH CITY DELIVERIES.

As compared with the cost of city delivery the showing for star-route service is even better.

The cost of free delivery in the smaller cities is very near to $2.80 per capita, so that a comparative table of cost would stand thus:

FREE DELIVERY.

Cost per capita by—
Smaller cities	$2.80
Rural delivery	.84
Star-route delivery	.11¼

A sufficiently striking comparison, surely, upon the face of the figures. But when we take into account all that free delivery of mail means in the country as compared with its meaning in the towns, the difference becomes well-nigh incalculable.

In the town it means the saving of a few minutes' walk, at the outside, to the near-by post-office. In the country it means the saving of several hours with man and beast—a ride of 6 to 10 miles, perhaps; and then the mail to be had, forsooth, only on certain days of the week. And this is not all that free delivery of mail means in the country, incalculable as this seems.

In his last annual report our able and efficient First Assistant Postmaster-General, Perry S. Heath, after a careful survey of the results of rural delivery, so far as ascertained, thus sums up the material, tangible significance of the service:

The facts hereinafter set forth, with some elaboration of detail which the importance of the subject seems to me to warrant, will, I think, demonstrate—

That the free delivery of mails in rural communities can be widely extended with great benefit to the people and with little cost to the revenue.

That whenever the system has been judiciously inaugurated, with a sincere purpose to make it a success, it has been followed by these beneficial results:

I. Increased postal receipts. More letters are written and received. More newspapers and magazines are subscribed for. So marked is this advancement that quite a number of rural routes already pay for themselves by the additional business they bring.

II. Enhancement of the value of farm lands reached by rural free delivery. This increase of value has been estimated at as high as $5 per acre in some States. A moderate estimate is from $2 to $3 per acre.

III. A general improvement of the condition of the roads traversed by the rural carrier. In the Western States especially the construction of good roads has been a prerequisite to the establishment of rural free-delivery service. In one county in Indiana a special agent reports that the farmers incurred an expense of over $2,600 to grade and gravel a road in order to obtain rural free delivery.

IV. Better prices obtained for farm products, the producers being brought into daily touch with the state of the markets, and thus being enabled to take advantage of information heretofore unattainable.

V. To these material advantages may be added the educational benefits conferred by relieving the monotony of farm life through ready access to wholesome literature, and the keeping of all rural residents, the young people as well as their elders, fully informed as to the stirring events of the day. The moral value of these civilizing influences can not be too highly rated.

While these comments were addressed specifically to one kind of rural free delivery of mail, it must be apparent to everyone that they are equally applicable to all phases of the service.

INCREASE OF REVENUE.

In neither case above considered does the increase of postal revenues, which usually follows increased facilities, enter into the estimate. I have taken no account of that, but analogy would justify us in expecting the comparison from that aspect to be quite as favorable to the star-route delivery. We know by actual statistics that in the smaller class of cities referred to above the increase of postal revenues traceable to the institution of free delivery is not large, owing to the relative smallness of the additional service. In the rural-delivery service, however, the increase of postal receipts directly traceable to the institution of the service ranges from 50 to 75 per cent. This enormous rate of increase is due, no doubt, to the relatively enormous increase of facility carried.

There is no reason to suppose that under conditions so nearly analogous the star route free-delivery service as proposed in my bill, and as actually operating in South Carolina, will not show an equal increase in the postal revenues. On the contrary, there is every reason to expect an equally marked increase following each extension of free delivery by means of star routes.

COUNT THE CREDITS.

And when the proper entries are made upon the credit side of the free-delivery account in each branch of the service, the net cost of the service as proposed in my bill will be reduced at least pari passu with the cost of rural delivery service proper; and both these phases of rural delivery will more than hold their own in comparison with the cost of city free delivery.

FALSE PROPHETS.

Mr. Chairman, some years ago, when I was advocating larger appropriations and fair treatment for rural free delivery, the opponents of the proposition confidently, not to say rashly, asserted that a general system of rural free delivery would cost $40,000,000 a year to begin with and would ultimately bankrupt the Government. At that time, with the meager statistical information at hand, it was difficult to refute these assertions.

Postmaster-General Wilson, I think it was, predicted that it would cost $20,000,000 to inaugurate the system, and he refused outright to expend the small amount Congress appropriated.

How stands the case to-day? What do the figures teach—and that, too, when the system is in its infancy, hardly yet thoroughly patronized by those whom it is intended to benefit?

In the light of the experiment in South Carolina, as applied to the country at large, we can arrive at some approximation to the cost; and every dollar of this cost could be saved out of the excessive amounts now paid to railroads for carrying mail. Let it not be forgotten, too, that this is based upon the crude results of an infant experiment. We have every reason to expect that, like all other branches of the service, better and cheaper methods will be invented.

It is natural and rational to expect that as the system unfolds, better methods will be evolved. But facts so far demonstrate how utterly worthless and unreliable were the assertions of those prophets of evil two years ago. The system is here to stay!

In one form or another the farmers of the country are to have their just proportion of the benefits which the money of the country is annually expended to purchase for free-mail delivery, and don't you forget it, Mr. Objector. Let no man deceive himself about this. We are not going to be frightened from our proposition of equal benefits as well as equal burdens for the farmers and rural residents of our country.

NO CONFLICT WITH OTHER SERVICE.

Mr. Chairman, in such comparisons as I have instituted for the purpose of establishing my plan in the confidence of the House, I wish it understood that I am not disparaging free delivery in cities or underrating the other forms of rural delivery. On the contrary, I have sought, in season and out of season, at all times, to extend both systems and to equalize as far as practicable the benefits which a given amount of money to be expended each year will buy. On this my record is clear; but lest some caviler arise in the future, I appeal to the record here. Two years ago I made the fight to double the appropriation for experimental rural free delivery which gave us $300,000, and for the first time in our history put the experiment on a fair basis. On that occasion I said in part:

FAIR PLAY FOR RURAL DELIVERY.

At the proper time I shall move to amend the bill along these lines, and I shall ask that the item for rural free delivery be increased from $150,000 to $300,000

If rural free delivery is here as an experiment, I want it treated fairly, and less than $300,000 can not establish a fair test. When the experiment of free delivery in the cities was begun in 1863, it was begun in some sixty-six cities, at an expenditure of $317,063 the first year. The result of the experiment justified the expense in that case. The amount expended has steadily grown from year to year, until it now reaches the fabulous sum of thirteen million a year.

Last year only $50,000 was used in an experiment, so-called, in rural free delivery. The results, as set forth in detail in the report of the Postmaster-General, show that in most cases the receipts so increased as to pay for the service. The interest of the rural population has promptly responded to the increased facilities, and the postal receipts have reflected this interest. And this is precisely the same result that has attended every increased facility to the use of the mails.

And again, in the same speech:

NOT AN EXPERIMENT.

But it is no longer experimental, this rural free-delivery system. It has been in successful operation in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Switzerland for generations; and the meager tests provided last year in twenty-nine States demonstrate its success here.

Whether it is an experiment, however, or not, Mr. Chairman, I insist that some sort of proportion should be observed in the distribution of the benefits which accrue from the expenditure of thirteen millions of public money upon this service. If thirteen million is the figure that we can afford to pay for such service, then I want it distributed so that the benefit it will buy shall be proportionately distributed among the small towns as well as the big ones, among the rural districts as well as the smaller towns.

There can be no defense of any proposition to increase the appropriation for free-delivery service as at present restricted, so long as thousands of rural districts have not even a post-office anywhere within 3 miles of them.

In the same speech I had this to say with reference to the free delivery in towns:

"EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL."

Mr. Chairman, I want to see the arbitrary and wholly artificial limitations upon the free-delivery service removed. I want to see free deliveries everywhere limited to three times per day as a maximum, and then extend the benefits to all towns and thickly settled rural communities once a day at least. For thinly settled portions three, or even less, times per week might be allowable.

On the same occasion, arguing for the equality of benefit as well as equality of burden, I said:

WHY?

When my people want mail, it involves sending from 1 to 6 miles. In the majority of cases it requires several hours with man and horse, and along the star routes mail can be had only on certain days in the week. In the New York City districts, or any other large city districts, the mail is carried to every man's door from three to seven and even nine times per day. Now, it is quite probable that a free-delivery system in the larger cities facilitates the handling of the mail, and in a general way the whole system reflects the benefit in any part. But there is absolutely no just reason why citizens at one end of the commercial line should have their mail thrown into their laps free of cost seven and even nine times a day, whether they want it or not, while those at the other end of the line must travel 6 miles at their own cost to get mail, and even then can not get it except on certain days. This bill proposes practically a bonus of $13,000,000 to 627 cities at the expense of all the smaller towns and rural districts of the country. It makes no provision at all for free delivery in towns of less than 10,000 inhabitants, while the 40,000,000 rural residents are dismissed with the pitiful sum of $150,000.

CITIES DO NOT PAY IT

Ah, but they say, these 627 cities pay for the service they get. I deny it. They had just as well say that the cash box in a large department store pays for all the service in the store. It would be just as rational for New York City, or any other port of entry, to claim that it pays the customs receipts of the port. The postal receipts, like the customs receipts in New York, for instance, do not arise independently of other offices in the system. They are not an inherent attribute of that city which collects them. They are the resultant of reciprocal relationship with every other office in the system. This is too plain for argument.

Mr. Chairman, I was in favor of the fullest provision for rural delivery then. I am for it now, and shall stand for the largest appropriation for that purpose that can be used to advantage. I think the regular budget for postal service should carry at least one and three-quarter million dollars, and I know no branch of the public service where such expenditure would be more wisely made or the benefits more appreciated.

Mr. Chairman, I am for every extension of mail facilities that reason and experience approve. I am especially in favor of every reasonable extension to rural residents. I want to live to see the day when the isolation inseparable from farm life will be illuminated at least once each day by the visit of the postman, bringing each home in touch, through the press and the post, with all other homes in our broad land. Let there be one hour each day that shall lift the thought of each humble home above its sordid surroundings and bring it into contact with the better, nobler thought and aspiration of the nation. I confidently expect to see these plans well advanced toward realization before I close my Congressional career; and if I can be instrumental in bringing about that glad consummation I shall feel that my service here has not been fruitless.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it may not be improper to state that this bill has been strongly indorsed by almost every agricultural journal in the country, and by many of the leading daily papers. I have also had innumerable letters from prominent citizens in every section commending its terms and urging its passage. There are indorsements in great number from clubs and associations and farmers' alliances. The publication of all these would be burdensome, involving as they do much of repetition. I will content myself with referring them to the committee in charge of the bill, and print only a part of the press notices selected from the large number that have come to my desk.

Very many more papers have published the bill and the comments of the Department, or of other papers, on the same. It is but due these papers and individuals to state here that they have done a valuable service.

APPENDIX.

FREE RURAL DELIVERY.

Congress now has under consideration a bill for the free delivery of mail in the rural districts. Representative STOKES is entitled to much credit for the part that he has borne in forwarding this bill. Through his efforts he has been able to obtain from the Post-Office Department a letter indorsing the plan, and the whole matter is of so much interest to all parts of rural New England that we reproduce the letter for the information of our readers.

[From the New York Commercial.]

FREE DELIVERY IN RURAL SECTIONS.

Representative STOKES has introduced a bill for the extension of the rural free delivery by compelling star-route carriers to deliver mail along their routes. It also provides that persons living along such routes may erect boxes, and on application to the nearest postmaster may have their mail deposited in the boxes without additional charge, and the person serving the route must also collect mail deposited in the boxes for the post-office The Postmaster-General is authorized to receive plans and devices for special boxes with duplicate keys for the carrier and the addressee.

[From the Christian Neighbor, Columbia, S. C.]

RURAL FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

The experiment of "free mail delivery" in the country has been so satisfactory that the system is to be extended in South Carolina. Its introduction and enlargement speak much for the well-directed influence of Congressman J. WILLIAM STOKES, of this State, who has worked vigorously and unceasingly for its adoption.

[From the Pacific Rural Press.]

A movement is being made by Congressman J. W. STOKES, of South Carolina, to require carriers of star mail routes to deliver and collect mail of parties living on or near the line of their routes. The Post-Office Department favors it and says the increased cost would be slight compared with the additional facilities rendered to the public. All it seems to need is a demand on the part of the people, and all interested should see to it that Congressman STOKES's measure does not fail for lack of popular support. Write him that you desire it.

[From the Farmers' Call, Quincy, Ill.]

This will not only be beneficial as a means of stamp revenue to the Government, but will also be beneficial in an educational way, a good deal of correspondence schooling being done through the mails.

[From the Times and Democrat, Orangeburg, S. C.]

FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

Congressman STOKES reintroduced in the House last week his bill to extend the free delivery of mail along star routes. This measure is one in which Mr. STOKES has been much interested for a number of years, and is a question to which he has given much study and attention. The measure is drawn carefully, and if put into law would be a great blessing and convenience to the people of the country districts, who would be saved from the necessity of traveling, in many instances, a long distance to the nearest post-office for their mail. The bill was introduced in the last House, but was never reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

[From the Sumter Herald.]

Congressman STOKES deserves much commendation for the energy and zeal which he has put into his work for the rural free delivery of the mails. We are now in a fair way to reap the result of his labors on behalf of the people, but only partially. Such a great movement is susceptible of almost endless extension as its advantages are seen and as population increases.

[From the Baptist Courier, Greenville, S. C.]

FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

Free mail delivery in country districts will soon be given a fair and extensive trial. It has been tried already in some places and has given great satisfaction. Several routes in this State have been formed, and the system will be fairly tested. Congressman J. W. STOKES, of this State, has been greatly interested in securing this rural free delivery of the mail, and he is to be congratulated on his untiring and successful efforts. It will be a great convenience to the people, and we hope it will be found helpful and successful that the system may be brought into general operation.

[From the Nebraska Farmer.]

CONGRESSMAN STOKES'S BILL.

The bill is a good one. It should become a law. Farmers everywhere should be heartily in favor of it. We urge every reader to write Congressman STOKES and also the Congressman from his district in favor of the bill. Do this at once. Nothing can be done now to secure action at the present session of Congress, but if you delay writing you may forget it; and if you write again next winter, all the better.

Rural free mail delivery should be extended more than along star routes; but half a loaf is better than no bread, and when Congressman STOKES's bill becomes a law we can go to work for another extension of rural free mail delivery.

[Advance comment of the Southern Farm Magazine for May upon Congressman STOKES's bill for improved mail facilities in country districts.]

This seems to be an excellent measure. Observant persons traveling through sparsely settled regions in the South have noticed here and there in a fence corner or in the crotch of a tree little boxes for mail. The letters deposited in them in many cases depend for their delivery upon the honesty of good-hearted passers-by. The boxes are an expression of a want hard to be appreciated by dwellers in cities who have their mail delivered promptly two or three times a day. The mail brings one in close touch with the outside world and with all that is going on there. The lack of such communication is one of the drawbacks upon country life, and if Congressman STOKES can succeed in carrying through his measure he will be a benefactor of farmers not only in the South but in the whole country.

[From the Journal of Agriculture, St. Louis, Mo.]

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Representatives STOKES is urging a bill in Congress which, if it becomes a law, he thinks will be of "more benefit to the residents in rural districts than any measure passed since Rowland Hill inaugurated the penny post." The Second Assistant Postmaster has examined the bill as introduced by Mr. STOKES, and, with some suggested changes, it now reads as follows:

* * * * * * *

[From the Item, Sumter, S. C.]

Congressman STOKES has proved a working member, and has already accomplished a great deal for his constituents. The establishment of free delivery of mail along all star routes in the State is his most important achievement; but it is such things as securing mail boxes for this city that benefit the people directly and make them feel that they have a Congressman who does more than draw his salary. Congressman STOKES is a worker, and he has done more real good for his district than many others who make more speeches and cut a bigger figure as talkers in Congress.

[From the Southern Planter, Richmond, Va.]

The other reform we ask to be supported is that in favor of the extension of free delivery of mail along star routes. This reform has the support of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and should be urged on by every resident in the country. If farmers will let their Representatives and Senators hear from them, both these reforms can be accomplished almost at once.

[From the Times and Democrat.]

Congressman STOKES deserves the thanks of all for his admirable plan of rural mail delivery. It will prove a great convenience to those living a distance from a post-office.

The people living on the line of the rural mail delivery route which has been established in this county are very much pleased with its working so far. They say it is a great convenience.

If Congressman STOKES's plan of rural mail delivery becomes general, which is almost certain, he will have conferred a great blessing on millions who will never have the pleasure of seeing their benefactor.

[From the Cotton Plant.]

FREE MAIL DELIVERY ON STAR ROUTES.

The admirable proposition of Congressman STOKES in regard to the free delivery of mail on star routes is in a fair way of practical accomplishment. Senator TILLMAN has lent his aid to the movement, and when the Post-Office appropriation bill was under consideration in the Senate a few days ago he moved to insert the following amendment as an additional proviso:

"Provided further, That the Postmaster-General, in making contracts for the transportation of the mail on star routes, is authorized to prescribe such regulations as will require the contractors to deliver mail into and collect mail from boxes located along the routes, such boxes to be erected and maintained at the expense and risk of persons living on or near such routes who may desire to have their mail so carried."

[From the Summerville News.]

THERE BE CONGRESSMEN AND CONGRESSMEN.

We have in Congress, and have had for many years, a Representative who at all times looks after the welfare of his district and at the same time is fully alive to the great questions of the day. His efforts to obtain a rural postal delivery, his speeches in behalf of liberty in the Philippines, on the government of Hawaii, on the trade of Porto Rico, and, more recently, in condemning the Loud postal bill—styled by James Lewis Cowles "a bill in behalf of the express companies and against the public weal," a most excellent title, by the way—have made the name of Congressman J. WILLIAM STOKES well and favorably known throughout the whole country and proved him to be a man of broad and liberal views, a ripe scholar, to read whose addresses is a pleasure, and a man who is to be reckoned with in any matter affecting the interests of his State or country.

The career of Dr. STOKES in the Congress of the United States reflects great credit upon the people of South Carolina and particularly upon the people of this district. Would that we had more like him. More power to ye, Doctor.

FREE MAIL DELIVERY ALONG STAR ROUTES.

We most heartily approve of the bill. It is what we have advocated for years as a step preliminary to daily free delivery of mail to all persons in farming territory. We believe that when our readers have read the bill, that they, too, will approve of it. If so, we strongly urge them to write at once, stating that they approve of the bill, to Hon. J. W. STOKES, M. C., Washington, D. C.; Hon. EUGENE F. LOUD, M. C., Washington, D. C., and to the Congressman from their district and the United States Senators from their States.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

The success of free delivery of mails in the rural districts has been so great that the Post-Office appropriation bill for the coming year provides $300,000 for extending this free-delivery service in country districts. This is double the amount allowed last year, but what a pittance it is compared to the necessities of the case. Congress spends millions on the Navy and other things of questionable benefit, quite overlooking these concerns of such direct importance to our own people. One great trouble is that the railroads and the express companies are rather opposed to improvement in the rural mail service. We believe that $10,000,000 a year spent in more frequent mails and free delivery and collection in country districts would within two years be more than reimbursed by the increased receipts due to the enlarged use of the mails that would follow such facilities. If you want the mail collected and distributed to the people served by your rural post-office, write your Congressman at Washington, and he will tell you just how to get it.

[From the Press and Standard.]

Congressman STOKES, of South Carolina, is untiring and enthusiastic in his systematic efforts to equalize and extend the benefits of our postal system. He is now busily at work preparing a bill providing that free delivery of mails be extended to towns under 3,000 population. As the law now stands, free delivery is allowed only to towns with 10,000 population. The bill is finding much favor here and is likely to pass. He is also pressing before the committee the necessity of a further extension of the rural free delivery, and to that end is asking that the $300,000 already appropriated under the law be supplemented by an additional appropriation of $150,000, making the total appropriation this year $450,000. Third Assistant Postmaster-General Perry S. Heath is loud in his praise of the system, and this fact, together with Congressman STOKES's aggressive fight, will give the proposition much weight in the House when it comes up. Free delivery is no longer an experiment; it is an actual necessity in our postal system.

[From the Patriot, Orangeburg, S. C.]

STRONG POINT SCORED.

Representative STOKES scored a strong point in the interest of his constituents a day or two ago, when he succeeded in placing on the Post-Office appropriation bill an amendment which goes a long way toward his star-route free-delivery scheme. Finding that it would be difficult to get through a separate measure on any subject this session, if done at all in time to benefit South Carolina, Mr. STOKES placed it as a rider on the appropriation bill. As contracts for star routes in South Carolina are due to be renewed next fall, and as these contracts are for four years, it is very important that the law be passed in some form prior to the giving out of these contracts.

While Representative STOKES's district will get a large slice of the benefits from this legislation, it is more than a local matter. It will reach the rural communities all over South Carolina and over all the States. It is a measure that is national in its sweep, covering something like 22,000 star routes and the millions of rural residents served by them. Under this system, where applicable, the rural districts have a fair proportion of the benefits of the postal system, fairer than ever before.

[From the Watchman and Southron.]

Congressman STOKES has proved a working member and has already accomplished a great deal for his constituents. The establishment of free delivery of mail along all star routes in the State is his most important achievement, but it is such things as securing mail boxes for this city that benefit the people directly and make them feel that they have a Congressman who does more than draw a salary. Congressman STOKES is a worker, and he has done more real good for his district than many others who make more speeches and cut a bigger figure as talkers in Congress.

EXTENDING FREE RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

J. W. STOKES, a member of Congress from the Seventh district of South Carolina, has introduced a measure into Congress which is calculated greatly to extend the blessings of free rural mail delivery without adding largely to the expense for the service. He proposes to have all established star routes take on the work of free delivery and collection of mail as now is done in the case of the regular rural free-delivery service; and as the star routes cover a very large territory, the results will be enjoyed by many thousands of those who need this service very much and to whom it will be indeed a pleasure and of great value. We are pleased to note that the Post-Office Department has given its unqualified sanction to the object of Mr. STOKES's bill, and while the Second Assistant Postmaster-General suggests certain modifications tending to make the measure harmonious to existing laws, his approval of the plan in general is most cordial.

In this connection it is interesting to note that free rural mail delivery is becoming very popular among members of Congress. Where two or three years ago it required an effort to secure an appropriation of $300,000 with which to test the plan, now ample means are being afforded for the purpose of extending the service. The other day the committee of the House on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported a bill calling for $1,750,000 to be expended in the work during the coming year, when the estimate of the Department called for only $1,500,000; and the larger sum, it is believed, will be voted by the House.

Farmers everywhere should aid in all measures intended to extend the service. Mr. STOKES's measure seems to have real merit, and we trust that our readers will show their appreciation by heartily supporting him in the work of securing its adoption.

[From The State, Columbia, S. C.]

As will be seen in a Washington dispatch to-day, South Carolina is to be made the experimental field for free postal delivery on star routes. To Congressman STOKES is due the credit for persuading the Post-Office Department to put that system in operation on all star routes in this State. If it proves a success here, the other States will, of course, require the same facilities, and 22,000 free delivery country routes, exclusive of those where special provision has been made for "free rural delivery." In the latter case special men are employed, and the expense to the Department is considerably increased; but in the delivery on star routes it is contemplated that the carriers now employed on those routes shall deliver mail through their districts. They are expected to include this extra labor in their bids, and, according to our Washington advices, the bids from this State are satisfactory to the Department, the extra expense being but slight. The results will be watched with interest. It should be a boon to the reading countryman.

THE STOKES BILL FOR FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

We are pleased to call attention to the efforts of Representative J. WILLIAM STOKES to have free-mail delivery along "star routes."

The press and people should assist Mr. STOKES in this effort in every way possible. Bring to bear upon your immediate Representative in Congress such influence as you may have, so as to secure his support for this well-timed measure.

The rapid delivery of mails is demanded by the progress of this active age in which we live.

The people demand and desire to keep posted on public affairs.

We must not forget that the voters are the rulers of this country. Hence their rights should be respected and their demands granted.

This Stokes bill is a step forward. Congress should give it a trial.

[From the South Carolina Teachers' Journal.]

Congressman J. WILLIAM STOKES deserves the unqualified indorsement of all South Carolina for his invaluable services in behalf of free rural delivery for this State. On and after July 1 everyone living on a star route will have his mail delivered at his home if he will only provide a suitable box for the receiving of the same. The teachers should use their influence with children and patrons to take advantage of this great opportunity, the full advantages of which can not be appreciated without a trial. We hail the innovation with delight, and see in it an important factor for the improvement of our country schools.

[From the Rural New Yorker.]

RURAL MAIL.

Among the bills introduced into Congress at this session is one by Congressman STOKES to extend the free delivery of mail along the star routes. It provides that hereafter all contracts for carrying mail on such routes must include the deposit in the proper boxes, placed along the line for this purpose, of any mail matter that may be given to the carrier by the postmaster. The carrier is also obliged to take up such stamped mail matter as he shall find in the said mail box. Provision is made for those who desire to have mail delivered or taken in this way, so that they may put up a local mail box, and such boxes are to be protected. This is a good bill, and we hope it will pass. Many so-called star routes run through the country sections where these boxes would prove very useful indeed. For example, in many sections the mail carrier drives from the railroad station back into the country several miles to the town center or cross roads, where the post-office is located. If the farmers could put up boxes along the road and have their mail delivered to them in this way, it would certainly prove a great convenience and help.

[From the Indiana Farmer, Indianapolis.]

AN IMPORTANT POSTAL BILL.

Hon. J. W. STOKES, H. R., has introduced a bill in Congress that a large majority of our readers will favor when they learn its provisions. Its purpose is to combine a system of box deliveries and collections in connection with the existing star routes, now numbering about 22,000, in such manner as to largely increase the mail accommodation to people residing in rural districts without detriment to the star service or without a large increase in the cost thereof. It is the practice now on many star routes for the carriers to take the mail and deposit it in boxes along the line of the routes, but in the absence of legislation it rests entirely with the pleasure of the carriers whether they will give the people this accommodation or not. This bill makes it the duty of carrier to receive and deliver mail at boxes prepared for the purpose, receiving extra pay therefor from the Department. All readers interested should write their Congressmen, urging them to support the bill when it is brought up for action.

[From the Yorkville Enquirer.]

A SPLENDID SERVICE.

The information that the Post-Office Department has not entirely abandoned the project of delivering mail in boxes along star routes without expense to patrons will no doubt be received with a great deal of pleasure by a great many people. Further than the statement published elsewhere we are not prepared to say anything definite on the subject just at this time. The readers of the Enquirer remember very well the splendid fight that Dr. STOKES and others made for the necessary appropriation during the last Congress. In our opinion it was the best and most intelligent fight that Southern Representatives have been able to put up in recent years. It was not, it will be remembered, a pretended fight "for buncombe," but a real fight, which all but overwhelmed the cold-blooded Senate committee, which would have agreed to the appropriation had it not been for the enforced absence of one favorable member.

But it seems that Dr. STOKES was not satisfied with that. He has managed to persuade Postmaster-General Smith to take an unusual step on his own responsibility and call for bids for the necessary service, even without express authority from Congress. It does not necessarily follow that this free-delivery system is yet to be adopted. That will depend largely on the result of the bidding; but the chances of success are good. However, whether contracts are let as indicated or not, Dr. STOKES has performed good service for the State, and in the name of a large number of people in this section we take it upon ourselves to return to him especial thanks.

[From the Field and Farm, Denver, Colo.]

Field and Farm is in favor of a bill now before Congress, introduced by Representative STOKES, to extend the rural delivery of mail along star routes without additional expense to the people. It will not largely increase the cost to the Government, because the distance traveled by the carriers would not be increased at all. It would require a little more time, of course, for the carriers to stop and deposit mail or collect it from the boxes, and in some cases it would require more intelligent carriers than are now employed, as all carriers must be able to read addresses on the mail matter taken by them outside of the bags to be placed in the proper boxes. It is also possible that in those cases where carriers are now charging the people along the line of route a fee for delivering their mail into boxes there would be a tendency to slightly increase the price under the contract if the law prohibited the charging of such fees; but as these star-route contracts are let after having been widely advertised, and as there is much competition in bidding for them, the increase in cost would be but slight compared with the additional facilities rendered to the public.

[From the Farmers' Home Journal, Louisville, Ky.]

RURAL DELIVERY.

Hon. J. W. STOKES, Representative from South Carolina, is earnestly advocating a bill in Congress providing for free delivery of mail matter in the country. This is a measure which every farmer should be interested in. In cities we have our mail delivered in our offices. While farmers may not get as much mail as some city people, they are entitled to receive what they do get as cheaply, as promptly, and as conveniently as the people who live in the cities and towns. It is frequently of as much or more importance to the farmer or stock raiser to get his mail promptly as it is for the city merchant. In these days farmers who have anything to sell should get their letters and their market reports promptly. Under the present system, if they live 6 or 8 miles from the post-office, they must either do without their mail for several days or probably neglect important work to go after it. Farmers pay the same postage on their mail that city people do. Then is it not right that they should have the same benefits? We hope many of our readers will write to their Congressmen in Washington and urge them to support this bill. The farmers of the United States can compel its passage if they will demand it.

[From the Nashville American.]

THE STOKES FREE-DELIVERY BILL.

The bill providing for the free delivery of mail along star routes introduced into the House by Congressman J. WILLIAM STOKES, of South Carolina, deserves favorable consideration.

The bill makes it the duty of mail carriers on star routes to deliver free of charge to the persons addressed any mail intrusted to the care of the carriers by postmasters. It also requires that carriers must take up and place in the post-office mail given them by persons along the route.

The only requirement of the persons who wish to take advantage of the act is to put up boxes in a convenient place and to give the postmaster instructions as to the proper mail box at which they desire their mail deposited.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Shallenberger, warmly indorses the bill, and in Mr. STOKES' own State, South Carolina, the Post-Office Department has tried the experiment of advertising for contracts, with and without provisions that contractors should deliver the mail free along their routes wherever farmers should erect boxes, and the difference in the cost for the improved service for the entire State was found to be only $3,000.

The passage of the bill would be a boon to every farmer in the country. It would bring them in closer touch with the outer world and its affairs, and would be a benefit all around. The only objection raised to its passage—that it would interfere with the pleasure farmers take in going after the mail—is too puerile to warrant attention.

[From the Beaufort Gazette.]

Congressman J. WILLIAM STOKES has been working on his star-route free-delivery scheme during the session of Congress just closed, and has gained many converts to his bill. He will present it in the Congress to meet in December, and hopes to have it passed. The bill will be found elsewhere in this issue, and is of great interest to those who live on star routes. There are a number of such routes in this county—for instance, that between Hardeeville and Bluffton.

The Postal Guide says: "The term 'star routes' includes all mail routes under contract other than railroad, steamboat, and mail messenger routes." The object of the bill is to compel the mail carriers to deposit mail along their routes in boxes which are to be placed on the road for that purpose, and to gather up mail in such boxes. This would be to hundreds of thousands of people in the country an inestimable benefit, by relieving them of many miles of travel to and from the nearest post-office, and would be practically no additional expense to the Government, as the system would only be in operation along routes which are already established.

There are 22,000 such routes in the United States, and there is no estimating how far-reaching the benefits will be.

Congressman STOKES has worked hard in behalf of his bill and deserves the commendation of his constituents.

His bill should become a law at the next meeting of Congress.

[From the Southern Presbyterian.]

RURAL FREE DELIVERY.

On July 1, 1900, the State of South Carolina will begin to enjoy free delivery of mails in rural districts. Through the efforts of Congressman J. W. STOKES, this State has been selected as the field in which the new plan of rural free delivery will be tested on a large scale. Each mail rider on the star route will be required to deliver mail to boxes along the route traveled. The residents along the route are expected to erect the boxes, and it is hoped that they will universally put up nice boxes, that a good impression may be made upon the inspector when he comes around. This may lead to the continuance of the service beyond the limits of first contracts and to its extension to other States.

In South Carolina there are 373 star routes, along which there should be erected as many as 50,000 boxes. These boxes should be ready for the reception of mail by the 1st day of July, 1900. In order to secure the free delivery it is only necessary that persons living on or adjacent to any star route should erect the necessary boxes and ask their postmasters to send out their mail by the carrier for deposit in their boxes. Congressman STOKES is the originator of the plan, and hence South Carolina, on his recommendation, has been selected in which to make a test of the system. He is, therefore, very anxious that it should succeed, and that the people should show their appreciation of the added convenience by promptly availing themselves of it and by erecting neat, attractive boxes for their mail.

FREE MAIL DELIVERY ON STAR ROUTES.

Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES, member of Congress from South Carolina, has introduced and is urging the passage of a bill to secure the free delivery of mail matter in the country along star routes. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in commending Mr. STOKES's bill, says he regards a system to combine box delivery and collections entirely feasible and thinks the present cost would not be greatly increased. The rural populace, or, as we are more familiarly sometimes called, "hill billies," get few of the comforts and conveniences that the people's money pays for, their more favored urban brethren usually appropriating every "hand out" the Government dispenses. The advantage of such provisions are too apparent to need rehearsing here. Its inestimable convenience can be seen at a glance.

[From the Farmers' Review, Chicago.]

FREE DELIVERY ON STAR ROUTES.

Representative STOKES is credited with the introduction of one of the most practical bills for the extension of free rural delivery of mail that has been offered during the present session of Congress. It provides for free delivery along star routes, which could be done with very little additional cost to the Government. W. S. Shallenberger, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, has expressed his approval of the measure and has suggested important changes which would make it provide for the erection of boxes along the route to be numbered or designated according to directions issued by the Postmaster-General; also, that all persons wishing to have their mail collected and delivered by star-route carriers should file an application with their nearest postmaster, and erect a suitable box at some convenient point along the route; that upon receipt of such application it shall be the duty of the postmaster to deliver all mail addressed to such parties to the carrier except registered mail; and that it shall be the duty of the carrier to collect and deposit such mail in the proper boxes, free of any additional charge, all mail so collected and properly stamped to be deposited for mailing at the next post-office on the route.

[From the Dorchester Eagle.]

Perhaps there has never been a Representative in Congress from South Carolina who has done anything or caused any legislation that is so appreciatively felt by the masses of the people of the State as Dr. J. W. STOKES did in the rural delivery of the mails to the country people. People who live in the country are as much entitled to the immediate delivery of their mail as those who live in cities and towns.

The rural delivery has passed the experimental stage, and from the report of that department of the Post-Office Department having the service in charge the results are highly encouraging. Not only are officers in charge of the service pleased with the operations of the service, but the patrons all over the country are congratulating the service, and feel that a long existing want has been supplied; and with the additional delivery along star routes (routes carried through the country by private conveyance) the service will cover the greater part of the territory, and the majority of Uncle Sam's citizens will get their mail at least every other day.

As for the delivery from this point there is no complaint that we hear of except from those who do not favor the politics of the promoter of the project; but we stand ready to admire and commend any legislation, either national or State, that casts on our community and its citizens any favor or even its God-given rights, let the promoter be who he may, Democrat or Republican. If the legislation helps us, we are thankful for it, and are proud when we are able to send to the Congress of the United States men who know the people's wants and delight in doing them.

[From the Lexington Dispatch.]

STAR ROUTE FREE-DELIVERY BILL.

Under its terms all future contracts for carrying mail on star routes will include this increased service. The star-route contractor will have this in mind when he puts in his bid. The additional service will be slight, and the additional cost to the Government correspondingly slight, but the benefit to the people will be great, very great. Carriers as a general thing deliver mail now along the line of their route by private contract for $1 or less per annum to each family served. It is confidently expected, however, that, instead of such a service as is provided in this bill being a charge upon the Government, it would be a source of revenue. That has been the history of all increases of mail facilities in the past. The increased cost of the service has invariably been offset by the increased revenue incident to better facilities.

Mr. STOKES referred to the well-known result of reducing letter postage from 3 to 2 cents. Those who had not studied such matters carefully confidently predicted an enormous deficit. The event proved just the reverse. The same state of facts was found after the inauguration of free delivery in cities; the increased revenue more than paid the increased cost of the service. This bill of Mr. STOKES provides that mail boxes shall be placed along the star routes on the roadside, and, for convenience, numbered consecutively from the initial point of the route. Those desiring their mail deposited in these boxes will leave with the nearest postmaster on each side of them a written request for the delivery of their mail to the carrier; thereupon it becomes the duty of the carrier to deposit said mail in the box without charge to the addressee.

Thus every person living on or near a star route would get his mail every time the carrier passed without expense or loss of time in going to the post-office. It is easy to see that by multiplication of star routes, radiating from the several railroad offices, a very cheap and effective free-delivery system could be realized, one that there is every reason to expect would become at once self-sustaining.

For the present the people who get this service would have to furnish their own boxes, but the bill contemplates that ultimately these shall be furnished by the Government if the service justifies it. The cost in large numbers would be small to the Government; but that is what is being done in many of the city districts, and I am in this asking only that the country residents be fed out of the same spoon that the Government uses to dish out benefits to our city cousins.

Mr. STOKES does not offer this bill as a substitute for the free rural delivery with which he has been prominently identified in the past, but as a supplemental proposition, a sort of transition stage.

A general system of rural free delivery is bound to come in the evolution of our postal system. It may be in the form already inaugurated here and there throughout the United States, or it may be through some modification of this star-route system, or it may be through a system of postal wagons radiating from the several railroad offices. But whatever may be its final form as approved by experiment, it will be a permanent system and will be self-sustaining.

[From the Charleston News and Courier.]

STOKES ROUTES FOR STAR ROUTES.

A dispatch from Washington notes that for the first time in the history of the country "the experiment is being made for the free delivery of mail along star routes, and South Carolina has been selected as the scene of the experiment, in recognition of the efforts of Representative STOKES, the originator of the system, to have it adopted."

The post-office authorities, it is added, express much satisfaction in view of the results so far of the bidding for the institution of the system, "which fully verify the claim of Mr. STOKES in the House and in the Department a year ago that the system could be put into operation at little if any increased cost," and it is "only a question of a short time when the system will be extended to all the 22,000 routes in the United States." We gave Mr. STOKES full credit last year for his admirable suggestion and his effective work in having it put into practice, and need not repeat here what we then said. The dispatch covers very well all that could be said on this point when it states that "if Mr. STOKES never does anything else in Congress the establishment of the new system entitles him to the gratitude of the rural population, not only in South Carolina, but throughout the nation."

This is not saying too much. A "star route" is a route through an out-of the-way country district which is not favored by railroad or other improved transportation facilities and whose inhabitants must send to one or the other of the post-offices at the ends of the route for their mail. This necessity imposes much waste of time and many inconveniences on people living at a considerable distance from the terminal offices, even though they should live on or very near the line of the route itself, but their condition has been regarded as hopeless of remedy heretofore. The system originated by Congressman STOKES affords the largest practicable measure of relief that could be devised short of having mail matter delivered at every door in the country by special messengers. It permits the people living along and near the routes to set up private boxes suitable for the reception of their mails and requires the carriers to distribute the mails in these wayside depositories. The rest is a matter of detail.

The certain operation of the new system for the great convenience, profit, and general advantage of small rural communities and of isolated residents in the country is too manifest to require explanation or statement. It is a simple but far-reaching improvement on the conduct of the rural mail service, and its beneficiaries, who will be numbered by the hundred thousand, have good reason to thank its inventor for it.

[From the Augusta Chronicle.]

THE RURAL FREE DELIVERY.

The rural free delivery has not had much exploitation down our way yet, but more fortunate sections have given it full trial, and it has given great satisfaction. Macon was about to have the system introduced in its neighboring rural territory, but a dispute arose as to whether the carriers should be white or black, and the matter was dropped by the Post-Office Department. In an interview on the rural free delivery, First Assistant Postmaster-General Perry Heath says:

"It now radiates from 250 offices in 30 different States, some of these distributing points having as many as seven or eight rural routes, each extending 20 miles or more into the adjacent agricultural districts. With this widely diversified service the records of the Department show no protests against its continuance, except from saloon keepers, village postmasters whose offices have been abolished or their emoluments curtailed, or other persons who believe their personal interests would suffer from the extension of postal facilities to their neighbors. The community at large is enthusiastic in its approval.

"The service is for the people, and there is no desire to impose it on them against their wishes. Wherever it has been introduced the people have been enthusiastic over the advantages offered, and in general when a proposition has been made to discontinue the service have offered to defray from their own pockets the cost of their increased facilities rather than lose them. Applications on file asking for the extension of the service are so numerous that the appropriation made by Congress for the purpose is insufficient to meet the demands. In response to inquiry sent out last fall by the Department at Washington 263 replies were received from persons affected by rural delivery in thirty-three States, and 259 were favorable."

It is not unusual, where the sacrifice is proposed in a new field, for objection to be made by village storekeepers who fear that delivering mail at their homes will prevent country people from coming to town as often as they are accustomed to do, and that in consequence they will lose trade, but actual experiment proves this apprehension to be unfounded, as second thoughts would also do. Few people come to town simply to ask if there is any mail. When they have no other purpose in view they manage to send a messenger. When they have the other purpose in view the delivery of the mail at their homes will not prevent them from coming to town. Free mail delivery does not lessen the need for groceries and household goods.

[From the Atlanta Constitution.]

THE RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

We are glad to observe that the matter of rural delivery has been taken up very actively by Congressman STOKES, of South Carolina, who has introduced a measure in the House to extend free delivery of mail along the star routes. Under the provisions of the Stokes bill, any person desiring his mail deposited along the line of any star route shall erect a box as convenient to the roadside as practicable and file with the nearest postmaster on each side of the box a request in writing for the delivery of his mail to the proper carrier for deposit in the mail box.

Such is the measure, at once brief and simple, by means of which it is intended to establish free rural delivery. The Constitution hopes the bill will pass. If our readers in the agricultural districts will write to their Representatives in Congress and urge them to support the measure, there will be small difficulty in urging its passage. Congressman LIVINGSTON needs no urging. He has been actively in favor of free rural delivery ever since he has been in Congress. Nor do we suppose that any other Georgia Congressman needs to be urged; but it will do no harm for business men and farmers in the country districts to give their Representatives a hint that the measure is a very necessary one.

It is our boast that under our laws all citizens are equal. You will hear orators declaiming of equality under the law, and yet while people in the country have to travel miles to the nearest post-office to get their mail the postal authorities are engaged in erecting a costly pneumatic system in the city of New York in order to save fifteen or twenty minutes in the delivery of mail. It is true that a community in the nature of things will enjoy larger and more complete postal facilities than a remote and scattered settlement, but we are speaking now of equality under the law and the rights of individuals.

But this difference is most clearly recognized in the demand for free rural delivery. The people are not asking for pneumatic tubes nor for any device that will place additional burdens on the taxpayers. The Stokes bill simply calls for a system of cheap boxes to be affixed to trees or posts along the post roads covered by the star-route system. These carriers have to go along these routes anyhow, and it will hardly be any trouble for them to deposit mail and take up that which they find. When the bill becomes a law star-route bidders will be put on notice by its terms of this addition to their duties as contractors, and they will take care of themselves in the matter of compensation.

The history of every increase of mail facilities in this country since its establishment shows that their increased cost is invariably offset by increased revenue. This is the history of the reduction of letter postage from 3 to 2 cents. It was freely predicted that it would result in an enormous deficit; the result, however, was an increase of revenue. When free city delivery was established, the same prediction was made, but the revenue has steadily increased. It was never intended, in the first place, that our postal system should be a money-making business. It was established for the benefit of the people, and not to pay revenue into the Treasury.

A NEW FORM OF RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Representative STOKES has introduced in Congress "A bill to extend free delivery of mail along star routes." Under its terms all future contracts for carrying mail on star routes will include this increased service.

The star-route contractor will have this in mind when he puts in his bid. The additional service will be slight, and the additional cost to the Government correspondingly slight, but the benefit to the people will be very great. Carriers as a general thing deliver mail now along the line of their route by private contract for $1 or less per annum for each family served. Of course, taking it in gross for everybody, it could be done for less still than for a few. It is confidently expected, however, that instead of such service as is provided in this bill being a charge upon the Government, it would be a source of revenue. That has been the history of all increases of mail facilities in the past. The increased cost of the service has invariably been more than offset by the increased revenue incident to better facilities.

Mr. STOKES has referred to the well-known result of reducing letter postage from 3 cents to 2 cents. Those who had not studied such matters carefully predicted an enormous deficit. The event proved just the reverse. The same state of facts was found after the inauguration of the free delivery for cities, the increased revenue more than repaid the increased cost of the service.

This bill of Mr. STOKES provides that mail boxes be placed along the star routes, on the roadside, and, for convenience, numbered consecutively from the initial point of the route. Those desiring their mail deposited in these boxes will leave with the nearest postmaster on each side of them a written request for the delivery of their mail to the carrier, designating the number of the box in which it is to be deposited, and thereupon it becomes the duty of the carrier to deposit said mail in the box without charge to the addressee.

Thus every person living on or near a star route would get his mail every time the carrier passed, without expense or loss of time in going to the post-office.

"It is easy to see," said Mr. STOKES, "that by multiplication of the star routes radiating from the several railroad offices a very cheap and effective free-delivery system could be realized—one that there is every reason to expect would become at once self-sustaining. For the present the people who get this service would have to furnish their own boxes, but the bill contemplates that ultimately these shall be furnished by the Government if the service justifies it. The cost in large numbers would be small to the Government, but that is what is being done in many of the city districts, and I am in this asking only that the country residents be fed out of the same spoon that the Government uses to dip out benefits to our city cousins."

Mr. STOKES does not offer this bill as a substitute for the free rural delivery, with which he has been prominently identified in the past, but as a supplemental proposition—a sort of transition stage—but, as he puts it: "A general system of rural free delivery is bound to come in the evolution of our postal system. It may be in the form already inaugurated here and there throughout the United States, or it may be through some modification of this star-route system, or it may be through a system of postal wagons radiating from the several railroad offices. But whatever may be its final form as approved by experiment, it will be a permanent system and will be self-sustaining."

This will not only be beneficial as a means of stamp revenue to the Government, but will also be beneficial in an educational way—a good deal of correspondence schooling being done through the mails.

OF

HON. STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN,

OF FLORIDA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 1, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. SPARKMAN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In favor, as I am, of legislation looking to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and feeling it incumbent upon me to vote for the measure, I nevertheless regret that its consideration could not have been postponed until the short session of this Congress, in December next.

At present we have no sufficient data upon which to predicate intelligent action, but by that time the commission provided for in the last river and harbor act will doubtless have made its report, and we will then have more definite information to guide us than if we proceed now to the consideration of the bill. At present we know very little definitely as to the cost of the canal, or as to the most feasible and best route for it—two things we ought to know before any bill of this kind should become a law.

The commission referred to was created for the purpose of determining these questions. It was organized, as I have just stated, under certain provisions in the river and harbor act passed by the last Congress, which are as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States of America be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to make full and complete investigation of the Isthmus of Panama with a view to the construction of a canal by the United States across the same to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; that the President is authorized to make investigation of any and all practicable routes for a canal across said Isthmus of Panama, and particularly to investigate the two routes known respectively as the Nicaraguan route and the Panama route, with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for such canal, together with the proximate and probable cost of constructing a canal at each of two or more of said routes: And the President is further authorized to investigate and ascertain what rights, privileges, and franchises, if any, may be held and owned by any corporations, associations, or individuals, and what work, if any, has been done by such corporations, associations, or individuals in the construction of a canal at either or any of said routes, and particularly at the so-called Nicaraguan and Panama routes, respectively; and likewise to ascertain the cost of purchasing all of the rights, privileges, and franchises held and owned by any such corporations, associations, and individuals in any and all of such routes, particularly the said Nicaraguan route and the said Panama route; and likewise to ascertain the probable or proximate cost of constructing a suitable harbor at each of the termini of said canal, with the probable annual cost of maintenance of said harbors, respectively. And generally the President is authorized to make such full and complete investigation as to determine the most feasible and practicable route across said Isthmus for a canal, together with the cost of constructing the same and placing the same under the control, management, and ownership of the United States.

SEC. 4. To enable the President to make the investigations and ascertainments herein provided for, he is hereby authorized to employ in said service any of the engineers of the United States Army at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary to make such investigation, and to fix the compensation of any and all of such engineers and other persons.

SEC. 5. For the purpose of defraying the expenses necessary to be incurred in making the investigations herein provided for, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by order of the President.

SEC. 6. That the President is hereby requested to report to Congress the results of such investigations, together with his recommendations in the premises.

From these provisions it will be seen that the President was not only to make investigation as to the cost, but also as to the route; nor was he confined to any particular route, but was directed to investigate the Nicaragua and Panama routes, as well as all others, with a view to determining the most feasible and practicable route for the canal.

Now, the commission through which the President is causing this investigation to be made has been engaged for months in obtaining this very information. Its members have been to Central America for the purpose of examining all the routes across the Isthmus, particularly the two referred to, and to-day have corps of engineers making surveys in order to determine the best and most feasible location, as well as the cost of the proposed canal; all of which will doubtless be completed and report made to Congress by the beginning of the short session in December.

Would it not, then, Mr. Chairman, be better for Congress to await this report? It certainly would appear so to a practical mind, for this investigation will doubtless give us information which we ought to have, information more or less essential to the building of the canal, and without which we, as well as the President, who is to put the law into effect, will be acting largely in the dark.

Can anyone on this floor tell to a certainty within fifty or one hundred millions of dollars what the canal will cost? If so, he knows more than the engineers who have been examining the proposed routes, because they differ widely as to the cost, while they are not united by any means as to the route to be taken. Thirty millions say some, one hundred and fifty millions declare others, while by yet others the cost is placed all the way between these figures, the mean of computation being probably about $120,000,000. Some, again, think the Nicaragua route preferable, others the Panama, while yet other intelligent engineers think they have found or can find routes differing from both these across this great barrier which nature has thrown between the two oceans.

No wonder, sir, that these divergent views should be found in reference to this canal. In the first place, no sufficient and exhaustive survey has ever been made of these different routes. Especially is this true of the Nicaragua route.

Admiral Walker, when before the River and Harbor Committee in February of last year, stated substantially that while his investigations and those of others to which he had access were such as to satisfy him what the approximate cost would be, that yet he was not entirely satisfied, and thought further examination should be made; neither could he state positively that the Nicaragua route was the most feasible, though he thought it was. And it was no doubt this lack of definite and positive information as to the cost of the canal and as to which was the best route that caused the committee on conference to insert the provisions just quoted in the last river and harbor bill.

Then, again, sir, it is an undertaking over which the best engineering skill has hesitated long and pondered much; so many problems to solve, so many difficulties to override. The canal has to be constructed in a tropical clime, malarial and sickly, where the white race never thrives, and under conditions the most trying and expensive.

Vast elevations are to be overcome; torrential streams are to be diverted and utilized; storms and floods are to be controlled, and their waters stored for future use; vast harbors, if the Nicaragua route is to be adopted, are to be constructed and maintained where none exist to-day, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific a great canal is to be dug through stone, and rock, and gravel, deep enough and wide enough to accommodate the commerce and the navies of the world for all time to come.

To aid in overcoming these difficulties, to furnish correct data as to the cost, and to obtain the best location for the canal, are the purposes of the commission now investigating this project, and I fear we can not act intelligibly until we have had the information and data which it can and will give us if we await its action.

But, sir, there is another consideration which should suggest delay or an amendment to this bill. A right of way, together with very important franchises and privileges, is necessary before we can proceed with the construction of this canal. This will cost money, or its equivalent, in the shape of concessions from this Government. A right of way, it is said, 5 or 6 miles wide, from Greytown to Brito, except where Lake Nicaragua is to be utilized, and even there a strip of land of considerable width around the lake, will be necessary. Arrangements for policing the territory thus acquired and the defense of the canal will have to be made, together with the acquisition of other valuable rights, all of which, as a matter of business, should be obtained before the canal is finally located. And yet this bill not only instructs the President to proceed at once and acquire the right of way, but, which is not at all businesslike, fixes the location of the canal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what will be the result? Why, of course none other than to raise the price of the privileges for which we may wish to negotiate. Would a business man proceed in this way? What would be thought of one who, desiring to purchase a piece of property, and who, before acquiring the right to occupy the same, should enter into a building contract for the construction of a costly building thereon? No man guided by sound business principles, it seems to me, would do this; and yet that is just the position in which this bill will place the Government if it should become a law before these valuable rights have been obtained. We will have to pay for them at best; and if we do not agree upon the price before this bill becomes a law, we will have to pay much more for what we get when we come to deal with the country or countries through whose territory we may wish to construct the canal.

The Nicaraguan Government has already had a taste of our generosity in this matter. Away back in 1884 a foolish treaty was negotiated between this country and Nicaragua, by which we agreed to furnish all the money and build the canal, together with everything pertaining thereto, to give to Nicaragua one-third of the net proceeds and lend her the sum of $4,000,000 besides. Yet under this treaty we were to obtain a right of way only about one-half as wide as subsequent investigation has shown to be necessary.

Now, the two Governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua are not likely, at least in the preliminary stages of negotiation, to demand less than would have been given the latter if the Frelinghuysen treaty had been adopted and enforced. I do not think, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that any particular route should be adopted until after sufficient and satisfactory arrangements have been made with the Governments through whose territory the canal is to be constructed. The Panama route and canal can no doubt be had if we wish it; but in any event none of the countries through whose territory the canal may run should know in advance of the proper treaty arrangements what route we wish to adopt.

I am not behind the scenes and do not know, Mr. Chairman, what the leaders of the majority in Congress intend to do with this bill, whether or no it is intended that it should become a law at this session, but rumor has it that the bill is to be halted at the threshold of the Senate, and there held up until the commission appointed by the President shall have made its report. But if it is intended that the bill should pass and become a law at this session, then it should be amended here or in the Senate so as to authorize the President to deal not only with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, but also with the Government of Colombia, and, in fact, with any or all of the Central American countries and to obtain options from them for the site of a canal.

All of these countries would be willing to bid for the canal, as it would be a great acquisition to that country through whose territory it may pass; and if we go at it in the right way, there is no doubt but that we can obtain all the concession necessary on very reasonable terms. I therefore propose at the proper time, if no one else does so, to offer an amendment to the bill embodying the provisions just suggested. Perhaps it would be better if the President were directed absolutely to do nothing whatever until the report of the commission now investigating the subject of an isthmian canal is made.

Understand me, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to do anything to trammel the President, but on the contrary to put him in a position where he would at least have an equal chance in negotiating with these governments when he shall come to deal with them for the privileges and franchises we are compelled to have in the construction, maintenance, and use of this great waterway.

I have now, Mr. Chairman, gone over the objections to immediate action on this bill, but I do not wish to be understood as saying that they present an insuperable barrier to its passage by the House. On the contrary, I for one feel it my duty to vote for the bill, even though it should be finally presented in its present shape with only the proposed committee amendments. I, however, would like much to see the bill amended as before stated, and trust it may be done; but it would be better, in my judgment, that the bill should pass; certainly with the amendments suggested, if it is possible to have them made, or even without them, if they can not be adopted.

In the first place, the people whom I have the honor in part to represent on this floor feel a great interest in the canal. The State of Florida lies nearer the point where the canal would be located than any other in the United States, and the early connection of the two oceans by such a waterway is of vital importance to them. Already her great harbors from Pensacola to Key West on the Gulf, and from Fernandina to Miami on the Atlantic, stimulated by the changed conditions in the Southern seas, and the rapid improvement in the matter of foreign and coastwise trade, are assuming greater commercial activity and importance than ever before in their history, and their commerce will be increased tenfold; yea, probably one hundredfold, by the completion of this canal. The same is likewise true of all the Gulf harbors.

The productions of the South, the Middle States, and the West, or the greater part of them, will find their way through these ports to the Pacific and to the East by way of this canal as our trade increases, as it will increase with the Orient, whether the flag shall go there or not, whether the Philippines shall remain a part of this country or shall exist under an independent form of government. Then, too, it will afford a passageway for our Navy from ocean to ocean. And when the clouds of war shall gather, as gather they will in the future, as in the past, no battle ship freighted perchance with the honor and glory of our Republic, will have to sail through 15,000 miles of sea to strike a blow for the flag of our Union, as the Oregon did in the recent war with Spain.

Viewed, then, alike from the standpoint of business, of commerce, of national pride, and of patriotism, this canal should be constructed at the earliest practicable moment, and it is this consideration, Mr. Chairman, that makes the people of this country almost a unit in favor of its early completion.

In the next place, this bill provides for Government ownership. Now, I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to private ownership of this great waterway, except as a last resort, and not even then unless its construction and maintenance are under the protection and control of the American Government.

We can not permit any other nation to own this canal, or to control it if in private hands. It should be open to the commerce of the world, under proper conditions, it is true, but this Government should either own or control it. We want no entangling alliances with other nations in this any more than in other matters. The Monroe doctrine should apply here as elsewhere. We say to the nations of the earth that they shall not extend their political power in either of the American continents where it does not exist to-day, which, with the reciprocal or cognate proposition not to interfere in the affairs of the Old World, is the Monroe doctrine, and carried to its legitimate conclusion would place the isthmian canal under our control, and make of it in international law what it will be in fact—an American waterway.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in this connection, I want to say something about the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. It has been urged that it stands in our way, and must be abrogated before we can proceed with the construction of the canal by the Nicaragua route, if, indeed, we can, under its provisions, construct any canal across the isthmus connecting the two American continents. Now, while I would like to see the treaty abrogated by mutual agreement between the two nations, if it were practicable, I do not agree to the proposition that it is now of any binding force upon this Government. I believe, with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as is set forth in its very comprehensive report on this bill, prepared by the distinguished chairman of that committee, Mr. HEPBURN, that this treaty no longer exists. It was made with reference to a condition of things which obtained a half century ago, and was never intended to meet, nor is it possible that it should meet, conditions as they exist to-day. It is a dead letter, and should not stand for a moment in the way of the construction of this canal.

This work, while for the use of the world, is to be an American canal. It will be an extremely important strategical waterway, greatly affecting our national interest, both from a commercial and naval point of view, and we propose to own and control it. No other country in the world should or will have anything to say about it, and we will take all necessary steps to protect it against external as well as internal violence. No other nation should be permitted to go into partnership with us in its protection or defense, its construction or control.

But it may be said, indeed it has been said, that the Suez Canal is entirely neutral and rests for its protection upon the plighted faith of the combined powers of the world to protect it. This is true, however, only in theory, for England, as is usual, holds more than the balance of power. Where is the northern entrance to that canal? Geographically on the southern shore of the Mediterranean Sea; not so, however, in point of fact, for in order for ships to reach the Mediterranean or that canal from the Atlantic they are compelled to pass through a narrow waterway, known as the Straits of Gibraltar, made not by English capital or by the hand of man, but by nature's forces, severing in twain the continents of Europe and Africa. Over this channel England ever stands guard. From behind the strongest fortification in the world she controls every inch of this waterway, and tells the nations of the earth who may or who may not pass. In time of peace all may use the Suez Canal, but when war comes between England and any other nation or nations, she closes the Straits of Gibraltar, and consequently the canal, to her enemies, as we ought to be able to do, and as we will do with the American Canal; and neither the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or any other consideration shall or will stand in the way.

Before England talks to us about the absolute neutralization of this canal, to be built by American money on the American continent, before she undertakes to conjure up the ghost of the dead Clayton-Bulwer treaty to frighten us from protecting the canal by fortifications or otherwise, let her destroy her own fortifications and dismantle her cannon at Gibraltar, which, standing as they do now, would prevent us from going through the Suez Canal if we were at war with that great power.

Then, again, this bill proposes to do something, and that is one of its merits which appeals strongly to me. The day of dilly-dallying will have passed if this bill becomes a law. It may cost a little more to purchase the right of way and the concessions necessary to build, maintain, and protect the canal, but if the provisions of this bill are carried out the canal will be built, and that is what the American people want. If to-day it were left to a vote of the American people to say whether we should begin at once and without unnecessary delay the construction of this canal, we all know what the result would be; and although I should like to see the bill amended in the particulars mentioned, yet if it is not done I should still feel it my duty to vote for the measure as it stands with the committee amendments alone.

This is the first time this proposition has ever come before Congress in a tangible shape, and to defeat it now would be to give it a blow from which it might never recover. The people want the canal, and their representatives are on this floor. Let it not, then, be said that this great national project was slaughtered in the house of its friends. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, a few words with reference to the benefits to be derived from this canal and I am done. It has been stated that the canal will not pay the cost of construction; that ships will not use it to any great extent, and that commerce will avoid it. This idea, in my judgment, is an erroneous one. True, we have only one great work of the kind with which to make comparison. That is the Suez Canal.

There are, of course, other extensive and important canals in the world, such as the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal, between the North and Baltic seas; the Welland Canal, uniting Lakes Ontario and Erie; also that connecting Manchester, England, with the sea, as well as many others of greater or less importance. But in none of them are the conditions so nearly like those which would surround the Nicaragua Canal as are the conditions presented by the Suez Canal. It will therefore be instructive to consider the results which have attended the operation of that canal since its construction, more than a quarter of a century ago. Almost from the beginning the commerce carried on through that canal became enormous, increasing from year to year until 1898, the last for which I have statistics, when the vessels using the canal for that single year numbered 3,698, with a total gross tonnage of 19,962,-622, yielding to the canal receipts to the amount of more than $12,000,000.

This, after paying whatever interest accounts the canal might have to pay, would certainly leave a handsome profit to be divided among the stockholders. It is safe to say that the Nicaragua Canal would not be less useful to commerce or less remunerative to the United States or whoever else might own it. There is no reason to doubt it when we consider the resources of our country, its phenomenal growth and development, as well as the bright commercial and business future now before the West Indies and Central American countries, which would be among the greatest patrons of the canal. This is an age of wonderful commercial development and progress. Not only are the farms, gardens, factories, and mines in this country increasing rapidly their production, but this same spirit of growth and development is being felt along every line of industry and commercial activity. Especially is this noticeable in our own export trade with every part of the world. We are rapidly increasing our commerce with China, Japan, and all the Oriental nations, which will continue to increase the demand for a shorter route by water to these countries, and will make the canal from the very moment of its completion one of the most important waterways of the world.

In the report of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, to which I have already referred, the chairman, Mr. HEPBURN, than whom none is better qualified to speak on this subject, in discussing the business side of the question uses the following language:

> Gentlemen connected with the Maritime Canal Company gave it as their opinion that 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 of tonnage would be the amount that would pass through the canal annually.
> Of course we have a right to assume that, whatever the amount may be, it would be an increasing amount from year to year. At present $1.55 per ton is the total charged for the use of the Suez Canal. If that rate was the rate charged by the Nicaragua Canal, and 4,000,000 be the tonnage passing through it, an aggregate sum of more than $6,000,000 would be the receipts. It is estimated that the cost of maintaining and operating the canal would be $1,000,000 annually.
> If the United States borrowed the money to invest in the enterprise, this sum would pay the annual interest, the cost of maintaining and operating, and leave a surplus of more than $1,000,000; and with the increasing tonnage we might reasonably hope for such accumulations of surplus as would in a few years fully reimburse the Government for its outlay; or, if it should be the policy to use the canal to stimulate the building up of our merchant marine, it could be made a most powerful factor.
> A British merchant trading from any port in Great Britain to Hongkong, chartering a 6,000-ton vessel and using the Suez Canal, must pay as tolls a sum in excess of $18,000 for the round voyage. His American rival trading from New York to Hongkong, using the Nicaraguan Canal free of toll because he used a vessel made in an American shipyard, out of American material, and by American labor, and loaded with American merchandise, would possess marked advantages—advantages so marked as to make it his interest to stimulate American shipbuilding.

In these views I entirely concur, and I firmly believe that from a commercial standpoint alone the canal would be a paying investment from the very day of its completion, for among other features is the immense saving it would make to commerce in both time and distance.

From New York to San Francisco by water around Cape Horn the distance is 15,660 miles; by the Nicaragua Canal the distance between the same points will be only 4,907 miles, a saving of over 10,000 miles. From Manila to New York via Honolulu and Nicaragua Canal the distance is 11,277 miles; by the same route, omitting Honolulu, 10,662 miles; while the distance via the Suez Canal is 11,534 miles. From Pensacola, Fla., or any other Gulf port the distance to Manila via the Suez Canal route is over 12,000 miles; while by the Nicaragua route it would be less than 10,000 miles.

The distance from New York to the Pacific Ocean via the Southern Pacific Railroad is 3,709 miles; by the Canadian Pacific Railroad, 3,619 miles; by the Central Pacific Railroad, 3,269 miles; by the Northern Pacific Railroad, 3,237 miles; by water to Cape Horn, 7,897 miles; while by the Nicaragua Canal route from New York to the Pacific Ocean the distance is only 2,519 miles.

It will thus be seen that the advantages which the Nicaragua route has over the Suez Canal in the matter of time and distance are greatly in favor of the Nicaragua route, and their consideration but emphasizes the importance of the early construction of the canal.

I have said that the people of this country demand the early completion of this canal, and so they do. But I can say more. The business interests of America and of the world also demand its construction, and as we will not permit other nations to build it, we will have to do so ourselves. We can not adopt the dog-in-the-manger policy. Individual enterprise would construct it, but probably that is not wise. Other nations would be glad to build and control it, but at this American interest and American pride would rebel.

There is, therefore, but one course for us to pursue; that is to proceed at as early a date as is practicable, in view of all the circumstances, to construct this great waterway ourselves. It is true I would prefer to wait a few months for further information. I would like to proceed in a little different way in the acquirement of the rights and franchises we would need in its construction, maintenance, and protection than is provided for in this bill, but am willing to go ahead even now and begin its construction. I would certainly like to see work begun before the year 1900 shall have drawn to a close.

This, Mr. Chairman, has been the most eventful century whose flight has been recorded in the annals of the past, save that which witnessed the dawn of the Christian era, and it would be a fitting climax to the great chain of events which has marked its wonderful progress if its historian can write even on the last pages of its marvelous history the beginning of this great work.

The Agricultural Bill.

SPEECH
HON ROBERT W. MIERS,
OF INDIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 9, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10538) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. MIERS of Indiana said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I have such confidence in the legal ability and the knowledge of moral philosophy of the President of the United States and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that I feel I ought to and must accept their conclusions of law and of morals, formed after a year and a half of study, on the Porto Rican problem. They concluded that good law and good morals required absolute free trade between the United States and Porto Rico. This decision was concurred in by the press and by the people of the United States without regard to party affiliation.

As lawyers and moral philosophers the President of the United States and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee proved themselves to be entirely sound. As a Democrat I feel that I can follow the leadership of these great Republicans upon the legal and moral phase of this question and agree with them that law and duty require us to give free trade to the island of Porto Rico. After over a year's study as lawyers and philosophers these gentlemen were called upon by the trusts to reconsider this question and decide it by the rules of practical politics instead of those of law and morality. Practical Republican politics necessarily led them to a result which was against all law and against all morality. I can follow these gentlemen as lawyers and moral philosophers, but I can not follow them as politicians, because my conscience compels me to listen to the voices of law and morals rather than to those of the trusts.

It is natural that the trusts should not wish the rules of law obeyed or the paths of duty followed, for they are outcasts under the rules of law and morality. It is a singular fact that prior to the enactment of a statute making the formation of or participation in a trust a criminal offense very few trusts were organized in the United States. It was not until after it had become a criminal offense that trusts became plentiful. When it was made a crime, there seemed to at once be an epidemic of criminality. It looks like the representatives of the trusts had been invited to draw up the financial measures which would best promote their unlawful enterprises. This they did, and the Republicans enacted those bills into laws. The Republicans did not repeal the statute which made these acts criminal, but, through their Attorney-General, they assured the trusts that they would not be prosecuted.

At the behest of the trusts, the conclusions of law and morals reached by every administrative officer who studied the question has been set aside; and while the action of Congress in setting aside plain law and plain duty can not be justified by the rules of law or morals, it is demanded by those who are outside of the operation of law or morals, who have been promised unlimited license by the Republican party, and their mandates must be obeyed because of their dollars carrying the elections. A Republican party prefers to lack principles in its next campaign rather than to lack dollars; and having sacrificed the principles, it would be sad indeed if they failed to receive the dollars.

The much boasted prosperity, which consists in forming great combinations for the purpose of controlling all lines of commerce and industry, it is hoped will excuse the party for its abandonment of the demands of law and the dictates of duty.

But the trusts, created and fostered (as declared by President Havemeyer, of the sugar trust, before the Industrial Commission) in the secret technicalities of the Dingley tariff law, have not been wise in the manipulation of their concerns. Greed and avarice have been allowed too far to control judgment. They have been in too much haste to pile up their idle millions, and the prosperity which seemed to exist while they were paying for plants and thus placing money into circulation has already begun to wane. Even where wages have been increased, the workingmen have found that the value of work has not risen in proportion to the rise in the cost of living. And the many thousands whose wages have not been increased hear of the plenty said to exist around them while they and their families, although not idle, are denied many of what are ordinarily termed necessaries of existence. And then, too, while in some localities and some lines of industry there are fewer idle now than were idle during the panic of 1893, yet the condition is not what it ought to be, and many thousands of men willing to work are out of employment.

A few weeks ago some men were wanted to work upon the public improvements in New York City. An advertisement was inserted for the purpose of securing these men. So many men applied that the park was crowded and Broadway and Park Row were jammed. There were many men applied for every man who was needed. Go to any city in the United States, especially a manufacturing city, and you will find this same condition. With the largest circulating medium per capita of any year in our history; with the largest export trade; with the largest output of manufactured goods; with the blessings of Providence in magnificent crops throughout the whole country; with an increased foreign demand for our agricultural products by reason of failure of crops in other countries; with millions of dollars reported as being invested in new commercial and industrial lines; with all of these apparent signs of prosperity we find that hundreds of mills are idle, hundreds of thousands of men are unemployed, thousands of men in business for themselves five years ago have been forced out of business and are either idle or working for wages.

The farmers, who were temporarily prosperous by reason of the rise two years ago in the price of farm products, are again mortgaging their farms. There is more suffering among the middle classes than ever before in this country's history. The figures which seem to show prosperity will be used upon the stump by Republican speakers during the campaign, but it will be poor consolation to the men who are hungry that their masters, the trusts, are well fed and making money.

All political parties will declare in their platforms against trust combinations, and when the Republican leaders take the stump in the campaign they will become lawyers and moral philosophers, and what they say will be as sound as the just and righteous doctrine enunciated by President McKinley and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee as to our plain duty toward Porto Rico. They will excoriate the trusts whose money pays the expenses of their campaign, and they will tell the people how they abhor these monsters of iniquity. Then when the campaign is over they will leave law and morality to the students of antiquity and once more assume the garb of practical politicians, abject servants of the god "Mammon" as incarnated in the form of a trust.

It is not every concern which has large capital that is a trust. In fact, some of the worst trusts have no capitalization at all. It is the purpose and the effect, not the organization or form, which governs the character of a corporation, association, or partnership. The most disastrous of all the trusts are perhaps the grain exchanges. These have been especially active during the past two years, and have succeeded remarkably well in forcing a period of low prices in the United States during a period of high prices in foreign countries. Any corporation, association, or partnership which has for its purpose the control of a product or the prices of a product is a trust, and as such it is a criminal offense for any person to be interested in such concerns.

In the Summary of Commerce and Finance for January, 1900, issued by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, some very interesting figures are given which show conclusively the effect of the trusts upon the prices of grain. Upon page 2066 of this report we find that the farm price of wheat in 1898, the last year given, had fallen 23 cents per bushel since the year before. During the same period the average export price of wheat from the United States had risen 23 cents a bushel. The manipulators of the market had succeeded in reducing the farm price 22 cents a bushel at a time when their own selling price had increased 23 cents a bushel. They had literally robbed the farmer out of 45 cents for every bushel of wheat he sold during that year. This amounted during that year to a little over $20,000,000.

There is a table of prices given on pages 2392 and 2393 of this publication which contains some exceedingly useful figures. These figures show that the coal trust sold coal in Europe cheaper than it did in the United States. We paid for the bituminous coal which we imported in the month of February, 1899, $2.81 per ton, paid the duty in addition to that, and also the freight, when the American trust was selling that coal to foreign countries at $1.98. They asked double that to their home customers. The iron and steel trust has, during the past two years, been selling iron and steel in Europe at a very great reduction from what they sell it to American purchasers. A careful review of domestic and foreign prices during the past two years will show that in Europe the American trusts have successfully competed upon a falling market, while in the United States they have succeeded, by reason of the high tariff upon the goods controlled by the trusts, in creating a constantly rising market.

The operation of these trusts is well shown by the history of the tin-plate trust. This is selected because it is neither better nor worse than the average, and its operations can all be proved by the books of the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury Department.

The duty on imported tin plates was 1 cent per pound previous to July 1, 1891; then 2.2 cents until October 1, 1894; 1.2 cents July 24, 1897; since which time it has been 1.5 cents per pound. The trust is capitalized at $50,000,000—$20,000,000 preferred and $30,000,000 common stock. It owns 40 plants, the cost of which, including the real estate, was $10,000,000.

Eighteen million common and $18,000,000 preferred stock was paid for these plants, of which the promoter received $10,000,000 in common stock. The present market value of the stock is 86 cents for the preferred and 38 cents for the common, which makes $26,000,000, or a profit of $12,000,000 upon the actual cost of the property. It has closed 34 mills, and has prevented any others being built. The company advertised these profits for 1898 as $3,701,754. Immediately after the formation of the trust prices were raised and have been constantly raised ever since, and very much more than was justified by any raise in raw materials. A student of this question has compiled the following tables, which will be found absolutely accurate:

Fiscal year.	Total pounds used.	Price per pound.			Cost of industry.
		In bond.	New York.	Difference.
		Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
1891	1,036,489,074	3.6	5.1	1.5	$15,547,336
1892	435,822,921	3.0	5.2	2.2	9,588,104
1893	728,245,104	2.9	5.1	2.2	16,021,392
1894	593,384,293	2.7	4.9	2.2	13,054,453
1895	701,840,011	2.5	3.9	1.4	9,825,760
1896	692,367,004	2.4	3.5	1.1	7,616,044
1897	677,055,746	2.4	3.2	.8	5,416,446
1898	853,336,373	2.3	3.0	.7	5,973,355
1899	856,489,826	2.5	3.4	.9	7,736,408
Total	6,577,030,952			1.5	90,769,298

The price of imported plates in bond in New York is obtained by adding one-tenth cent per pound to the foreign or invoice price, as given in the Statistical Abstract. This amount covers transportation charges. The New York price is the actual price at which IC Bessemer coke 14 by 20 tin plate sold in New York in each year. The difference column shows exactly how much more the wholesale buyer paid for tin plates in New York than he would have paid had there been no duty.

Rebates on reexported tin plates in manufactured form (the exact figures are not obtainable) reduce this total to between $80,000,000 and $84,000,000, as the direct cost in the last nine years of "creating" the industry. This is the extra amount paid by wholesalers and metal workers; but by the time they were repaid by the American people, who ultimately bought the goods and footed the bills, the addition of legitimate profits swelled the amount to over $100,000,000.

August	4.60	3.70	.90
September	4.85	3.65	1.20

Thus, not only did the trust advance prices immediately, but in March, four months after the trust was formed, it had them within one-fifth of a cent a pound of the importing point, the duty being 1¼ cents. The trust raised prices at the mills on July 14 to $4.37½, and again, on August 26, to $4.65, which price has been since firmly held. Although this makes the price at New York 30 cents under the importing price for 100-pound plates, it is so near the importing price for 80-pound plates that the trust dares not mark up prices again for the present.

How the tariff operates is told by the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening of about October 1. After stating that 3-pound cans had advanced from $1.45 to $2.90 per 100, and that the increased cost was limiting the amount of tomatoes canned as well as the prices paid to growers, who are losing a large part of their crops, Every Evening says:

As the protective tariff makes it possible for American tin-plate manufacturers to increase the price of tin, and as this increase restricts the operations of the canners, with the consequent loss to farmers who have raised large quantities of tomatoes, and can not find the expected profitable market for them, the tariff, therefore, is the basic cause of the farmers' ill success. The farmers have been industrious, and brought forth large crops as the fruit of their labors. The tariff interferes with a profitable disposal of these crops. Thus the tariff injures the farmers instead of conferring a benefit upon them.

Had there been no duty at all, the tin-plate industry would probably have established itself here during the cheap iron and steel era, from 1893 to 1898, as did the bicycle and other steel industries. It was, in fact, cheap steel which made possible the very rapid growth of the tin-plate industry under the comparatively low duties of the Wilson bill.

Let Congress abolish the duties upon imported tin plates and we shall at once get rid of the evils of this iniquitous trust, high prices, watered stock, working "agreements," and other trusts, and monopoly of material and product. The whole structure rests upon our monopoly-producing tariff system.

The exports of agricultural products fell off for the year 1899 about $1,000,000 from the exports of 1898, while the exports of domestic manufactures increased about $48,000,000, and the imports of manufactured goods decreased very decidedly. This in ordinary trade would be a healthy condition, but when these lines are closely investigated it is found that there is not such an increase of production as such figures might appear to show. There is an increase of the foreign trade in articles controlled by the trusts and a decrease in importation of those articles. But the prices on these articles have steadily fallen in Europe and as steadily risen in the United States. This has lessened the consumption in the United States, and the trusts are not producing any more goods than were produced before the increase in exportations.

The people of the United States by increased prices are paying the profits on the goods sold to the people of foreign countries by the trusts. During the year 1899 there was paid in drawbacks the sum of $3,793,885.85. The only people who have the privilege of buying goods in the cheapest markets are the trusts in industrial lines. They obtain a drawback of 99 per cent upon all the raw materials they import which are manufactured into goods for the export trade. They are protected both ways. They are protected against the American consumer patronizing cheap markets, and they are protected by being given a special privilege to buy goods in the cheapest markets, and that privilege is exclusive. Hence it is that they have increased their exports and successfully competed with the falling prices in the foreign markets by the simple expedient of raising prices at home where the legislation gives them absolute control of the trade.

It is not remarkable, then, that practically every line of commerce and industry has been placed under the control of trusts. It would be very remarkable if that had not resulted from such legislation as the Dingley law. The capitalization of the trusts has reached a point where it is four times as great as the entire circulating medium. The intimate connection of these different trusts is shown by the statement of a prominent financier that he was a director in seventy-two of them. Practically all of them are controlled by a financial underwriters' association in New York, which in turn is controlled by foreign capital. We have so concentrated our commerce and industry into the hands of a few men that the conditions of Europe, and not those of the United States, control the commerce of this country, while the legislation of England, France, and Germany is more potent to bring about prosperity or adversity in America than legislation by the Congress of the United States can possibly be. The time is short during which we can correct this evil and resume control of our own commercial affairs. We will soon be bound like flies in the web of these foreign money spiders and be entirely helpless.

It is for these reasons, as well as for the natural sympathy which I feel for the people of Porto Rico, whom we are now robbing, that I regret that the decision of the President of the United States and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee upon the legal and moral obligations involved should have been set aside at the behest of the trusts, and that the Republican party upon this question is to follow the commands of its masters and not the advice of its legal and moral advisers.

I want to see the day when the Government of the United States is strong enough to enforce its criminal statutes and bring its criminals to the bar of justice. This surrender of the United States to those who are openly and notoriously violating its penal laws is so cowardly that it must bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every good American. I want to see the day when the avenues of trade are once more opened to the people of this country and when the profits of commerce will be paid to those whose industry, enterprise, and wisdom create them. I do not want to see a continuation of the present time, when the intellect of this country is enslaved by avarice, when the brawn of the country is used only to do the bidding of greed, and when the morality of this country must be set aside whenever the right thing to do is not the thing which the men of dollars want done.

I want the man of limited means and business sagacity to be able to make a living for himself and his family through the proper use of his little capital. I want the laboring man of this country to be able to save enough from his wages to enjoy the rest at the close of his days which his life of labor has earned.

We have entered upon the most dangerous era, from the standpoint of justice and humanity, that the world has ever seen. It is an era when law and right and all that goes to make up the true man and the good citizen is as naught when compared to the interest of the dollar, which ought to be only a medium of exchange and not a despotic power for the prevention of exchange.

I have no fight to make against wealth, for I would love to see the day when all men had sufficient of the medium of exchange to escape the burdens and privations of poverty. But I want money to be our servant; I do not want it to be our master. I have no quarrel with the man who in a lawful manner uses his money in his service in the extension of commerce and industry, no matter how much money he may so employ. But when a man in direct disobedience of the law of the land uses his money for the purpose of enslaving the minds and arms of other men it is but just that we should have a quarrel, and a quarrel which should result in his being compelled to cease the use of his money for any such purpose.

A man has no right to use his own in such a way that it will injure his neighbor's right of the same kind. The man who has millions has no right to so use those millions as to injure the use of the hundreds possessed by the man who only has hundreds. Money is an efficient servant, but it is the most despotic of all masters. The trust policy inaugurated and carried out by Republican legislation, in direct violation of penal laws, is a policy which makes the dollar the master and the man the slave. This policy is the one which has actuated this Congress in setting aside the plain provisions of law and duty as to the proper course to be pursued in our relations at the island of Porto Rico.

Several of the newspapers of the country published a statement up to May 27, 1899, the capitalization of trusts was $7,416,235,779.

Bradstreet is responsible for the statement that there was lost in these concerns by the depreciation of stocks during the first six months of 1899 the sum of $101,258,618. And yet Bradstreet has since that time reported the following new trusts:

Trusts, from July 1 to March 24, as reported in Bradstreet (1899).

July 1.	United States Worsted Company	$36,000,000
	Cattle in Texas (English syndicate)	100,000,000
July 8.	New England Cotton Yarn Company	11,500,000
July 22.	Coal combine in Pittsburg (Pa.), district (all the mines)
	American Iron and Steel Manufacturing Company	30,000,000
Aug. 5.	During July the secretary of state of New Jersey granted certificates of incorporation to 150 concerns. The capitalization of 24 of the leading ones amounts to	254,000,000
	Pennsylvania incorporated 2 concerns, with a capital of	6,000,000
	Delaware 6, with a capital of	12,700,000
	And California 1, with a capital of	8,500,000
	It is stated that the stocks of 26 industrial combines declined $101,258,618 in the first six months of 1899.
Aug. 19.	Fall River Print Cloth Mills	135,000,000
Sept. 2.	Agricultural combine in Kansas	20,000,000
Sept. 9.	The aggregate capitalization of concerns incorporated during August is represented by figures, a total far in excess of August in any preceding year	349,400,000
Sept. 23.	American Window Glass Company	17,000,000
Oct. 7.	In September 22 new corporations were chartered in New Jersey and their capital amounted in the aggregate to	72,200,000
	In West Virginia 20 companies were incorporated, the combined capitalization of which amounted to	65,000,000
	The grand total of capital of new concerns incorporated in all States during September is	193,000,000
Nov. 4.	Returns of incorporations having over $1,000,000 capital during October show that New Jersey led the list, as usual, with a total of 29, the combined capitalization of which foots up	200,000,000
	West Virginia had 30, with	85,000,000
	Delaware brought up the rear with a dozen new corporations, with	50,000,000
Dec. 2.	Incorporations in Eastern States for November	340,000,000
Feb. 3.	The aggregate capitalization of companies incorporated in January amounts to	203,750,000
	Which, in December, compares with about	200,000,000
	New Jersey charters amounted to	70,000,000
	And those in West Virginia to	55,000,000
	Delaware contributed	12,000,000
	While charters in other States footed up to	66,750,000
Mar. 3.	The February record of incorporations of companies of $1,000,000 capital and over is by far the smallest since the Journal of Commerce started to keep monthly records, about a year ago, the total capitalization of such companies in the States usually included in the compilation being only about	125,000,000
	For the month just ended, comparing with about	203,000,000
	In January and in December	200,000,000
Mar. 23.	Carnegie Steel Company	200,000,000

The question of right and wrong can only be decided in one way. The question of expediency ought to be decided in the same way; the right is always expedient. There must come a time when these inflated prices and these inflated stocks must seek the level of actual values. There must come a time when the slump of $100,000,000 during the first six months of last year will go into thousands of millions and break up all of the trusts. When that time comes, the failure of the trusts will create the worst panic and the one of the longest duration in the history of the United States. The accumulation of wrath that is now being stored up by the Republican party and the financial masters of that organization will, when it bursts forth, sweep the party and its masters out of existence. The worst feature of the disaster which is certain to come is that the innocent will be compelled to suffer on account of the sins of the guilty.

"I Desire to Say that I Challenge All the World in Arms to Successfully Condemn our Consular Service Abroad."

OF

HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,

OF OHIO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 30, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 1939) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I am quite aware that it is fashionable in this country to belittle and condemn and assail our consular service. The reason why, in my judgment, the administration of that service is attacked at this point of this bill grows out of the fact, if I am not mistaken, that the consuls of the United States do a considerable amount of work contemplated by this measure. But before I come to that I desire to say that I challenge all the world in arms to successfully condemn our consular service abroad.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question to help him along?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, if you can do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, what business has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] to introduce a bill to reorganize our consular service on the ground that it is inefficient now?

Mr. ADAMS. If you will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania an opportunity he will tell you.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not yield my time. This is the regular performance of the gentleman from Missouri. I am not discussing that consular bill now, but I hope to be alive when it comes in here.

I communicated by letter or in person with every consul of the United States in Europe in 1891. I visited a large number of them in 1899 and many of them in 1898, but officially I visited or communicated with every one of them in 1891. And in that very process of acquaintance I became acquainted with the heads of the foreign departments of other governments in Europe, and the concurrent testimony of all of them, without a single exception, was that the consular service of the United States was most excellent and far ahead in efficiency in every direction over any other country of the world, and that is the testimony of every fair-minded man who visits Europe; that is the testimony of every intelligent man not swayed or actuated by some preconceived notion of some doctrinal theory that he is trying to weave into statute law.

I know how anxious some of our friends are to cater to the sickly sentimentalism and sort of political Miss Nancyism that has reached out toward some of our most valued and valuable commercial organizations and which has led to these criticisms. But I say now that any utterance, whether in Congress or out of Congress, whether in the form of a stump speech or newspaper article or resolution, that proceeds upon the idea that the American consular service is defective and inefficient proceeds upon a false and unworthy basis. There are men who went into that service in 1877 and have gone steadily through promotions and are there to-day, notwithstanding the vicissitudes of changes of Administration in this country. To-day there are prominent Democrats in some of the consulates in Europe, notably a most efficient one at the city of Geneva, a gentleman from Kentucky, drawing the munificent salary of $1,500 a year, and his personal emoluments in addition amounting to less than $500 upon an average; and yet a better officer, more fully representing the duties of his office and his country and more fully honoring the flag of his country, never lived than that Kentucky Democrat.

Now, what are the duties of a consul and how can it be said that they ought to be efficient enough to do the business connected with this proposed commission? In the first place, the duty of the consul is at the office where he is stationed, and he must be there all the year round except when he has a leave of absence; and when he goes away on a leave of absence he must take the money out of his own pocket to pay the vice-consul to superintend the signing of invoices. His duty at his office is to superintend and supervise and certify the invoices of goods exported to the United States. This, among other things, and this a very prominent feature of his duty. So that he has not opportunity to travel over the country and get information. It is utterly impossible.

Last summer I visited the consul at one of the great manufacturing towns in England. He had been called upon by the State Department to make a report upon the subject of sewerage and municipal government, and in order to do that he had hired conveyances and traveled about the outskirts of the city and into the adjacent cities, but not a cent of compensation could he get for this extra duty, and while he was engaged upon it he was compelled to pay the substitute who took his place. And this is a type of the whole of this business. We seek here to scrimp the salary roll and curse this service. We degrade the country in the estimation of the world if they believe the talk here, while we pare with cheeseparing sentiment the appropriations for the support of the consular service. Double the salaries of the consuls in Europe and they will do work that will astonish the world, and they are doing more now than any equal body of men for the same amount of money. And I reiterate that if these wise men of this Congress would devote their time to some measure looking to the paying of the consuls of the United States salaries commensurate with their duties, we would have in that service a corps of men equal to all the demands of the situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that in China we have consuls only at treaty ports?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was coming to that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that we can not get any information we may want except at treaty ports?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is exactly my point. We have these consuls at treaty ports and nowhere else, but there is a mighty empire consisting of people of wealth, of some progress, and, especially in Japan, of mighty progress, and we want to send this commission all over that territory—a thousand miles from any consulate—and a gentleman who talks about a consul making reports of that character will learn something if he will study the situation more fully. We desire to penetrate the dark places of those manufacturing and industrial countries now waking up; we want to know something about what is going on in Japan, where enterprise, intelligence, and almost Yankee push is being driven to its utmost speed in the development of that country.

We have in those mighty Empires of China and Japan of three or four hundred million people, only seven or eight consuls and a few vice-consuls, and gentlemen who understand the subject know that the vice-consuls are nine times out of ten residents of the country where they are operating. They are paid nothing except during the absence of the consul. The clerks are very apt also to be residents of that country, for our salaries to those clerks are so small that an American boy can not afford to go abroad. So the consuls themselves are the only persons we can depend upon, and they are located at these treaty ports and have no compensation, no allowances, no opportunities, to justify them in going out into the vast territory that is affected by the trade and commerce of those mighty Empires. Therefore it is, in my judgment, that this commission is absolutely as indispensable as though there were no such thing as a consul in any of those countries.

But I rose for the purpose, more than anything else, of condemning the constant aspersions cast upon our system of consular administration.

We have had now and then in that service a bad man. We have now and then at the head of our churches a bad man. We have bad men almost everywhere except in the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] But I say that as a class of men, as a class of educated gentlemen, as a class of patriotic citizens, as a class of men worthy of the name of Americans, our consuls are not excelled by any equal number of men in office anywhere on earth.

Take our consul-general at Frankfort—I do not distinguish him especially above all the others—a gentleman educated and graduated at a German university, who, coming to the United States, served three terms with honor on the floor of this House. He was consul-general to Mexico, learned the Spanish language, having the German language at his command when he came here; became a good scholar in the English language, capable of making speeches in Spanish, in German, and in English, and is to-day consul-general at Frankfort, upon a salary of about $2,000 or $2,500 a year.

Give that man adequate compensation; give the consuls of the United States even 50 per cent of what other countries pay their consuls in salary and expenses, and you will have a body of men unequaled by any corresponding class of men in any country. Why, then, should we condemn our consuls? Why hold up to the civilized world the declaration that America, the greatest manufacturing nation in the world, the greatest commercial nation in the world, is represented abroad by a set of men unfit for the service? It is a slander. It is utterly false in fact; is done for a purpose; it is done to advertise the notions of certain gentlemen; and I protest against it in the name of justice, in the name of fair play, and in the name of the honor of my country.

Nicaragua Canal.

HON. B. T. CLAYTON,
OF NEW YORK.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 2, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. CLAYTON of New York said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I desire to put myself on record as favoring the building of this canal for two reasons. I believe that it is demanded by the development and progress of the country in expanding our commercial interests, and also because it will be a great means of defense in case of war with a first-class power.

Now, for the second reason, I believe this Congress should be very careful not to pass any measure here which would in any way commit us in the eyes of the world against the fortification of this canal or in any way limit our authority over the territory which we shall acquire adjoining it.

It is well known that fortifications on land are much superior to war ships, while at the same time the ships cost much more. Well-mounted guns on land are more effective than the same number, yes, than three times as many guns on vessels. It will be absolutely necessary for us to defend this canal from the land.

Now, it has been said here quite recently that the treaties of the Government are the supreme law of the land, and that we should live up to our treaties. I subscribe most heartily to the principle of the Government always keeping good faith. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a grave question as to the validity of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty at this time. For my own part I think that treaty has been violated. I think it is null and void.

Now, there is another feature of the treaty question to which I desire to address myself briefly; and that is as to the power of Congress to pass a law which shall establish our position with reference to a proposed treaty, called the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which is now awaiting ratification by our Government. While it is true that a treaty has the same force as a law of the United States, yet I believe that an act of Congress, passed by both Houses and signed by the President, must be taken by the world as nearer representing the will of the people of the United States than a treaty which is proposed by the Executive and ratified by the Senate. And certainly any action taken by this House must be given due weight in the consideration which is to be given to this proposed treaty.

Let us recall a little of the history of the proposition to build this canal. The construction of a ship waterway across the Isthmus joining the two Americas has been in the minds of men ever since Columbus discovered America. In 1551 the project was seriously urged upon the attention of Philip II of Spain, and, even at that early date, attention had been directed to the three routes so much discussed within the last fifty years, namely, those of Tehuantepec, Nicaragua, and Panama.

In the present century many surveys have been made. Careful research and many experiments have shown that the project is not only practicable but that it is entirely within the possibility of being accomplished at a reasonable cost, and that it may be made a safe, paying investment. And the general opinion is that the canal by way of Lake Nicaragua is the most practicable one of accomplishment. Going as far back as 1825, we find that the matter was seriously discussed by this country, and the proposition was favorably considered by the Republic of Nicaragua.

The minister of foreign affairs of the then new-born Republic of Nicaragua in that year wrote to Henry Clay, our Secretary of State, asking for the assistance and cooperation of the United States in building the canal. His words were:

> Nothing would be more grateful to it than a cooperation by this generous nation, whose noble conduct has been a model and the protection to all the Americas; it would be highly satisfactory to have a participator not only of the merits of the enterprise, but of the great advantages which that canal of communication must produce, by means of a treaty which would perpetually secure the possession of it to the two nations.

The matter then drifted without serious discussion until about 1850, when the discovery of the great resources in that part of our country bordering upon the Pacific caused awakened interest in the construction of this waterway. But this time we met opposition from the British. They had established a foothold in that part of the American continent and were jealous of the United States. This led to the much discussed Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which declares that neither Government—> will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal, agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America.

To show how this agreement has been kept I quote from Senate Report No. 1944, Fifty-first Congress, second session, signed by Senators John Sherman, George F. Edmunds, WILLIAM P. FRYE, William M. Evarts, J. N. Dolph, JOHN T. MORGAN, Joseph E. Brown, H. B. Payne, and J. B. Eustis, which says:

We think it can be justly affirmed that the convention of 1850 has become obsolete, for the convention was based upon the idea of an immediate prosecution of the enterprise of creating this great international waterway, and that neither Government would be bound, so far as it regarded the particular question, apart from other considerations, to consider its stipulations as longer binding.

And again, to show how the British Government has disregarded this treaty, this report says further:

One of the provisions of the convention of 1850 most important to the United States and to the preservation of the republican Government on this continent was that which declared that neither party to the convention should "occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume to exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America."

At that time the "settlement" of British subjects, as it was called, at the Belize, on the coast of Central America, was of the smallest dimensions, and had no substance or form of a territorial dominion. British woodcutters were there under an ancient Spanish license of timber cutting, and nothing more. These settlers in a country not belonging to the British Crown had, off and on, attempted to form a kind of local government for preserving order among themselves, and, after going through various phases, had reached the point in 1850 of some local magistrates and an imperial superintendent, merely and clearly for the purpose of preserving internal order among the English adventurers engaged in the lumber trade in that foreign country.

This was substantially the condition of things when the convention of 1850 was entered into.

The next step taken, after the convention of 1850, was in 1853, when a legislative assembly was constituted to manage the affairs of the settlement. This was followed by a convention between Great Britain and Guatemala in 1859 for the establishment of the boundaries between what the treaty chose to call "Her Britannic Majesty's settlement and possessions in the Bay of Honduras" and the territories of Guatemala. The country, or the largest part of it, belonged to Guatemala as the successor to all the sovereign territorial rights of Spain in that region, but by this treaty that which was before a licensed industrial establishment became instantly a possession of the British Crown. The settlement government continued until 1862 when the settlement was declared a colony and a regular colonial establishment was set on foot; and so, from that time to this, the form and substance of a regular colonial government as a part of Her Majesty's dominions has continued.

It is understood that its geographical dominion has been vastly enlarged from the licensed woodcutting limitations and boundaries that existed in 1850. All this has taken place systematically and persistently, notwithstanding the declaration of Her Majesty's Government that it should not "colonize or assume or exercise any dominion over * * * the Mosquito coast or any part of Central America."

If these proceedings of Her Majesty's Government, in respect of one of the most important subjects of the convention and in absolute opposition to it, do not discharge the United States from all and every of their declarations and engagements stated in that convention, it is impossible to concede what would.

In view of all these considerations the committee is of opinion that the United States is at present under no obligations—measured either by the terms of the convention, the principles of public law, or good morals—to refrain from promoting, in any way that it may deem best for its just interests, the construction of this canal, without regard to anything contained in the convention of 1850.

This report goes thoroughly into the history of the case, and I think the quotations made from it fairly set forth the conclusions of the committee.

The question now before us is, Should we bind ourselves in a similar manner concerning this new proposition to build a canal across the Isthmus?

When it was proposed to build the Suez Canal, England objected until she was certain of succeeding to the ownership and control. The neutrality of the canal was guaranteed, but England has fortifications near the entrances of this canal, and nobody to-day believes for one instant that great Britain would allow the use of this canal by any power hostile to herself. Can the United States afford to act the part of Egypt and France in the building of the Nicaragua Canal? I think not. I see no use in taking any action or in making any treaty which is going to complicate this question. For the purpose of clearly defining our position in this matter I am in favor of passing this bill containing the provision for fortifying the canal. Should this canal be built under agreement with the rest of the world, as provided in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, it would, in time of war, be a source of weakness to the United States, instead of a source of strength, as it naturally ought to be.

Under that treaty we would be bound to protect the vessels of our enemies passing through a canal built at our expense, their avowed object being to attack us as soon as they got through; an anomalous position indeed for this enlightened nation to allow our British cousins to persuade us into—an agreement that would not be kept and that ought not to be made. Now, in advocating action which would forestall this treaty, I am not advocating any hostility to the British Government. The people of the United States are glad to have the friendship of Great Britain, but what they do not want is "entangling alliances." The people of this country do not desire trouble with foreign countries, but they do demand that there shall be no surrender of the Monroe doctrine. We would gain nothing by binding ourselves in such a treaty. Indeed it seems to me that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty having been disregarded by Great Britain and this building of a canal by the United States being a new proposition, that there is no need for any treaty.

Surely if the United States is to furnish the men and the means to build this canal and at its own expense, there is no need for us to ask the permission of Great Britain. Some of our friends say that we want to avoid the expense of building fortifications and keeping soldiers there to maintain them, but this is not a good argument against maintaining our right to do so should that ever become expedient. Furthermore, as soon as this canal is built it will be necessary to provide police for protection and regulation, and the establishment of this police could be done with a view to its advantageous use for defensive purposes in case of necessity. Indeed it is possible to imagine a state of affairs when it might be advantageous to us to blow up some portion of the canal and temporarily prevent its use should we be threatened by the fleets of a nation more powerful at sea than ourselves. Our right to load the canal without becoming liable to all the nations of Europe for damages due to the suspension of its use is an important one that should not be thrown away.

Individuals do not sign contracts without some consideration or advantage to be gained, and neither should we bind our Government unless the Government is to reap proportionate advantages therefrom. Absolutely nothing can be gained by this proposed treaty except permission from Great Britain to attend to our own affairs.

I fully agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. DALY] who in his remarks yesterday demonstrated the great importance of maintaining the Monroe doctrine and the direct bearing which our action in this matter has upon that policy.

He said:

The Monroe doctrine is one of the substantial and underlying principles of this Government. * * * There is no reservation expressed in this policy. It is against any monarchical power that seeks to invade or spread itself on any portion of American soil. President Cleveland in the Venezuelan controversy simply reiterated the doctrine which is the belief of the American people, viz, that the soil of these countries is to remain absolutely intact as against foreign acquisition by force or otherwise, whether it takes the form of gradual extension of boundary lines or the form of open conquest.

It is not enough for those who desire to cater to the demands of Great Britain to endeavor to dismiss the subject by classifying as "jingoes" those who desire to retain all the rights of the United States. We do not desire to enter into any "jingo" policy. We simply wish to state positively and firmly our positions, as we have a right to do, and to avoid all conventions and treaties compromising in their nature and unnecessary and sure to lead to future irritation and trouble. Unhampered by "entangling alliances" with any European power, what an addition to our power of defense this canal would be must be apparent to everyone. Free passage from one ocean to the other, enabling our vessels to assemble in large fleets on either coast, would double our sea power.

There are also commercial considerations for building and maintaining this canal free from unnecessary restrictions and agreements with foreign powers. The time may come when we would like to favor American ships in the matter of tolls as against the subsidized and protected ships of foreign nations. It is important that we encourage our shipping industry, and I believe this canal will afford us an easy and effective means of favoring American-built and American-owned vessels.

I believe that the time has come for action. This ship canal should be built without further delay. There is no doubt about the feasibility of the canal, or of its being built and maintained on a paying basis.

Engineers variously estimate the cost of construction, and that great statesman, Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, in his report to the Senate in 1896 on that subject, said:

Estimating that the canal can be completed in five years, and placing the cost at $150,000,000—the highest estimate—and the operating expenses at $1,000,000 per annum, we have an accumulation of interest, at 3 per cent, at the end of five years of $11,250,000 to be added to the cost of the canal, two and a half years being the average period of expenditure in its construction.

The cost of the canal on this estimate would be $161,250,000, and the interest thus compounded on this sum for the next ten years after the canal is completed would amount to $48,375,000. Add to this $1,000,000 each of the ten years for maintenance and operating expenses and the sum is $58,375,000. The earnings of the canal for the same period, computed on the lowest basis of tonnage that has been suggested by anyone—5,000,000 tons, including passenger fares—at $1.50 per ton (which is less than the toll rates of the Suez Canal), will amount to $75,000,000, thus giving a net profit of $1,662,500 per annum.

All the more recent calculations, especially in view of the improvements in machinery and the better methods of work developed by the construction of the Chicago Canal, warrant us in believing that the cost of construction would be much less than this estimate. That the yearly tonnage would be 8,000,000 is now generally conceded.

The Suez Canal, 99 miles long, cost in all, including construction and interest accumulated until completed, about $100,000,000.

It has a tonnage of about 8,000,000 and returns yearly a handsome net profit.

Our commerce is now seeking new fields in the Orient. New markets for our manufactured goods must be found. This new and shorter route is needed for our vessels going to the markets of China, Japan, etc., as well as for those carrying heavier freight between our seaboard cities on the Atlantic coast and those on the Pacific. The United States is becoming a nation of manufacturers. The world is entering upon a new era and all the nations are fighting for trade advantages. The building of this canal under the control and ownership of our Government will be a great step in the advance of the United States to a position of commercial supremacy. [Applause.]

Rural Free Delivery.

SPEECH
OF
HON. J. H. DAVIDSON, OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 24, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. DAVIDSON said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I desire to congratulate the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads for the splendid manner in which they have responded to the sentiment of this House and the country upon the question of expansion in free rural mail delivery. The apppropriation of $1,750,000 for that purpose is most commendable, and I not only vote for it cheerfully, but would gladly have supported a much larger appropriation. The postal facilities of our country are being continuously improved. Each year abuses are corrected, changes made, and extensions provided for, which have in each instance been of benefit to the country at large. The attention of Congress has often been called to the matter of providing the business men of the cities with the best possible postal facilities.

Public buildings are constructed and properly equipped for the prompt handling of the mails. Delivery is made from the window or box to those who come to the office, while the free-carrier system has been established, perfected, and extended so that the business men, even though they may live but a few rods from the post-office, may have their mail delivered to them not only once, but several times a day.

I make no objection to this splendid service to the men who carry on the great industries of the country. The manufacturing interests and the different branches of trade and commerce are entitled to have the best mail facilities we can give them; but they are not more entitled to such facilities than are those who live more remote from these industrial centers—those who live in the country districts. These men have rights which we should respect. Those engaged in carrying on the great agricultural interests of the country have always borne their share of public burdens. They have contributed of their means for the maintenance of our public institutions, and when our country has needed their services they have always promptly responded to the call.

The farm has always been the foundation from which has come the grandest sentiments of patriotism, of devotion to country, of broad, liberal statesmanship that this Republic has ever seen. The best men of our day and of the years of our Republic have laid the foundation for the intelligent consideration of national questions at the hearthstone of the rural farm home. The hard knocks of farm work have fitted and prepared them for the emergencies which they have so fearlessly met and so grandly overcome in the management of national affairs.

This is an age of expansion. Expansion in education as well as in other things. Education to-day is obtained not alone from within the walls of the schools and colleges, but from that broad field wherein every man strives to attain knowledge upon all the subjects of interest to an enlightened, progressive, and intelligent people. The people of our country have attained a higher degree of education and a greater interest in national questions now than at any other time in our history.

The boys and girls of the rural districts have a broader and more thorough knowledge of the Constitution of our country and the principles of the Declaration of Independence than have their brothers and sisters of the city. Their evenings have been devoted to the study of history rather than to the frivolities of city life. The students in the country schools are taking an active interest in the great questions which come before Congress and the country, and are asking their Representatives for the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other public documents which they may study and from which they may obtain the best information on these great questions.

The farmers are anxious to have the latest publications. If they are engaged in stock raising, they want the best stock journals, and they want them daily, or as soon as possible after publication. If they are interested in dairying, they want the dairy journals and the daily market sheets, which show the latest prices of cheese and butter. If grain raising is their specialty, they want the latest reports of supply and the price of grain.

By careful reading and thoughtful consideration they determine for themselves the possible advance or decrease in the price of grain or stock or wool or the particular commodity in which they have an interest, and instead of following the old-fashioned way of taking their produce or stock to market and selling it at the price offered by the buyer on the street, they keep the commodity at home until they know what the price is and determine for themselves whether they want to sell at that figure.

Rapidity in the transportation of mail matter is an important factor in the commercial world. Of but little less importance is the necessity for reasonably prompt delivery of not only letters, but newspapers, market reports, and other literary productions to all the people. Is there any reason why a man living 6 or 7 miles from the post-office should not be accommodated by daily mail service as well as the man who lives within that number of blocks of the post-office in the city or town? Certainly not. These men do not expect us to build public buildings in the rural districts, but they have a right to expect that we should give them the benefit of prompt mail delivery, and I know of no reason why we should not do so.

The farmer living at a distance from the post-office has been handicapped in his efforts for success because of the lack of proper mail facilities. Free rural mail delivery comes as a blessing to those thus situated. It puts them in touch with the outside world and enables them to take advantage of any sudden change in the condition of the markets, thus placing them on an equality with those who live at the industrial centers.

As an evidence of the appreciation of rural mail delivery, I desire to refer to a letter from a constituent of mine who suggests that the carrier on the rural route in that locality be directed to go in a particular direction on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of each week, as in the afternoon of those days meetings of the dairy board are held, and it is important that they receive their mail and daily market reports prior to the meetings of this board.

The benefits of free rural delivery have been so clearly stated by the First Assistant Postmaster-General that I take the liberty of quoting from his report:

> There has been nothing in the history of the postal service of the United States so remarkable as the growth of the rural free delivery system. Within the past two years, largely by the aid of the people themselves, who, in appreciation of the helping hand which the Government extended to them, have met these advances halfway, it has implanted itself so firmly upon postal administration that it can no longer be considered in the light of an experiment, but has to be dealt with as an established agency of progress, awaiting only the action of the Congress to determine how rapidly it shall be developed.
> The facts hereinafter set forth, with some elaboration of detail, which the importance of the subject seems to me to warrant, will demonstrate—
> That the free delivery of mails in rural communities can be widely extended with great benefit to the people and with little cost to the revenue.
> That whenever the system has been judiciously inaugurated, with a sincere purpose to make it a success, it has been followed by these beneficial results:
> 1. Increased postal receipts. More letters are written and received. More newspapers and magazines are subscribed for. So marked is this advancement that quite a number of rural routes already pay for themselves by the additional business they bring.
> 2. Enhancement of the value of farm lands reached by rural free delivery. This increase of value has been estimated at as high as $5 per acre in some States. A moderate estimate is from $2 to $3 per acre.
> 3. A general improvement of the condition of the roads traversed by the rural carrier. In the Western States especially the construction of good roads has been a prerequisite to the establishment of rural free-delivery service. In one county in Indiana a special agent reports that the farmers incurred an expense of over $2,600 to grade and gravel a road in order to obtain rural free delivery.
> 4. Better prices obtained for farm products, the producers being brought into daily touch with the state of the markets, and thus being enabled to take advantage of information heretofore unattainable.
> 5. To these material advantages may be added the educational benefits conferred by relieving the monotony of farm life through ready access to wholesome literature, and the keeping of all rural residents, the young people as well as their elders, fully informed as to the stirring events of the day. The moral value of these civilizing influences can not be too highly rated.

I shall not undertake to add other reasons in favor of this appropriation. It is of interest, however, to note its early struggle for existence and the rapidity with which it has lately been developed. In the Fifty-third Congress this system was condemned by the House committee, and in 1894 Postmaster-General Bissell refused to make use of the appropriation of $10,000 to inaugurate the service. In 1896 Congress made $40,000 available and Postmaster-General Wilson selected 44 "widely divergent" routes for the experiment. Subsequent appropriations have been as follows: For the year ending June 30, 1898, $50,000; 1899, $150,000; 1900, $300,000; 1901 (the pending bill), $1,750,000.

On November 1, 1899, the system was in successful operation from 383 distributing points, radiating over 40 States and 1 Territory, as follows:

Alabama	1	Nebraska	3
Arkansas	1	New Hampshire	5
Arizona	1	New Jersey	7
California	14	New York	24
Colorado	5	North Carolina	1
Connecticut	6	North Dakota	3
Delaware	4	Ohio	49
Florida	1	Oregon	3
Georgia	4	Pennsylvania	15
Illinois	17	Rhode Island	5
Indiana	44	South Carolina	21
Iowa	23	South Dakota	2
Kansas	17	Tennessee	6
Kentucky	2	Texas	2
Louisiana	1	Utah	1
Maine	7	Vermont	6
Maryland	10	Virginia	4
Massachusetts	11	Washington	1
Michigan	15	West Virginia	7
Minnesota	7	Wisconsin	15
Missouri	12

These routes supply daily service to about 300,000 people, at an average cost of 84 cents per capita. This is a remarkable showing, especially when we remember that free delivery in cities costs about $2.80 per capita and in estimating the cost of rural delivery no account is taken of the great increase of postal receipts, which average from 50 to 75 per cent wherever the service is established.

It is possible, of course, that an occasional route may not be a success, but this is not only the exception, but one not easily found. It should be borne in mind that successful routes can only be established under proper conditions. In the first place, there should be good roads, for without them the delivery of mail can not be prompt or regular. Then there must be density of population, so that a goodly number of persons may be favored within a given radius. Then also should be considered the desire of the people for this service and their willingness to patronize it when established. It is not to be expected that success would attend a route located in a sparsely settled locality and where the people themselves do not want the service and will not patronize it.

The service is intended for those who want it, who need it, and who are willing to meet the officials of the Government halfway in affording facilities for its proper establishment.

The agent of the Post-Office Department is expected to take into consideration all these conditions when he inspects a route and to recommend its establishment only when he finds the conditions favorable.

For the purpose of showing how well these routes are patronized when properly established, I desire to submit some figures on routes established in my district during the last year and which, I presume, are but fair illustrations of the success which has attended the establishment of other routes throughout the country. I might say that I have the honor to represent a district the greater portion of which is devoted almost entirely to agriculture. The soil is of the very best, the rural districts are thickly settled, the roads usually very good, and the people intelligent and progressive, well educated, and well informed upon the current events of the day.

In October of last year there were established at Ripon, Wis., two rural routes, each route covering a distance of about 25 miles and supplying mail daily to from 180 to 200 families, or an average from 900 to 1,000 people. These routes are known as No. 1 and No. 2. During the first week of the service carrier No. 1 delivered 240 and collected 47 pieces of mail; carrier No. 2 delivered 353 and collected 50 pieces.

During the last week in January, after the service had been in operation about four months, carrier No. 1 delivered 980 and collected 180 pieces of mail; carrier No. 2 delivered 953 and collected 128 pieces. This shows an increase in the number of pieces delivered by these two carriers from 597 to 1,933, and in the number of pieces collected from 97 to 314, the increase being about 222 per cent.

During the whole month of January carrier No. 1 delivered 3,904 and collected 748 pieces; carrier No. 2 delivered 4,139 and collected 1,504 pieces.

About the 1st of December I secured the establishment of two routes from Oshkosh, Wis. During the first week of this service carrier No. 1 delivered 504 and collected 67 pieces; carrier No. 2 delivered 400 and collected 72 pieces. During the last week in January, when the routes had been in operation about two months, carrier No. 1 delivered 1,095 and collected 128 pieces; carrier No. 2 delivered 982 and collected 126 pieces. This shows an increase in the number of pieces delivered of 127 per cent, and in the number collected of 82 per cent. During the month of January carrier No. 1 delivered 4,295 pieces and collected 495 pieces; carrier No. 2 delivered 4,783 and collected 429 pieces.

These were the first routes established in my district; and while I have not been able to receive any later reports than those given, these are sufficient to prove conclusively the popularity of this service and that these routes are entirely successful.

Since these routes were established I have yet to learn of any complaint, either in the service or the system. On the contrary, many of the persons favored have written me thanking me for the interest I have taken and expressing their appreciation of this service. They realize that it puts them in closer touch with the outside world, and it brings them the news of the day while yet it is news.

After one of these routes was established one of the farmers came to my office and said:

> By the establishment of this service you have added to the value of my farm at least 10 per cent, for if I were to offer it for sale to-day the mere fact that I could advertise that mail was delivered daily at the door would, I think, enable me to obtain at least that much more in its sale.

The convenience of having a line of daily communication between the farmhouse and the city is a matter worthy of consideration, especially in the busy season of the year. The good housewife may be short of some article needed in her domain. The farmer may need a new piece of gearing for some machine, or some article the weight or cost of which is trifling, but to obtain which would necessitate the spending of his own time and the time of a team in which to make the trip to town and return for the purpose of securing this article. Now, a word to the carrier on one evening, and the next morning he brings the article to the door.

I trust the Department will give early consideration to the question of the salary paid to the carrier. At present it is $400 per year, and out of this he is obliged to maintain himself and to furnish his own conveyance. The routes are usually about 25 miles in length. One horse can not stand this travel for six days in each week during the year. The carrier must either own two horses, or he will soon wear out the one and be obliged to pay nearly one-half of his year's salary to purchase another.

I believe the compensation to the carrier should be raised to $600 per year. Fifty dollars per month is not too much for a man who must go over this route every day, in all kinds of weather, in all seasons of the year, and who possesses the intelligence and ability to properly discharge the duties of his position. Good men should be chosen for this work. Their responsibilities are not small now, and with the extension and improvement of the service the responsibilities will increase. I trust the Department will soon be able to advance the compensation to be paid these carriers at least $100 per year, if they can not make it $200.

This system is intended for the rural districts. It is intended to give better postal facilities to those who are now poorly supplied, to give daily service to those who otherwise would have to travel several miles for their mail.

Now the question arises, What are the objections to its continuation? In my own judgment there are none worthy of our serious consideration. The system has been found to be practicable, and the routes, the most of them, are practically self-sustaining.

When existing abuses of the postal laws with reference to the amounts paid to railroad companies for transportation and the sending of matter as second class which ought to pay a higher rate are corrected, the Post-Office Department will, in my judgment, be able to extend free delivery to all the rural districts without any additional burden by way of taxation. I understand that the star-route contractors object to rural delivery.

Why? Because they see the end of those contracts out of which they have made fortunes. If better service can be given to the people, we need not worry over the objections made by these contractors. It is said that some of the fourth-class postmasters object for fear their offices will be discontinued. I have no personal knowledge of any such objections, but if there are any, they undoubtedly come from those who, while acting as postmaster, are also conducting some general public business, and the post-office is operated by them not for the money there is in it, but for the purpose of "drawing trade."

This is a selfish reason, and is not entitled to consideration. The fourth-class offices were established for the benefit of the people and not for the postmaster. In its day the small office in the rural district was of much benefit; but if in the general advancement of all things there has come a better system, a service which will bring greater benefits to the people as a whole, then the "old things" must pass away.

The broad principle of "the greatest good to the greatest number" should be applied in this as in other things. This applies also to those who reside in the business centers, and who have the benefits of daily mail service themselves, but who object to its extension into rural districts for fear that the farmer will not come to town to trade if his mail is delivered at his door.

I have no sympathy with such narrow, selfish reasoning. "Live and let live" should be our motto. Because we are favored in some particular line it is no reason why we should object to like benefits being extended to others. On the contrary, we should encourage and aid them in all these matters.

I believe the time has come when Congress should declare that rural mail delivery has passed beyond its experimental stage and has become a fixed feature of our postal system. Let us appropriate money sufficient for its extension under reasonable and proper rules and regulations, not for the purpose of forcing the system upon people to whom it would be a detriment, nor to interfere with the present good mail facilities of any locality, but to the end that routes may be established in proper places and under proper conditions for the benefit of those who will appreciate the service and to whom it will come as a blessing.

We appropriate money for fast mail trains and for quick delivery in cities. Let us be reasonably generous in our effort to benefit those who have ever constituted the mainstay of our national existence, those who produce the food and fiber that feed and clothe the world.

I trust this appropriation will be made. I frankly confess that I shall endeavor to secure the expenditure of a portion of it for the extension of rural delivery in my district. I know of no part of the country where the conditions are more favorable, and I know of no people who are more entitled to enjoy the benefits of the service or who will appreciate more thoroughly its extension than the people I have the honor to represent. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I shall gladly favor the passage of this bill.

The Monroe Doctrine and the Nicaragua Canal.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 2, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and having immediately under consideration the amendment, recommended by the committee, to strike out the word "fortifications," in the fourteenth line of the second page of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "provisions"—

Mr. SHAFROTH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The amendment under consideration, to strike out the word "fortifications," is, in my judgment, of great importance to this measure. So far as my position is concerned, I believe that we should have a fortified canal or no canal. If treaty stipulations of our Government stand in the way of fortifying the canal, then, either by diplomatic negotiations or by notice of abrogation, with restoration to England of her status at the time, such treaties should be annulled.

It seems to me to be absolutely foolish for this Government to raise the entire capital for the investment, to undertake all the hazards of such a gigantic enterprise, and at the same time to grant to the battle ships and merchant marine of Great Britain and the other nations of the world the same rights and privileges in the canal that we retain for our own vessels.

Great Britain and her colonies transport in their bottoms 48.5 per cent of the world's ocean commerce, while the United States carries in its vessels only 18.7 per cent of the same. The proposed Hay-Pauncefote treaty provides for the building of a neutral canal, and stipulates that no greater charge can be imposed upon the vessels of other nations than upon our own.

Sections 1, 2, and 7 of Article II of that proposed treaty provide as follows:

1. The canal shall be free and open, in time of war as in time of peace, to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

7. No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

For the United States under such conditions to build the canal at its own expense would in effect make it construct a canal mostly for the benefit of Great Britain. As Great Britain carries three times the amount of ocean commerce we do, the benefit to Great Britain would be three times as much as to us, and yet she does not risk a penny in the venture, while we risk the entire capital.

It can not be denied that the hazards of this enterprise will be great.

COST WILL EXCEED ESTIMATES.

First. I feel confident that the construction of the canal will cost a great deal more than the amount fixed in this bill. Nearly every canal that has ever been constructed has cost a great deal more than the amount of the estimates.

It was estimated that the Panama Canal would not cost more than $120,000,000, and De Lesseps let a contract for the entire work for $102,000,000, but we know that it has cost the stockholders $256,000,000 up to this time, and not more than one-third of the same has been constructed. It is true that much of this money was squandered, but we must expect some losses from the same cause.

It was estimated that the Manchester Canal, of England, could be built for $47,750,098; but when all the bills were paid, it was found to cost $73,818,940.

It was estimated that the Suez Canal would cost only $40,000,000; but when completed, the amount was found to be $89,673,286.

It is more than likely that many difficulties unforeseen now will have to be met and that the cost will be far in excess of the estimates.

RETURNS WILL BE LESS THAN ESTIMATED.

Second. I am satisfied that the canal will not yield the revenue which is expected, and I am confident that it will not pay a fair return on the investment for many years to come.

The friends of this measure estimate that the amount of commerce which will pass through this canal each year will be between 6,000,000 tons 10,000,000 tons, while the opponents of the bill estimate that the amount of tonnage will not be more than 300,000 tons per annum. They are both wrong.

The total tonnage that now goes around the Horn and across the Isthmus is only 160,391 tons. The entire traffic of the long route is now conducted in sailing vessels. It is asserted that sailing vessels can not go by the Nicaragua route because of the lack of a sufficient breeze. Hence the canal can not get the traffic which now goes around the Horn, nor can it get the bulky cargoes, as they can not stand the toll charges.

Freight tonnage for canals has always proven disappointing when canals are first constructed. The estimate of tonnage for the Manchester Canal was 9,649,316 tons, while the actual tonnage was only 1,826,237. The estimated receipts were $8,174,659, while the actual receipts were $884,218, which was less than the operating expenses of the canal. Even the Suez Canal, with its great advantage of connecting important commercial nations without railroad competition, for the first decade of its operation did not pay.

The fact that New York is 181 miles and London 5,080 miles nearer Manila by the Suez Canal than by the Nicaragua route, together with the most excellent coaling facilities and the convenience of a sea-level canal, makes it almost certain that the Suez route will continue to retain nearly all the business it now controls.

The commerce to the Pacific coast, in my judgment, will be less than estimated. The transcontinental lines of railroad are bound to carry nearly all the freight from our eastern to our western coast. The year before the Union Pacific Railroad was built the freights carried by Panama was $70,202,029; in 1894 it was $3,317,582.

THE CANAL A MILITARY NECESSITY.

Notwithstanding the fact that the cost of construction is likely to be more than the amount of the estimates, and the receipts are likely to be much less than anticipated, yet from a military standpoint the importance of the canal to our nation is so great that I am in favor of building it at the expense of the Government, provided we retain the right to fortify the same.

It is the great advantage of the canal to our naval establishment which in my judgment warrants us in taking the risk of its financial success.

The value of our Navy, including the battle ships and cruisers now authorized and in course of construction, is about $300,000,000. To build this canal and fortify it is equivalent to doubling the strength and power of our Navy. The ability to concentrate all our vessels on the Atlantic or Pacific coast in less than half the time it will take the vessels of other nations to go around the Horn gives us an enormous advantage in military affairs, and one that will justify almost any expenditure to accomplish. But, sir, to give to other nations the same right to concentrate their fleets by going through our canal for the purpose of bombarding our cities would destroy all the military advantages we would gain by the construction of the same.

In fact, it would be better for our Navy if no canal existed, provided it be neutral, as the time consumed by the enemy in going by the long route would give us at least several months in which to fortify our Pacific coast cities, and when their fleets reached our Western shore their coal would be exhausted, and hence they would be in no condition to offer battle to even the few ships we keep in those waters.

THE CANAL CAN BE EASILY DEFENDED.

The contention that we could not successfully defend the canal in time of war is, it seems to me, preposterous. With the modern means of defense at each end of the canal we could defy with safety the largest fleet and most powerful battle ships in the world. The modern fortifications are not made of high walls and ramparts, which can be totally destroyed by 13-inch guns. They are sunk in the earth, with hardly any exposure for the shells of the enemy. It is almost impossible, by an attack from the sea, to destroy the modern works of defense. The use of the disappearing gun in fortifications diminishes by many times the chances of its being disabled in an engagement, while the high decks and exposed guns of the vessel seem to invite the explosion of destructive shells. The impenetrability of the modern fortification constitutes an enormous advantage over the vulnerability of the battle ship.

There has been a contest going on for years between the inventors of armor plate for ships and those of powerful projectiles. No sooner has an armor plate been discovered which seems to be impenetrable than a shell is invented which penetrates and shatters it with ease. The guns of a fortification can be heavier, of longer range, and of more certain sight than those used on a battle ship.

It is for these reasons that with powerful guns in fortifications a fleet can be totally annihilated before it can come within its own firing range.

Not only has a heavier disappearing gun on a firm foundation an advantage over the smaller exposed gun on a trembling vessel, but under the modern means of discharging torpedoes by electricity the entrance to a canal can be placed in such a perfect state of defense as to prevent a fleet from coming even within cannon range of the fortifications.

Mr. Edison, at the commencement of the Spanish-American war, said that by means of torpedoes which could be discharged from shore he could, in six weeks' time, make any harbor invulnerable to the attack of the enemy.

Of course it will take a considerable force in times of war to properly patrol the banks of the canal to prevent them from being blown up with dynamite, but that expense would only occur in time of war, and would not be a yearly charge for maintaining the canal.

If the canal were neutral and without such a patrol, would it be safe during war to send a battle ship through the same? How easy it would be for a sympathizer of the enemy to not only render the canal useless, but to also strand our battle ships as they pass through the same.

A neutral, unprotected canal in time of war would therefore be most dangerous for our own battle ships.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

But, sir, by far the greatest objection to agreeing to a neutral canal with any European power is that it violates a doctrine which has been maintained and held sacred by the people of this country ever since 1823.

It was in 1815, after the downfall of Napoleon, that an alliance was formed among some of the continental powers of Europe, by which they sought to perpetuate the principles of absolute monarchy as against the growing tendency for republican forms of government. In recognition of the idea of "the divine right of kings" this combination was termed the "Holy Alliance."

Spain was a party to that combination, and at a meeting of their diplomatic representatives held at Verona, Italy, in October, 1822, it was proposed that there be restored to Spain, as her colonies, the Spanish-American republics of South and Central America, which had asserted and established their independence. It was an alignment of powers in behalf of monarchies against republics, in behalf of oppression against liberty. As part compensation to France, one of the nations to the alliance for this proposed interference in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere, it was suggested that the princes of the restored Bourbons of France be placed over some of the Spanish-American empires.

It is a peculiar fact, but nevertheless true, that the suggestion of the announcement of the Monroe doctrine came from Great Britain. It did not come through love for us, but from an apprehension that France, at that time the deadly enemy of England, might become too powerful a rival, and that the assumption of power by France over the Spanish-American republics might endanger the trade which Great Britain had already established in Central and South America.

It was Mr. Canning, England's minister of foreign affairs, who asked Mr. Rush, our diplomatic representative at the Court of St. James, this question: "Are the great political and commercial interests which hang upon the destinies of the New World to be canvassed and adjusted in Europe without the cooperation or even the knowledge of the United States?" And he added that though Great Britain would throw no impediment in the way of an arrangement between the Spanish-American republics and the mother country by amicable negotiation, she "could not see any portion of them transferred to any other power with indifference." Mr. Rush immediately communicated this important matter to our Government.

John Quincy Adams, then Secretary of State, urged upon President Monroe the announcement of the doctrine which afterwards took the name of that President. Mr. Monroe doubted the wisdom of such a course, and wrote a letter to the great authority on political questions of his time, Mr. Jefferson, and received the following patriotic American reply:

> The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation; this sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us. And never could we embark upon it under circumstances more auspicious. Our first and fundamental maxim should be, never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe; our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests different from those of Europe, and peculiarly her own. She should, therefore, have a system of her own, separate and apart from that of Europe. While the last is laboring to become the domicile of despotism, our endeavor should surely be to make our hemisphere that of freedom.

President Monroe was evidently greatly influenced by that letter, and by the attitude of Mr. Adams relative to the same question, and in his annual message to Congress on December 2, 1823, he announced the Monroe doctrine in the following terms:

> The occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power. * * * We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

It is said that the foregoing part of the message was written by Mr. Adams.

The announcement of this policy elicited the greatest excitement in Europe, and received a most enthusiastic indorsement from the people of the United States.

Sir, it was an ultimatum to the monarchs of Europe in behalf of liberty and independence.

Sir, no Presidential message in the history of this Government has produced such far-reaching and beneficial results to the Republic as that of December 2, 1823. Truly has it been said that it was the second Declaration of Independence.

Although the doctrine enunciated therein has not been recognized by the powers of Europe as a principle of international law in express terms, yet it is nothing more than the same principle they all acknowledge in the doctrine of the balance of power, and it has in numerous instances been acknowledged by their conduct. France, in withdrawing its support to the claims of Maximilian to the crown of Mexico, and Great Britain, in consenting to arbitration of the Venezuelan boundary dispute, in answer to the demands of the United States, acquiesced in the clearest manner to this American doctrine.

OUR OWN SAFETY INVOLVED.

First. The principle of the Monroe doctrine is based, first, on the safety of our own Government. There is no power in North or South America that can endanger our national existence, even if it so desired. The rival powers are all located across the Atlantic Ocean. There is no danger from those powers as long as they have no footing on the Western Hemisphere. Hence our safety and self-protection dictate a policy which prevents them from obtaining paramountcy in any part of the New World.

The blessings which have flowed and must continue to flow from such a policy are inestimable. Instead of the constant disputes and wars which must arise between rival nations possessing contiguous or threatening territory, we are bound to have the blessings of almost universal peace.

Sir, the difference between the development of a country which has peace and one which has wars at frequent intervals is the difference between wealth and poverty, prosperity and depression.

To deplete the productive forces of a country at frequent intervals, in order to supply soldiers for war and for large standing armies, must, in a long series of years, affect most seriously the development of that county.

By adhering to this doctrine and confining our acquisitions of territory to this hemisphere, and to those only with the consent of the governed, we will not only have peace, but we will remove the necessity of a large standing army, which contiguous rival nations are compelled to maintain in order to insure peace.

The progress of a nation is, in the long run, determined by the amount that is levied upon its industries.

Its development is inversely in proportion to the amount of the taxes imposed.

In the nineteenth century there was expended by the nations of Europe in maintaining wars and standing armies more than $100,000,000,000. On account of the large military and naval establishments made necessary to preserve peace the taxes of Great Britain are 10 per cent: of France, 13 per cent, and of Germany, 10½ per cent of the earnings of their peoples. In the United States the taxes are only 5 per cent of the earnings of our people.

At the beginning of the century we possessed none of the accumulated wealth which made the European nations at that time powerful, and yet, by adhering to the policy enunciated by President Monroe, which insures peace and low taxation, we have built a nation which in wealth surpasses any one of our rivals and in productive power is equal to Great Britain, France, and Germany combined.

For our own safety and prosperity we can not be too careful in further scrupulously guarding the principles of the Monroe doctrine.

THE PRINCIPLE OF HUMAN RIGHTS INVOLVED.

Second. The second great result of the Monroe doctrine was its benefit to mankind. At the time it was announced republics other than the United States had not firm footing among the nations of the world.

They were scorned and ridiculed by all the monarchies. The Holy Alliance expected to extinguish all the republics of the Western World except the United States, and at one time it even intimated that it might assist Great Britain in restoring to her dominion the States of this Union.

Sir, that message called a halt to the movement of the European monarchies and assured the protection of our Government to the liberties of the people of North and South America.

It was an important step in the forward march of civilization and a great movement in behalf of human rights. It made the New World a refuge for the oppressed of every nation and the home of freedom and liberty.

The European nations have no use for republican institutions; and if the Monroe doctrine is modified or compromised, it will not be long until they get such a footing upon the Western World as not only to endanger the other republics, but to place in jeopardy the peace and existence of our own Government.

It is for these reasons that the building of the Nicaragua Canal under any arrangement with European nations would be weakening to our country and give them a continual excuse to question our conduct in the management of the same.

It forms the entangling alliance, against which we have been so solemnly and repeatedly warned by Washington, Jefferson, and other American statesmen.

Instead of such a course, the canal should be purely an American canal, guarded and fortified in such a way as to give to our Government the great advantage to which its location and independence is entitled.

Then why strike out the word "fortifications?" The Chairman of the committee having this bill in charge insists that we retain the right to fortify under the words to "protect the canal" in a previous section of the bill. It is possible that we may retain such a right, but why leave the matter in any doubt?

The effect of striking out the word "fortifications" is to either deceive other nations or deceive ourselves. Plain, open dealing with our own people and with other countries, in my judgment, requires the retention of that word.

It must be remembered that the right to "protect" the canal was stipulated in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and, at the same time, the right to fortify was expressly denied therein. The inquiry naturally arises, If we use the same word in this bill as was used in that treaty, do we not construe the word protect to have the same meaning intended for it by the parties to that treaty? The question would soon be raised by those who desire a neutral canal whether we could have a canal defended by our Government under the provisions of this bill. The only safe course is to retain the word "fortifications" in the measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has the gentleman noticed that this word is used in connection with the direction made to the Secretary of War and that he has no diplomatic power whatever?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Nevertheless, the paragraph clearly expresses our intention to fortify the canal. It reads:

And the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such fortifications for defense as will be required for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

I do not see where in the bill the right to "fortify" could be placed to give it clearer meaning. We have in the bill now a clear word, which expresses the intention of the committee and the chairman thereof, and we ought to let it stand.

Let the word "fortifications" remain, and we then will authorize by this bill the construction of an American canal for America's defense. [Applause.]

HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, April 7, 1900.

The House having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that suitable tribute may be made to the high character and eminent public services of the Hon. RICHARD PARKS BLAND, late a most distinguished member of the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Missouri.

"Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these memorial exercises, shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman, and inform the Senate of the action of this body"—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I made the acquaintance of the subject of these eulogies and I terminated my acquaintance with him in this Chamber. I had heard of him, as all persons in this country had who take an interest in politics. I knew something of his character, but nothing of his person, and therefore I came here and met an opponent, a prominent member of the political party to which I do not belong, and made the acquaintance which ripened, upon my part, into great admiration.

I recognized in Mr. BLAND a true type of the politician, and I put no qualifications to that term. There has been no man of prominence whose action has redounded to the honor and glory and greatness of this country who was not a politician under one or more definitions of that term. Following a suggestion that was made in the course of to-day, I am glad to have the opportunity to give my views upon that subject very briefly.

I know that the term "politician" in the United States, among the doctrinaires, and certain of the literary gentlemen of the country, is often and usually used as a term of reproach. I know of nothing in the United States appertaining to its greatness and glory that I would ask to retain, and I know of nothing in the United States that is of any value to the nation as an organized body that has not come to us as the achievement and handiwork of politicians. And there is not a man whose name is associated with the great history of our country and whose words are quoted when we come to discuss a great question who was not a politician.

George Washington was a politician in every true sense of the word. He not only belonged to a political party, but he and his associates were the creators of a political party; and even as early as the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States he showed the skill of a trained and practiced politician. Observe him, writing a letter to the governor of Massachusetts, and saying to him that if Massachusetts did not ratify the Constitution Virginia, he feared, would not; that Patrick Henry was sowing the seeds of discord throughout that State, and that the thing to do was to press forward upon that line in Massachusetts and secure the ratification of the Constitution there, and then he said he might be able, with the men who were helping him, the other politicians, to bring Virginia into line.

Madison was a politician, the father of the Democratic party, I believe. Jefferson was a politician, and those men who wrote the Constitution and who wrote the Declaration of Independence and who gave us the great start as a nation were all of them men of party creeds and party attachment and party fidelity.

Coming all along down the line the men who have built up this great structure of government, and to whom we refer, have been politicians. Even the great Chief Justice of the United States, whose decision has been so often referred to and so terribly mutilated and, I think, misunderstood in the debates upon this floor, was himself a member of a great political party, and worked as a friend and advocate of the principles of that party.

And I might come clear on down and name Lincoln and Grant and all the men who, following the war, by promotion of the scheme of one party, or the men who operated as the conservative influence on that majority, brought this country up to where it is now—upon the high plane of constitutional liberty—were all of them members of political parties and all of them operated through political organizations, and that is what first drew my attention to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, in whose honor we meet to-day.

RICHARD P. BLAND was a member of the Democratic party. He believed in that party, believed in its organization and principles. It may be that he did not concede the proposition that the Democratic party could never change, and it is likely that if he had been confronted with the suggestion that as to some of the dogmas which he advocated they were at variance with the early teachings of the Democratic party he would have answered that that was but the necessary and natural evolution of party teaching, belief, and opinion. But he was a Democrat, and, while I think he had tolerance for others, he was a devoted friend of the Democratic party. He was opposed to sacrificing its principles to catch the support of the drifting particle of political matter that is constantly floating in the atmosphere of political organizations.

He was a strict party man. He never lost sight of what he believed to be the best interests of the country, as reflected through the best action of his political party. He may not have been an orator, but he had the power to stand upon this floor and answer the arguments that were made against him with a force and effectiveness that I have seldom heard in this Hall. It is not always the artful putting together of words and the smooth delivery of phrases that marks the orator. It is the man who can use the right word at the right time, in the right connection, and who carries convincing power into the hearts and consciences of those who hear him, who is the real orator and who affects the interests of the country.

And while I was strongly opposed to Mr. BLAND, there has never been on this floor since I have had the honor to be a member, now almost fourteen years, a man of whom I had greater fear, in his effect upon the position which I was occupying. It came from his sincerity in part. He was a good illustration of how weak is the most eloquent man if his words carry with them the suggestion of insincerity, and how powerful is the language of even a less cultured man if his words come from his own heart and belief and carry with them to the hearer the idea of absolute sincerity.

Now, I never could understand how that doctrine, so persistently advocated by Mr. BLAND, could fasten itself upon the mind of an intelligent man. I am not going to discuss the question here. I shall not come even quite as near it as did my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]; but I beg to say that to me it was the plainest proposition in the world that he was wrong, and yet I have sat and listened to him for half an hour or an hour, and many a time I got almost into the condition of the old fellow in the Scripture, excepting that the word "Christian" would not have fitted the situation and the word "Philistine" would; and I have often thought as I listened to him, "Almost thou persuadest me to get on the wrong side of this question."

He was a man of power. It came, doubtless, in large part from his thorough knowledge of his subject. I presume there was not a man in the United States who could stand a cross-examination by an expert upon the question of finance with the success that he could. There was no fact in history, there were no figures in statistics, there was nothing pertinent to the whole domain of financial consideration that he was not ready at all times to respond to.

Now, a great deal has been said about his personal characteristics by gentlemen who knew him far better than I did, but there was one thing particularly which I liked about him, and that was his ever readiness to give and take. No matter how strongly his opponent struck at him, no matter how directly and fiercely, it made no sort of difference to him. He heard it with the same placidity that he would have heard a commendation of his argument; but when he came to reply it was entirely apparent that he had appreciated the full force of the attack and was entirely and wholly ready to answer. He did more—and here is a curious ground for me to occupy—he did more to impress the people of the United States favorably upon the great question that he advocated so long and so persistently, in my judgment, than any other man or any other ten men in the United States.

His name had been attached to the Bland-Allison Act of 1878, which gave to us this dollar which we are coining in such large quantities to-day, and in that way had impressed upon the people of the country that he was the real champion of this condition of silver coinage and of other conditions which might grow out of the position which he occupied; and he did more to educate up to that standard than any other man, in my judgment, in the country. Whether he could have carried the banner of that temporarily lost cause, at least, as gallantly and as dangerously to us and as near successfully as did that champion of 1896, I can not say; but I have no doubt had he been the champion of 1896, with his calm educational argument to the people, that to-day, if he were living, he would be the most formidable champion of that cause in the whole country.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is something after a man's death for his friends to realize that he has been talked about in the American Congress as we have heard Mr. BLAND talked about here this afternoon. These eulogies have not been perfunctory. These eulogies are not the ordinary article that we have listened to. They are important in that they have come freighted and fragrant with the love and knowledge and eloquence of the men who knew BLAND, and who had a field in which they could well expend their very best efforts and not reach the high ground of glory that attaches to the name of this statesman, this politician, this good citizen, this honest man.

When the Democratic party assembled in convention at Chicago in 1896, handicapped as it was by the presence of Populist influence—an influence which, in my judgment, has hitherto for many years been the substantial ruin of the Democratic party and will continue, in my judgment, to be so—Mr. BLAND was recognized, through this country and throughout Europe among the reading people, as the true type and exponent of the doctrine of free and unlimited coinage of silver. No other man had acquired a standing comparable to his, and, entering as we were upon that issue, the average American citizen would have as quickly thought of the play of Hamlet minus the somber Dane as a Democratic nomination for President with RICHARD P. BLAND left out as a candidate. But he was a modest man. He did not push himself. He would not go to Chicago to play in the galleries or on the floor or through the ever-ready newspaper for a nomination which he considered his own by right of having constructed and builded it, and which everybody else understood was his.

But there are currents and tides and cyclones and simooms in politics that sweep away the acquirements of years of hard and faithful study and long and persistent devotion to principle, and like a breath it is gone. I did not stand in such a relation to Mr. BLAND as would justify me in speaking of whether or not he felt the blow that he received at Chicago keenly, or whether or not it made no impression upon him I can not say. That he had a right to have felt that blow keenly no one will deny. That he was too good a politician, too faithful a party man, too modest a citizen, too upright a gentleman to manifest or to complain about it is probably true. What the effect was upon him in his own person I can not say, but I can say this, that it brought to him a strong feeling of sympathy throughout the country and largely among men who did not belong to his political party.

It is true that it is never the proper business of men of one party to sympathize with the misfortunes or hard treatment bestowed upon others by men of other parties, but, all the same, the intelligent man thinks and even thinks about things that are none of his business.

I believe there was no man in the United States who so thoroughly understood the questions involved in free coinage at 16 to 1 as did BLAND. I believe that no man was quite so sincere in his advocacy as was BLAND. I believe that no man suffered more disappointment than did he when the campaign of 1896 failed; and if he could have looked forward and could have seen in the future that this great idea for which he had spent the greater portion of a great lifetime had reached its culmination in 1896; that that defeat was a final defeat, and that that overthrow was a final overthrow; who can say what its effect may have been upon a sensitive, honest, upright, sincere man? I can not, Mr. Speaker, nor can you. That he died while the fruition for which he had labored so long, so bravely, so incessantly was yet not reached is a fact.

Not like Moses was he even allowed to stand upon the mountain top and view the culmination of his hopes and efforts. He may have died in hope or he may have died in despair of the ultimate triumph of the great principle for which he had battled, but all the same he had fought a good fight, he had kept the faith, and amid disaster he had upheld the banner and was entitled to the plaudit in all time from the men who stood with him, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Oh, strong soul, by what shore
Tarriest thou now? For that force
Surely has not been left vain;
Somewhere, surely, afar,
In the sounding labor house vast
Of being, is practiced that strength,
Zealous, beneficent, firm;
Yes, in some far-shining sphere,
Conscious or not of the past,
Still thou performest the word
Of the Spirit in whom thou dost live,
Prompt, unwearied as here;
* * * This was thy work,
This was thy life, upon earth.

Late Representative Richard P. Bland.

ADDRESS OF FATHER J. F. WOOD,

SUBMITTED BY THE

HON. DAVID A. DE ARMOND,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 7, 1900.

The House of Representatives having under consideration the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that suitable tribute may be paid to the high character and eminent public services of the Hon. RICHARD PARKS BLAND, late a most distinguished member of the House of Representatives of the United States from the State of Missouri.

"Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these memorial exercises, shall stand adjourned.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman, and inform the Senate of the action of this body"—

Mr. DE ARMOND submitted the following address, which was delivered by Father J. F. Wood at the grave of Mr. BLAND:

My dear friends, we are assembled here to-day to pay our last sad tribute to one who is no more, but who during life endeared himself to us by his simplicity, humility, and honesty.

When years shall have rolled down the avenue of time and passed into oblivion the name and deeds of Hon. RICHARD PARKS BLAND will adorn the pages of history, and will occupy a place with Washington, Jefferson, and Webster, and other great statesmen. Although gone to his reward, his deeds live after him. As a statesman he had few if any superiors. He seemed to be always right. I believe if it were possible for him to return to life that he would not reverse a single vote he ever cast on any great measure.

I am not here to-day in my official capacity. This I very much regret. But as an admirer of this great and good man, and to extend to the family my sympathy in their sad bereavement, I will remind you that death is but a messenger that comes to conduct us to our future home beyond the clouds. Are we sad at his coming? Will we go to heaven reluctantly? Must we be brought there by force? And will we approach the abode of our eternal reward in tears and lamentation?

Perhaps, my dear friends, you will say, "I would be most willing to die if I knew for certain that I would go to heaven."

Let me ask what causes you to doubt, what takes away your hope? What would cause you an unhappy death? You say, "The sins I have committed." You answer rightly, for Royal Prophet says, "The death of the sinner will be most terrible." What foolishness! If the lots determining a good or a bad death were drawn from a covered urn, then you would have reason to fear and tremble. But this is not the case; the lots are open before your eyes. You know the lot of sin, and that eternal death awaits it, but you also know that the lot of penance will insure you a happy death.

Do you hesitate which to choose? Look above. So many saints in heaven were as great sinners as you, but they became, by penance, as great saints as they were sinners. If you have in the past followed them in the path of sin, follow them now in the path of penance. Why, then, should we weep and lament when we know that we will be again united with those who have gone before us, never more to be separated from those we have loved on earth? Therefore let us hope and pray that the Almighty may in His infinite mercy forgive whatever imperfection the deceased may have been guilty of.

Free Homes.

SPEECH
HON. ROBERT J. GAMBLE, OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 3, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 996) providing for free homesteads on the public land for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose—

Mr. GAMBLE said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I shall endeavor not to trespass too much upon the patience of the House in the discussion of the pending measure. Its main features have been fully explained by the gentlemen who have preceded me. I remember well in the Fifty-fourth Congress this measure, as far as the principle is involved, was fully discussed in what was then known as the Oklahoma bill. It has been repeatedly stated here to-day, and denied by no one, that each of the great political parties, in their national platforms in 1896, with practically this identical measure before them, indorsed the provisions of this law and are thus committed to its enactment. I read their respective declarations as follows:

Republican: Homesteads.—We believe in an immediate return to the free-homestead policy of the Republican party, and urge the passage by Congress of the satisfactory free-homestead measure which has already passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Democratic: The Democratic party believes in home rule, and that all public lands of the United States should be appropriated to the establishment of free homes to the American citizens.

Populist: We demand that bona fide settlers on all public lands be granted free homes, as provided in the national homestead law; and that no exception be made in the case of the Indian reservations when opened for settlement, and that all lands not now patented come under this demand.

Two years ago it came up for consideration in the House as an amendment on the Indian appropriation bill, and was then resisted largely because by the judgment of the House it was thought it imperiled the standing and support of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations. An amendment proposed here, and now pending, is advocated and urged by the representatives of these institutions, which places their income upon a certain and sure foundation and in no sense contingent upon the amount received annually from the sale of public lands.

Mr. Chairman, appropriations have been made year after year for these institutions and recommended in the Book of Estimates, without any consideration whatever as to the amount of money received from the sale of public lands. In different years the net amount received from the sale of public lands has been insufficient to support the agricultural colleges. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that from the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the last year, it is disclosed that after paying the expenses of maintaining the General Land Office and the United States land offices throughout the country, there would be left little more than sufficient to support the agricultural colleges and experiment stations. During many years the amount received has been largely inadequate. Year after year it has been appropriated directly from the Federal Treasury without regard to the amount received from the sale of public lands.

The amount received from the sale of public lands during the last fiscal year is largely in excess of what has been received from that source for a number of years preceding. The surplus left to go into the Federal Treasury the past year was comparatively small after paying the expenses of administration and the amount provided by existing law for the support of agricultural colleges.

Total cash receipts from sale of public lands for the year ending June 30, 1899		$2,594,690
Disbursements for support of agricultural colleges for year ending June 30, 1899	$1,152,000
Disbursements for maintaining United States land offices for year ending June 30, 1899	661,402
Disbursements for maintaining General Land Office for year ending June 20, 1899	525,160
		2,338,562
Balance		256,128

The receipts from the sale of public lands are gradually growing less each year. The support of these important institutions should not be contingent upon the amount of revenue derived from this particular source. The following table shows the receipts for the respective years from the sale of public lands from 1881 to 1897:

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1881	$5,408,000	1890	$7,470,000
1882	8,394,000	1891	5,105,000
1883	11,088,000	1892	4,387,000
1884	11,840,000	1893	4,479,000
1885	7,486,000	1894	2,674,000
1886	7,412,000	1895	1,866,000
1887	10,783,000	1896	1,847,000
1888	12,701,000	1897	1,596,000
1889	9,270,000

I am gratified, Mr. Chairman, at the sentiment displayed by the House to-day in the discussion of the pending measure. Its membership has risen above partisanship and has been willing to treat the questions involved fairly and upon their merits. We mean to ask only for justice and for fair treatment to the settlers upon the reservations in question. Let us repudiate the mistaken and unjust policy inaugurated in 1890 and go back to the original law of 1862, and why should we not do so? A law that brought such blessings, such happiness, such development into the great West. It is idle for me to discuss the beneficent provisions of that law, not only to the West, and to the marvelous growth and development it brought to that region and the great wealth it produced which has flowed into the lap of the East and of every section of this country to make it strong and powerful and great.

The census of 1890 shows the public-land States and Territories to have a population and wealth, real and personal, as follows:

State or Territory.	Population.	Wealth.
Michigan	2,093,889	$2,095,016,272
Wisconsin	1,686,880	1,833,308,523

North Dakota	182,719	237,006,506
South Dakota	328,808	425,141,299

Indian Territory		150,765,462
Florida	391,422	389,489,588

California	1,208,130	2,533,733,627
Total	21,198,000	23,583,339,104

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to go back to first principles and reinaugurate the policy that wrought such marvelous results. We ought to repeal the vicious and unfair policy adopted in 1890. Many of the reservations are situated in the semiarid regions of the West. Prior to the settlement upon these reservations practically all the desirable lands had been occupied, and the settler was obliged, if a home was to be secured, to assume the risk of settling upon these reservations under the adverse conditions imposed by the Government. Under the old law settlement and cultivation were deemed a sufficient consideration, but under the law of 1890 there was added the additional burden of payment. The acts of Congress, repeatedly passed, extending the time of payment is a sufficient warrant to assert that this provision was unfair and that the settler was unable to meet the hardships of the situation.

Why should not the poor settlers who have gone upon these reservations, made their homes there and occupied and improved them, be placed on an equality with the settlers in Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and in the balance of my own State, where they received their lands from the Government, under the law of 1862, without money and without price?

I have here a map prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing the allotments upon the Sisseton Reservation in my State. This map makes substantially the same showing as that made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN]. The brown shading on the diagram shows the allotments taken by the Indians. All the better lands were appropriated by them. The undesirable lands were left for the settlers who might go there. These allotments taken by the Indians are exempted from taxation for a period of twenty-five years. The settlers who go on the reservation must make their selections from the remaining portions of these lands, and are obliged to bear all the burdens of local taxation. It is incumbent on them to build schoolhouses and support and maintain schools, to build highways and bridges, to build court-houses and jails, and maintain all the expenses of local government. The Indians assume none of these burdens and pay nothing in their support.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, the obligations of the Government are such that the Indians are its wards. All these burdens ought not to be imposed upon the poor settler, the Government relieving itself practically from any obligation. If the settler assumes these responsibilities in behalf of the Government in carrying out its policy toward the Indians, it at least should not insist upon payment for the land in addition to the exacting burdens of the settler.

I might make the same statement, substantially, in regard to the Yankton Reservation, in my own State. What I have said as to the Sisseton is still further accentuated in the case of the Great Sioux Reservation. I submit the following communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the information it affords as to the condition on these reservations, respectively:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 17, 1900, requesting the following information relative to what was formerly the Great Sioux Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, which was opened to settlement under proclamation of the President on February 10, 1890:

1. The number of acres in the reservation opened to settlement.
2. The number of filings that have been made thereon by settlers. In this I would not care to have included, if the record will show, where filings have been made more than once upon the same tract.
3. The number of filings canceled.
4. The number of cancellations recommended, or pending and undisposed of.
5. The number of final proofs made and paid for. Under this head would be pleased to have disclosed, if the record shows, the number of final proofs made at $1.25 per acre, at 75 cents, and at 50 cents per acre.
6. The total amount of money paid into the Treasury on account of final proofs made.
7. How often Congress has extended the time for making final proof and payment to the settlers on this reservation.
8. The number of filings uncanceled or recommended for cancellation, and how soon the same will have completed their term of residence and be ready for proof.

You state that you would also be pleased to receive the same information as above indicated separately as to the Sisseton and Wahpeton and the Yankton reservations, both in the State of South Dakota, and that you also desire a map indicating the tracts filed upon and now occupied in each of said reservations. You state that you desire the information for use before the Committee on Public Lands.

In reply I have to advise you as follows:

GREAT SIOUX RESERVATION.

1. There were 8,550,938 acres in said reservation opened to settlement and entry under section 21, act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 888). This includes lands in the States of South Dakota, North Dakota, and Nebraska. The figures are not kept separately by States in this office.
2. There have been 4,633 homestead entries made for lands in the Great Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. In order to eliminate the number of plural entries for the same tract of land, an examination of all the tract books for these lands would be required, which it is impracticable to make.
3. The number of these entries canceled, 1,607.
4. About 125 entries are pending on reports recommending cancellation.
5. Number of cases in which final proof and payment have been made, 545. It can not be ascertained, except by considerable labor, the price paid per acre in these cases.
6. Total amount paid into Treasury to December 31, 1899, $98,910.43.

Under section 2291, Revised Statutes, a homestead entryman was required to submit final proof within seven years from date of his entry; the act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 123), extended this time for one year in all cases where the entry was existing at the date of said act. The acts of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 342), and June 7, 1897 (30 Stat., 87), each extended for one year the time within which to make the required payments by entrymen of ceded Indian lands, and as proof and payment must be made at the same time, an extension of time for making payment involves a corresponding time within which to make final proof. In addition the act of February 26, 1896 (29 Stat., 16), extended for one year the time for making final proof and payment for all lands located under the homestead laws in any former Indian reservation in South Dakota. A party who made a homestead entry of ceded Indian land in South Dakota prior to July 26, 1894, is allowed eleven years from date of entry within which to submit proof and make payment.

7. The number of entries, on which proof and payment have not been made, or which have not been canceled, or reported for cancellation, is 2,356. This office is unable to advise you how soon the entrymen will have completed their term of residence and be ready for proof.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON LANDS.

1. Opened to settlement under act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1039), 573,882 acres, in North and South Dakota, of which it is estimated about 57,000 are located in North Dakota.
2. Total number of entries made in said reservation to January 1, 1898, 4,481. This includes entries for lands in both North and South Dakota, but the most of them are for lands in South Dakota. The moneys derived from the sale of these lands goes to reimburse the Government for moneys paid the Indians, and the series of entries is the same as other public lands. To ascertain the number of entries to date, exclusive of plural entries for the same tract, would require a careful examination of the tract books for all these lands, which would involve considerable labor and time.
3. For the same reason as stated under 2, it is impracticable to give the number of canceled entries.
4. Few of these entries are pending on reports recommending cancellation. I am unable to give you more definite information.
5. Number of entries on which proof and payment have been made to September 30, 1899, 183.
6. Total amount paid into Treasury to September 30, 1899, $55,961.34.
7. See answer to No. 7 under Great Sioux lands.
8. It is impracticable to give figures showing uncanceled entries, or entries not recommended for cancellation.

YANKTON SIOUX LANDS.

1. Number of acres thrown open to settlement under act of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat., 314), 151,692.
2. Number of entries to September 30, 1899, 1,240. It is impracticable, for reasons given above under No. 2, Sisseton and Wahpeton lands, to eliminate the number of plural entries for the same land.
3. The moneys derived from the sale of these lands are for the purpose of reimbursing the Government for moneys paid the Indians. The lands are entered under the public-land series, and the number of canceled entries can not be ascertained except by a careful examination of the tract books.
4. Definite information can not be given, but few of these entries are pending for cancellation.
5. Number of entries on which proof and payment have been made up to September 30, 1899, 98.
6. Amount paid into Treasury to September 30, 1899, $112,161.45.
7. See answer to No. 7 under Great Sioux Reservation.
8. For reasons given above, definite information as to uncanceled entries can not be given.

This office does not have maps showing the lands in said reservations which are appropriated. To prepare such maps would require the expenditure of a vast amount of time and labor, which would greatly retard the public business.

Very respectfully, BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

Hon. ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
House of Representatives.

It is urged in the report submitted by the Interior Department that if this bill should pass there will be a relinquishment to the Government on the Great Sioux Reservation of something more than $4,000,000. According to the communication just submitted from the Commissioner, only 5 per cent of those lands have been settled upon, although they have been open to settlement for more than ten years.

The Government in 1889 entered into a treaty with the Sioux Nation of Indians, agreeing through the settlers to pay the Indians $1.25 an acre for all lands settled upon within three years from the taking effect of the act, 75 cents per acre for those lands taken up in the two years following, and 50 cents an acre for those taken up during the five years succeeding. At the expiration of ten years the Government was to pay the Indians 50 cents per acre for all the lands undisposed of. The foregoing treaty and act of Congress were made operative by proclamation of the President on the 10th of February, 1890.

The Government now owes the Sioux Indians something like $4,000,000 for that part of the reservation undisposed of. But, Mr. Chairman, although this reservation has been opened for ten years, a very limited amount of the lands has been taken under the onerous burdens imposed. The land is largely of such a character that settlement and occupation under the statute of 1862 ought to be sufficient to entitle the settler to the land instead of compelling him in addition to pay $1.25, or 75 cents, or 50 cents an acre.

The Great Sioux Reservation contains 8,550,938 acres. It was opened to settlement February 10, 1890. From the foregoing report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, only 4,633 entries have been made. Of these, 1,607 have been canceled, and 125 additional have been recommended for cancellation, leaving practically 2,901 in force, or upon which final proof has been made.

Final proof has been made on 545 entries, representing 87,200 acres. Number of entries in force, 2,356, representing 376,960 acres. Total acres on entries in force or upon which final proof has been made, 464,160.

It will thus be seen that only 5 per cent of the lands upon the reservation has been filed upon, leaving 8,086,778 acres for which the Government must settle with the Indians at 50 cents per acre, Practically only 1 per cent of the reservation has been paid for. The total amount paid into the Treasury from lands upon which final proof has been made is $98,910.43. The amount of land filed upon and upon which final proof has not been made, if paid for at 50 cents per acre, would amount to $188,480.

The reservation having been open to settlement for ten years, I assume few additional entries would be made under existing conditions. Computing the amount due upon the filings still in force at $188,480, and deducting from this sum the amount already received by the Government, $98,910.43, the passage of the pending measure would only mean a direct loss to the Treasury of $89,569.57. The facts as they actually exist on this particular reservation stand in striking contrast to the table prepared in the report submitted by the Interior Department, in which it is claimed the loss to the Government would be $4,616,140.

The same condition exists on the Sisseton Reservation, though not to such an exaggerated extent as on the Great Sioux. This reservation was opened to settlement March 3, 1891, at $2.50 per acre. It embraces 573,882 acres. I am informed there are 28,000 acres upon which no filings have been made. The report shows there have been 4,481 filings, representing 160 acres in each tract. Unless filings have been duplicated upon the same tracts, there could not have been exceeding 3,412. This would indicate there was nearly one-third of this reservation either unoccupied or upon which the filings since the opening of the reservation had been canceled and other filings made upon the same tracts. The amount paid upon final proof on this reservation is $65,961.37.

The Yankton Reservation contains 151,692. It was opened to settlement August 15, 1894, at $3.75 per acre. It is reported to me there are about 25,000 acres upon this reservation upon which no filings have been made. The report of the Commissioner shows there have been 1,240 filings made at the Land Office. Unless filings were duplicated upon the same tracts, there could not have been made more than 792. This would show that upward of 50 per cent of this reservation had not been occupied or was subject to changing occupants upon the same tracts. The amount paid into the Treasury by the settlers upon this reservation is $112,161.45.

In the report made by the Interior Department, opposing this measure, it is claimed the loss to the Government on the reservations in South Dakota in case the bill passed would be as follows:

Great Sioux Reservation	$4,616,140
Sisseton Reservation	1,400,000
Yankton Reservation	500,300
Total	6,516,440

Under the facts, however, as they actually exist, the loss to the Government, as shown by the foregoing report, would be much less. I submit the following statement, and I believe it is eminently fair and gives full credit for all lands on the Sisseton and Yankton reservations:

Great Sioux Reservation		$80,509.57
Sisseton Reservation	$1,400,000.00
Less amount already paid	66,000.00
		1,334,000.00
Yankton Reservation	500,300.00
Less amount already paid	112,160.00
		338,140.00
Total		1,761,709.00

I am free to state there is much interest in my own State in the passage of the pending measure. We believe it is just, fair, and equitable. We insist that the settlers upon these reservations be placed on an equality with their neighbors in my own and adjoining States. The Government never before insisted upon the settlers paying the amount required to extinguish the Indian title. The Government has made large outlays in the purchase of lands and in the administration of its Land Department. As an investment simply the Government has been the loser. Whether the Government paid much or little, the principle is the same. Mr. LACEY, in his valuable report on substantially the same bill, then pending in the Fifty-fourth Congress, makes the following statement:

The entire public domain up to 1880 had cost $88,157,389.98, or 4.7 cents per acre.

Up to 1880 the Government had sold or disposed of land to the amount in value of $300,702,849.11. This included extensive grants to the new States for school and other purposes. The average amount realized per acre, including these grants for public purposes, was 36⅞ cents.

After charging up all the expenses of surveys, Indians, cost of administration, etc., the Government, on June 30, 1880, lacked $121,346,746.85 of having been fully reimbursed; its total outlays up to that time being $322,049,595.96.

The total actual cost, after adding those expenses, was 17¼ cents per acre.

As indicating the interest of the people of my State, I submit the following memorial, passed by the legislature at its session in 1899:

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of a free-homestead law.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), The legislature of the State of South Dakota respectfully and earnestly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact a law granting to all settlers, under the homestead laws of the United States, upon the public lands acquired by treaty or agreement from any of the Indian tribes, who have or shall hereafter reside upon the same in good faith for the period required by existing law, a patent for the same, upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fees, and without any other charge or payment whatsoever.

We believe the proposed legislation to be wise, just, and equitable, not only to the settlers, the sections immediately interested, but also to the nation at large. It is the concurrent judgment of the several political parties as expressed in their last national platforms. No good or sufficient reason has been shown why the pronounced policy of the Government for more than a generation should be reversed and an excessive hardship and burden imposed upon the later settlers.

The greater portion of our national domain was purchased at varying prices by the General Government, and the lands made largely subject to the homestead law; great States and Territories were speedily peopled and marvelously developed under its munificent influence and inspiration. A policy that added so extensively to the development of so vast a region should not be abandoned without substantial reasons. The result, both in population and in the accumulation of such vast wealth, in the regions benefited is a constant source of strength and revenue to the whole nation.

The settlers upon these lands are entitled to the same consideration that the Government has shown to all its other settlers upon the public domain. There is no just reason why the law should place a mortgage upon these particular lands sufficient to reimburse the Government for its outlay in extinguishing the Indian title.

If this is the correct and just policy, then the original homestead law can not be justified, for the Government was compelled to pay, more or less, for all its public domain. Neither can the existing law be justified upon the ground that the relinquishment of the payment of the price required by the settlers would involve a loss to the Government. As an investor in land, considered solely for the immediate money return, the nation has always been a loser. In the year 1880 it lacked upward of $120,000,000 of being reimbursed for its outlays on the public lands and their management and disposition.

The Indians are the wards of the Government. It can not renounce its obligations toward them. It is unjust to transpose this duty by law and fix it largely upon the unfortunate settler and compel him to pay for that which has heretofore been taken from the General Treasury. The settler without payment for the land, is called upon to bear unnatural burdens and to assume unusual responsibilities. The most desirable lands on these reservations were selected and awarded to the Indians under their allotments. The settlers, in most cases, were obliged to take undesirable tracts and are compelled to mingle with this foreign and largely helpless race. Local conditions in many of these new localities are crude, and all the machinery of the community must be put into operation. The settlers are forced largely to assume the responsibility in behalf of the Government as its civilizing agents. It is incumbent upon them to organize the local governments and bear practically all its burdens.

The lands allotted to the Indians are made absolutely exempt from taxation for a period of twenty-five years. The Indians, by act of the Government, are admitted to full citizenship, and they exercise this right without sharing practically any responsibility whatever. Highways are to be laid out, bridges constructed, schoolhouses erected, the schools maintained, outlays for county buildings have to be made, courts maintained, and court and county officers paid, with all the necessary adjuncts of a proper and safely regulated community. To bear these responsibilities in behalf of the Indians, who are alone the especial wards of the Government, would be far more than sufficient to compensate the United States for the free gift of the lands.

These responsibilities must necessarily be assumed by the settler if the Indian is to be made a safe and reliable citizen of the community and State. Some consideration should be shown by the Government to the hardy pioneers who have and now are undergoing great privations in the developing and upbuilding of the newer regions and cooperating and aiding in the solution of the Indian problem. The free gift of a homestead is but a pittance in return for the service that is directly rendered by the settlers to the General Government.

That the Secretary of State is authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the President of the Senate.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

In addition to what I have already stated, I might further add that the people of South Dakota do not feel they were fairly treated by Congress in relation to the admission of the State into the Union. I suggest this as a matter for equitable consideration in the discussion of the pending measure as applied to the reservations within South Dakota. They feel they met all the conditions relative to admission at least nine years before they were permitted to exercise the powers of a sovereign State. They repeatedly petitioned for admission, but without moving Congress to action. The census of 1880 shows that part of the territory of Dakota now embraced within the limits of South Dakota had 98,288 population. Many of the States were admitted with a much less population. Of right she was entitled to admission. It was, however, denied her, and she was not admitted until November 2, 1889.

During these years the larger part of the public lands within the prospective State was disposed of by the Federal Government. Had the State been admitted, 5 per cent of the amount of the moneys so received would have been paid to the State. By denying the State admission this large sum was lost to her treasury. The amount received from the sale of public lands in the Territory of Dakota, within the limits of the State of South Dakota, from July 1, 1879, to November 1, 1889, was $10,258,237.26. Five per cent of this sum would have given the State $512,911.86. Whether the State will ever be able to secure this sum is problematical.

Although justly and equitably entitled to the money, it will require great patience and labor to secure legislation to that purpose. Although the State has been admitted to the Union for more than ten years, the amount received from the sale of public lands within the State from November 2, 1889, to June 30, 1899, is only $1,114,603.70. Where the State is entitled to 5 per cent on the foregoing sum, amounting to $55,730.18, she ought to have received $568,000.

I submit a communication and statements from the Commissioner of the General Land Office in support of the foregoing figures:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1900.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 8, 1900.

Mr. Chairman, I would not rest the claims of the pending measure upon any question of sectionalism. It is but fair, however, to call attention to the act of Congress of June 23, 1836, entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of public money." This act has never been repealed. I quote two sections from the law, as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the money which shall be in the Treasury of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1837, reserving the sum of $5,000,000, shall be deposited with such of the several States, in proportion to their respective representation in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, as shall, by law, authorize their treasurers or other competent authorities to receive the same on the terms hereinafter specified; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers, or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposit therefor, signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid; which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pledge the faith of the State for the safe keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid, on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States agreeing to accept the same on deposit in the proportion aforesaid: And provided further, That when said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said Secretary to meet appropriations by law, the same shall be called for, in ratable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for, in sums exceeding $10,000 from any one State, in any one month, without previous notice of thirty days for every additional sum of $30,000, which may at any time be required.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the said deposits shall be made with the said States in the following proportions, and at the following times, to wit: One-quarter part on the 1st day of January, 1837, or as soon thereafter as may be; one-quarter part on the 1st day of April; one-quarter part on the 1st day of July, and one-quarter part on the 1st day of October, all in the same year.

Under this act money was deposited by the United States with the respective States as follows:

State.	Amount.	State.	Amount.
Maine	$955,838.25	Maryland	$955,838.25
New Hampshire	669,086.79	Virginia	2,198,427.99
Vermont	669,086.79	North Carolina	1,433,757.39
Massachusetts	1,338,173.58	South Carolina	1,051,422.09
Connecticut	764,670.60	Georgia	1,051,422.09
Rhode Island	382,335.30	Alabama	669,086.79
New York	4,014,520.71	Louisiana	477,919.14
Pennsylvania	2,867,514.78	Mississippi	382,335.30
New Jersey	764,670.60	Tennessee	1,433,757.39
Ohio	2,007,260.34	Kentucky	1,433,757.39
Indiana	860,254.44	Missouri	382,335.30
Illinois	477,919.14	Arkansas	286,751.49
Michigan	286,751.49
Delaware	286,751.49	Total	28,101,644.91

From this table it will be seen that there was distributed among the 17 nonpublic land States therein named the sum of $22,271,041.48, as follows:

State.	Amount.	State.	Amount.
1. Maine	$955,838.25	11. Maryland	$955,838.25
2. New Hampshire	669,086.79	12. Virginia	2,198,427.99
3. Vermont	669,086.79	13. North Carolina	1,433,757.39
4. Massachusetts	1,338,173.58	14. South Carolina	1,051,422.09
5. Connecticut	764,670.60	15. Georgia	1,051,422.09
6. Rhode Island	382,335.30	16. Tennessee	1,433,757.39
7. New York	4,014,520.71	17. Kentucky	1,433,757.39
8. Pennsylvania	2,867,514.78
9. New Jersey	764,670.60	Total	22,271,041.48
10. Delaware	286,751.49

This money was largely, if not wholly, derived from the sale of public lands. It certainly is a subject for just consideration in a discussion of the pending bill. Computed on the basis of 4 per cent, this loan to the respective States would now amount to the vast sum of $101,041,000. The State of New York would stand indebted in the sum of $14,290,000; Pennsylvania, $10,208,000; Massachusetts, $4,763,000; Virginia, $7,826,000; Ohio, $7,145,000; North Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky, each $5,104,000, and the balance of the States in the same proportion to the amounts originally donated.

Although the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized under the act to call upon the respective States to refund the original amounts to the Federal Treasury, it is not presumed any such action will ever be considered It was intended as a donation when the bill was enacted. Representatives of the States that have been thus highly favored by the generous action of the Government certainly should see to it that the claims of these younger communities should receive just, fair, and equitable treatment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to trespass too much upon the patience of the House. If I had the time, I might take up the items in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, wherein it is claimed, in case this bill passes, the Government will suffer a loss of $35,000,000. The claim is a gross exaggeration. That report is based upon the proposition that all these lands are desirable and will be settled upon and paid for. The fact is, however, substantially the same conditions exist in the other reservations as I have stated exist in the Great Sioux Reservation. Only a limited amount of land on many of the reservations has been taken, although they have been open to settlement for many years.

The trust feature of certain reservations mentioned in the report is largely eliminated owing to the lapse of time and the changed conditions since the report of the Interior Department was submitted.

From a careful computation upon existing conditions in these reservations I am satisfied the loss to the Government will not reach the sum claimed by the Interior Department and will not exceed from $10,000,000 to $11,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this question has been thoroughly discussed, is well understood, and the merits of the measure admitted. I believe it is the judgment of the members of this House, no matter to which political party they may belong, that as American citizens we should rise above questions of partisanship and vote for the American home. Let us reaffirm the principle of "free homes" and restore the original law so ably championed by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW]. [Applause.]

Nicaraguan Canal—Hay-Pauncefote Treaty.

OF
HON. WILLIAM H. RYAN,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 1, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. RYAN of New York said;

Mr. CHAIRMAN: When the debate opened on this bill I had about made up my mind to sit and listen—to be a student, as it were—while the members who have traversed the various routes, literally back and forth, proposed for an isthmian canal, gave to the House the information they have and the knowledge they have acquired on this subject. I was willing to be taught, Mr. Chairman; but when that teaching would have me believe that this Government can not build the canal on its own responsibility; when I am asked to be convinced that we must first secure consent from a foreign power, then I am not willing to accept the teachings of my colleagues, and I want to say that I believe the American people will demand—if we are to have a canal at all—that it be built, owned, and controlled by the United States Government, without considering the whims and desires of Great Britain or any other country in its construction.

I feel that we are united on the proposition that the canal must be built. There are some who maintain that the present time is not opportune and that we should wait until we have all the facts from the latest commission. Assuming we do wait, what assurance has the House that we would not be asked to appoint another commission to secure new facts, make new surveys, refurbish the report of its predecessor and so shape matters as to leave an avenue for the appointment of a successor? Every year's delay puts us back a step in the progress of time. Every moment's delay is a loss to American commerce and to American shipping. All the eminent commissioners of the numerous commissions which have investigated the subject, all the learned and experienced engineers who have surveyed the ground, unite in declaring that the project is perfectly feasible. Naval experts say that it will increase our preparations for defense one hundredfold.

Every American citizen who swears by the American eagle is convinced that the construction of the canal would be one of the greatest benefits that could come to a progressive country like ours, and every American citizen expects this canal for ourselves, except wherein we can grant its privileges without detriment to our own interests. What further need has Congress for direction in this matter? The details of construction are an after consideration, which, while holding our attention and consideration in the formation of the plans, must largely be mapped out as time and circumstances surrounding will dictate. We can not design the exact course of the canal; we can lay its course in a general way. We can not say it must equally divide this or that section of the country; we can say it must be near that section. We can say, Mr. Chairman, that we are going to build this canal, just as our forefathers said, "This country is and of right should be free." We can say we are going to build this canal and control it, and fortify it, and defend it, and protect our commerce by it, and we do not care whether Great Britain or any other foreign country likes it or not. We are catering to no one but ourselves.

A gentleman who preceded me on the floor quoted a portion of the language of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. He deprecated and condemned the language, and I like his sentiment. His quotation is as follows:

> It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States.

In what crucible of God or man was Great Britain made the guardian of our action? By what right does that country say "we may" construct this canal? Better by far, one hundred times, that no canal be built if conditions have so changed that we must ask the consent of a foreign power before we can proceed.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of important considerations in this question. One is the Monroe doctrine; another is the source to which the benefits of this canal will accrue. As no other government is willing to spend a dollar in the construction of the canal, and as, therefore, the money to build it must come from the labor of this country, the benefits to be derived from the canal must likewise be the reward of this labor.

I do not wish to say which route I believe the more practical or the cheaper. While I have studied the question, I do not feel that my knowledge is sufficient to say that we should vote to finish the Panama Canal or to build the Nicaragua Canal. I do wish to go on record, however, to the effect that I believe we should not assume in the outset the liabilities, the obstructions, and the losses of a private enterprise. Either route, I feel, would be of marvelous benefit to the country; and, with reports from men of science, it is not necessary that I take up the time of the House hashing and rehashing their opinions and scientific researches, demonstrating the absolute necessity of this canal in order to put American shipping on the same or nearly equal footing with the boats of other countries. I do not wish to say that the commerce of this country and our products will all be carried in American bottoms, but it will give an impetuous character to our shipping that will make us a hardy and willing rival to any country on God's green earth.

Nicaragua is peculiarly situated for this improvement in shipping. Admitting that we were to allow foreign boats to use it on the same equal terms as our own, the American vessel would still have a great advantage in distance. The canal would save that great rail haul from the Pacific to the Atlantic seaboards. California would be a strong competitor with Spain for the premiership of wine-producing centers of the world. Our internal commerce would be magnified and expanded to an extent that no other improvement could give us. We would have an advantage in China and Japan that would almost repay us for the cost of building the canal, to say nothing of the increase of commerce with the other countries of the Far East. The water shipments of the Pacific side of South America would come to us and ours would go to them. It would bind our commerce with those countries in an inseparable tie.

Let me quote to you the figures presented by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department relative to our trade with the countries of the lower Americas and the countries of the East. I desire to show that American bottoms carry but a scant portion of this trade. I contend that the canal would reverse this order of things and undoubtedly give us a majority.

In the year 1899 we imported from Argentina $5,112,561. We exported to that country $9,563,510. We imported from Brazil $57,875,747, and exported to Brazil only $12,239,036. We imported from Chile $2,942,962, while we exported to Chile $2,107,124. We imported from Colombia $5,126,731, while we exported to Colombia only $3,042,004. We imported from Ecuador $1,054,653, and exported only $882,591. We imported from Peru $1,496,978, and exported to Peru $1,325,650. We imported from Uruguay $1,281,109, and exported to Uruguay $1,242,822. We imported from Venezuela $6,507,847; we exported to Venezuela $2,851,634. We imported from South America altogether $86,587,893.

We imported from Costa Rica $3,581,899, and exported to Costa Rica $1,240,950. We imported from Guatemala $2,111,264; we exported to Guatemala $1,102,963. We imported from Honduras $911,849; we exported to Honduras $832,016. We imported from Nicaragua $1,514,630; we exported to Nicaragua $1,186,511. We imported from Salvador $1,085,703; we exported to Salvador $625,414.

In Asia it was no different. We imported from Aden $1,924,941, and exported to Aden $993,741. We imported from China $18,619,268, and exported to China $14,493,440. We imported from the British East Indies $32,560,312, and exported to the British

East Indies $4,341,996. We imported from the Dutch East Indies $21,313,945; we exported to the Dutch East Indies $1,548,973. We imported from Japan $26,716,814, and exported to Japan $17,264,688. We imported from the total of Asia $107,091,214, and only exported to Asia $48,360,161.

With the building of this canal the dangerous trips around the Horn will cease. It will mean the obliterating of 10,000 miles of ocean transportation, and each man may figure for himself the saving in the cost of transportation.

As to the amendment proposed that we insert the words "fortify and defend," I wish to say that I am heartily in accord with this amendment. The gentleman from Iowa states that there is embodied in the word "protect" all authority for defense. I know that the American people will always defend and protect their own, but I see no reason why the House should not so state in this bill and thus cut off any opportunity for international disputes.

I am opposed to giving to Great Britain the slightest ground on which to cry "international agreement," or "international courtesy." I particularize Great Britain in this instance, because that country has for years been trying to force herself into a partnership in the rewards of this canal, yet, has she ever made a move to indicate that she was willing to bear the brunt of the expense of its construction? Has Great Britain ever offered to contribute one cent toward its construction? I think not. Why, then, should we consider her interest in this project?

Mr. Chairman, we must be equal gainers by this canal in times of war as in times of peace. Our naval experts tell us that we need have no fear of invasion in case we have the canal. All members of the House are indeed familiar with the trip of that gallant battle ship the Oregon. We are likewise in ready memory regarding the anxiety that overspread the country when it was known that Admiral Cervera's fleet was headed from Spain toward our coast. Dewey was at Manila; Schley and Sampson were off the southern reefs dodging about. The Oregon was on her long trip around the Horn. No one knew where Cervera was. We did not know where he was headed. The good people of Boston town sought the storm cellars o' nights fearing that dynamite bombs was to be their greeting in the morning.

Reports came from our Pacific coasts declaring that the Spanish fleet had been seen off the entrance to the Golden Gate. Another report would startle another section of the country, and well it might. The Pacific coast was bare. Our fleets were in Southern waters. Neither Sampson nor Schley nor Watson could have reached there in less than a month's time. The people had cause to be startled. Would they have shown this anxiety had the canal been constructed? Mr. Chairman, we could have put a fleet on the Pacific coast in a few days and could have brought it back in an equal length of time. With a fortified canal we would be able to defend our coast against the combined forces of the other continent.

But we are told, Mr. Chairman, that we must not fortify the canal. We are confronted with the statement that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is still in force. This treaty is condemned by the people from the Lake of the Woods to the Tropics, from Maine to California, and from the Klondike to the colony of Porto Rico. There has been a shrewd though somewhat transparent effort on the part of the friends of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which has been prepared to supersede this defunct and entombed arrangement of Clayton and Bulwer, to have it appear that the opponents of the treaty are also the opponents of the canal.

We must repudiate the new treaty just as the country has repudiated the old; and I trust that the members in the upper branch of Congress will spurn that agreement entered into by our Secretary of State and Great Britain's diplomatic representative. We are not to build an international canal, and we want no international alliances. I admit that men will claim and have claimed and are claiming that we should construct an international canal; but I want to ask them, as they have undoubtedly asked themselves, by what authority and under what clause of the Constitution do they intend to draw from the United States Treasury the money to construct an international canal? Would they have this Government bear the full burden of expense for the construction of a waterway for the benefit, equal with ours, of all foreign powers? Would they have us build a canal neutral in war and in peace by a specific agreement which we could not break, even were we so inclined, without arraying all Europe against us? No, Mr. Chairman, that treaty should be defeated, absolutely and without reservation.

Mr. Chairman, let us refer to the eighth section of Article I of the Constitution, which says:

> The Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is contended on the floor of this House and elsewhere—and contended with absolute common sense and good judgment, I believe—that in the event of war, the canal, bound hand and foot by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, would be our undoing. To build it under this agreement would not be providing for our defense, but would be our weakness. It would not be expending the people's money for our general welfare, but rather in the interest of foreign powers. England, Germany, Russia, France, all would be entitled to the same privileges of the canal as we would enjoy, and it would give to them a vast advantage. Great Britain could use it to strike in the East and to attack our Pacific coast.

She would save the distance around the Horn, just as we would. That country has now a powerful military station on the island of Santa Lucia, off the entrance to the canal. She has other strategic points from which to operate against us. Our plain duty, Mr. Chairman, in view of these facts, is to cut off all idea of an international canal. Why this secret parleying and snobbery with Great Britain anyway? Can not we be fair to that country without putting on the bells and bowing before the throne? Will American citizenship allow any foreign power to tell us that we may build this canal, providing we grant it or them the privileges of the same in time of war? I charge the Administration with nothing but blunders in this regard.

Mr. Chairman, the United States has suffered enough through treaty enactions. Darkest among these is the infamous Clayton-Bulwer agreement, which produced nothing but discord and inharmonious relations, and was a source of annoyance until Great Britain by her perfidy abrogated its bindings. Each nation put a different construction on that agreement. England would have it bind this country and herself go unleashed. International law is at its best but a flimsy guidance, and I appeal to the members of the House to weigh well these facts in acting upon this measure. We can not reiterate too strongly nor too often our determination to construct this a canal for the people of the United States, for their benefit, for their protection, and for their advancement, both commercially and from the standpoint of war.

I ask the attention of the House while I quote here a few excerpts from letters of James G. Blaine and other able statesmen of his time. First I will read the preamble and first article of the treaty, which run as follows:

> Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America, being desirous of consolidating the relations of amity which so happily subsist between them, by setting forth and fixing in a convention their views and intentions with reference to any means of communication by ship canal, which may be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by the way of the river St. Juan de Nicaragua, and either or both of the lakes of Nicaragua or Managua, to any port or place on the Pacific Ocean. * * *
> ART. I. The Governments of Great Britain and the United States hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same, or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords, or may afford, or any alliance which either has, or may have, to or with any state or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same. Nor will Great Britain or the United States take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any state or government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the subjects or citizens of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered, on the same terms, to the subjects or citizens of the other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to show how ill advised and how much regretted was the signing of that treaty. The words of General Cass, then Secretary of State, stand out emblazoned before us as a guide that the country may not fall into the same trap. General Cass says, in a letter to Her Majesty's representative:

> The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, concluded in the hope that it would put an end to the differences which had arisen between the United States and Great Britain concerning Central American affairs, had been rendered inoperative in some of its most essential provisions by the different constructions which had been reciprocally given to it by the parties. And little is hazarded in saying that, had the interpretation since put upon the treaty by the British Government, and yet maintained, been anticipated, it would not have been negotiated under the instructions of any Executive of the United States, nor ratified by the branch of the Government intrusted with the power of ratification.

In a letter James G. Blaine quotes President Buchanan as follows:

> If the Senate had imagined that it could obtain the interpretation placed upon it by Great Britain, it would not have passed. If he had been in the Senate at the time, that treaty never would have been sanctioned.
> With reference to arbitration (which Lord Napier had only thrown in as a suggestion of his own), he could not give any opinion at present. The President also inveighed against the excess of treaties, affirming that they were more frequently the cause of quarrel than of harmony, and that if it were not for the interoceanic communications he did not see there was any necessity for a treaty respecting Central America at all.

In communication with Lord Napier, General Cass, on October 20, 1857, inserted this clause in a letter:

> I have thus endeavored to meet the frank suggestions of your lordship by restating with corresponding frankness the general policy of the United States with respect to the Governments and the interoceanic transits of Central America. But since your lordship has referred to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 as contemplating a harmonious course of action and counsel between the contracting parties in the settlement of Central American interests, you will pardon me for reminding your lordship that the differences which this treaty was intended to adjust between the United States and Great Britain still remain unsettled, while the treaty itself has become the subject of new and embarrassing complications.

In view of these facts, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the division of Congress which has the power and duty of ratification, will vote to bring into existence, in connection with the construction of the canal, another treaty which will not alone confirm the "gold-brick" provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer arrangement but will bring to us a multiplicity of evils in addition.

Because this is so, Mr. Chairman, is no argument that we should not construct the canal. It simply demonstrates that we must avoid the rapids of entangling alliances and reassert our independence and our ability to push this work on our own responsibility, come what will.

Look at the chart I here present and view another reason why we should build the canal for the United States alone. Compare the distance between New York and Liverpool by the present route and the distance when the canal is completed:

	Horn.	Nicaragua.	Distance saved.	Advantage to New York.
	Miles.	Miles.	Miles.	Miles.
Liverpool to San Francisco	14,700	8,700	6,000
New York to San Francisco	14,800	5,600	9,200	3,100
Liverpool to Hawaii	14,000	9,100	4,900
New York to Hawaii	14,200	6,200	8,000	2,900
Liverpool to Yokohama	17,500	12,100	5,400
New York to Yokohama	17,600	9,100	8,500	3,000
Liverpool to Melbourne	13,300	12,700	600
New York to Melbourne	13,500	10,000	3,500	2,700
Liverpool to Valparaiso	9,600	7,400	2,200
New York to Valparaiso	9,700	4,600	5,100	2,800
Liverpool to Greytown		4,769
New York to Greytown		2,021

We can be dignified, yet reasonable and even magnanimous, after the canal is constructed, and permit foreign countries to enter and use it under toll for commercial purposes. We can do this, Mr. Chairman, but we can not, should not, and, if the sentiment of the nation is truly represented, will not allow a foreign power to say that we may construct it providing we "do not assume to ourselves any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the subjects of Great Britain." The question is not what Great Britain will permit us to do in this regard, but what we shall permit her to do. We are the dictators.

Just a word more, Mr. Chairman, and then I am done. That the people of my district at least may know of Administration blunders, I quote a portion of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty:

The high contracting parties, desiring to preserve and maintain the "general principle" of neutralization established in Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Convention, adopt as the basis of such neutralization, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention between Great Britain and certain other powers, signed at Constantinople, October 29, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Maritime Canal, that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open, in time of war as in time of peace, to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

3. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not revictual nor take any stores in the canal except so far as may be strictly necessary; and the transit of such vessels through the canal shall be effected with the least possibly delay, in accordance with the regulations in force, and with only such intermission as may result from the necessities of the service.

Prizes shall be in all respects subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerents.

4. No belligerents shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war or warlike materials in the canal except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

5. The provisions of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal, within three marine miles of either end. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than twenty-four hours at any one time except in case of distress, and in such case shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within twenty-four hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

6. The plant, establishments, buildings, and all works necessary to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal shall be deemed to be part thereof, for the purposes of this convention, and in time of war as in time of peace shall enjoy complete immunity from attack or injury by belligerents and from acts calculated to impair their usefulness as part of the canal.

7. No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

Mr. Chairman, there is magnanimity personified. A revival of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and for what? I charge no secret alliance, but there is circumstantial evidence of a toadyism to Great Britain on the part of the present Administration totally out of accord with our independent democratic institutions. Every nation has a mission. Our mission, Mr. Chairman, has ever been to defend and protect the oppressed. Our mission is and ever has been the mission of independence, and I believe we can never ally ourselves with a nation or a people whose chief aim is oppression. For this evidence of alliance with that unmotherly mother country, look to the South African republics now struggling for their very existence. The people of this country are not unmindful of the failure of their official representatives to declare for them that sympathy which it is our boasted mission to feel, and when necessary to demonstrate to the world.

The full truth of the matter is that the country is to-day asking itself for some clean-cut explanation of the Administration's apparent alliance with Great Britian in this war of devastation and spoliation upon the South African republics.

It is well to bear in mind that this country's is an impulsive, brave, and daring people. They burn incense to valor, humanity, and justice, but they condemn in unequivocal language unfairness, bad faith, and cruelty. They see in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty a chasm filled with shameful possibilities. They are watching the conduct of their official representatives in what they begin to suspect of being a dangerous and abominable tendency.

Let us have the canal, Mr. Chairman, by all means, but burn the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and consign its ashes to a foreign port.

The Nicaragua Canal.

OF
HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
OF ALABAMA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 2, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. UNDERWOOD said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: On former occasions I have taken advantage of the opportunities offered to me to express my views to the House as to why I was in favor of the Government of the United States constructing a canal from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean. I believe that my constituents thoroughly understand my position in this matter, but it is a question of so much importance to them and to the people of the United States that I feel that I would be derelict in my duty to the people that I represent should I allow the present opportunity to pass without again giving some of the reasons why I think that this bill should become a law.

Ever since I have been a member of the House of Representatives, for a period of nearly six years, bills for the construction of an isthmian canal have occupied a most extraordinary position. I have never known a day or an hour during that time when a personal poll of the House would not have found a majority of the members in favor of building the Nicaraguan Canal, but during all that time we were unable to secure a vote on such a bill, and to-day is the first opportunity I have had since I have been in Congress to directly cast a vote in favor of the proposition.

Although I believe that the bill will pass by a successful majority to-day, yet there is opposition to it—very serious, forcible, and dangerous opposition—as there has always been in the past, but it is not an opposition that will come out in the forefront of the battle and vote an open and manly vote. It is the same to-day as it has always been, concealed and hidden. It does not come out openly and say that the canal should not be built, or that it will not be to the interest of the people of the United States, but they fight by indirection, and contend, first, that we have not sufficiently investigated the question or surveyed the route; next, that the present is not an opportune time for the economical building of the canal, and third, that if we build the canal under this bill, it will be in violation of some of our treaty rights.

These are the arguments that have always been made against every bill that has ever been introduced, no matter how they have been changed and shaped and smoothed and pared to meet their views and satisfy the objections of those gentlemen who say that they want a canal, but always vote against it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there is any measure before Congress in which the whole people of the United States are more vitally interested, which would be of more benefit to the commerce of the country, which would bring more prosperity to the masses of the people, than the present measure. Both of the two great political parties have declared in favor of it in their national platforms. The press of the country, voicing the sentiments of their constituency, have emphatically indorsed the building of the canal, and I believe that the time has come when action should be taken and that this Congress should not adjourn until the measure has passed.

Let us consider for a few minutes, in detail, the objections that are made at present. First, they contend that we should have more light thrown on the question by surveys. For fifty years this Government has been considering the advisability of building this canal. We have had repeated surveys made by the Government and by private parties. We know accurately all the engineering difficulties to be encountered both as to the Nicaraguan route and the Panama route. But yet the gentlemen of the opposition insist that we should have more light and more information.

I do not pretend to have the information on this question that the Government engineers have, but I desire to state briefly a few facts showing the information that has been furnished us on this question.

The canal is to begin on the Atlantic side at the harbor of San Juan del Norte, near the mouth of the San Juan River, in the Caribbean Sea. The first 9 miles will require dredging through soft, alluvial sand to reach lock No. 1, where a low range of hills has to be pierced, and at this point the vessels must be raised 30 feet by locks and dams to enter the basin of Deseado, which is nothing but a series of submerged basins. Two more locks will be built that will raise the vessels to the level of Lake Nicaragua, a distance of a hundred and ten feet above the level of the sea. There are no new engineering problems to be encountered in the construction of these locks. They will be similar to the ones now in use on the Great Lakes and a great many of our rivers.

Beyond these locks a rocky spur of the Andes must be gone through for a distance of 3 miles to reach the San Francisco basin, which will be wide enough to admit the passage of vessels freely. Beyond this divide to Lake Nicaragua, a distance of 45 miles, there are 800,000,000 yards of dredging required, which, with modern dredging machinery, is in no wise a difficult engineering problem. The next work of importance will be the building of the Ochoa dam, which will hold the waters of San Juan River. This will require a wall 1,800 feet long and 70 feet high, which will raise the water of the river to a level with that of the lake, and will do away with a number of rapids now encountered in the river.

When Lake Nicaragua is reached, after traveling in slack water down the San Juan River for 65 miles, there will be comparatively little work to be done. This lake is a magnificent basin of fresh water, and is nearly one-third of the total length of the canal.

When the opposite shore is reached we will be but 17 miles from the Pacific Ocean. On this, the west side, a little river called the Lajas will be dammed up, and an artificial reservoir made in a natural depression of the mountains. Three more locks will be built between this point and Brito, the entrance of the canal from the Pacific terminus. No greater engineering difficulties will be encountered in the construction of these locks than in the construction of the locks at Deseado basin. At Brito large breakwaters of masonry will have to be constructed in order to afford an artificial harbor.

This is a brief statement of what is gathered from the engineer's reports that have been made. The cost of building this canal has been estimated at from sixty-five to two hundred million dollars, but the experts sent by this Government, who have lately surveyed the route, place the cost at $125,000,000.

Nowhere in the range of mountains reaching from the North Pole to Patagonia can we find another narrow depression where it will require a vessel to be raised only 110 feet to cross between the two oceans. It should also be remembered that the San Juan River reaches from Lake Nicaragua to the Atlantic, and is navigable for a ship of 500 tons burden to and across Lake Nicaragua to within 12 miles of the Pacific Ocean. The only necessity of additional work on this portion of the canal is to make it large enough to accommodate modern vessels of heavy tonnage. The reports show that there is suitable timber and stone along the route of the canal for its construction.

It is true that the economists who desire to postpone all action on this bill say that it would be better to build the canal across the Isthmus of Panama, but we have the survey of that route before us, and we know that the French Government and the French people have expended $4,000,000 on that route: and the lowest estimate is that it will cost $100,000,000 to complete the canal at that point by locks and dams. De Lesseps himself says that if the system of locks and dams is used, the Nicaragua Canal would offer the best route.

Besides, the Panama Canal would be in the calm belt and could not be used by sailing vessels, whereas the vessels going through the Nicaragua Canal would not encounter this difficulty.

As to the saving to the people of the United States in freight charges, the great railroad lines now running across the continent charge $24.80 per ton, whereas the freight by water through the canal, according to the best authorities, would be less than one-fourth of this cost per ton. The toll that the Suez Canal charges is $3 per ton, and there is no reason why the toll through the Nicaragua Canal should be more than this.

To express briefly the advantages to American commerce, it is only necessary to say that by the Nicaragua Canal, Melbourne, in Australia, will be 1,850 miles nearer to New York than Liverpool, while Japan by the same route will be 2,400 miles closer to Philadelphia than it will be to London.

What this will mean to our Government in time of war requires no argument when we remember the famous voyage of the battle ship Oregon from San Francisco to Florida by way of the Straits of Magellan during the Spanish war.

It is contended by others that should we construct the Nicaragua Canal under the present bill it would be in violation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and that no action should be taken until the Senate of the United States disposes of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty now pending in that body. I do not propose to discuss here the treaty rights in which we may be involved in constructing an isthmian canal, but I contend that it is a proposition on which the House of Representatives has no power to act.

Under the Constitution of the United States the power to make treaties with foreign countries is vested in the President and Senate of the United States. No matter what we write in this bill, except the mere appropriation of the money to construct the canal, all other limitations can be overthrown by a treaty made by the President and Senate of the United States. If the President is authorized to begin the construction of this canal, it will be necessary for him to negotiate treaties with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica authorizing its construction. These treaties will be submitted to the Senate of the United States for ratification, and as the treaties will be entered into after the passage of this bill, any terms or stipulations contained therein, though they are in conflict with the provisions of this bill, will become the law of the land.

So that I do not agree with the gentlemen who are opposed to the bill on account of its provisions providing for the terms by which the canal shall be constructed, because, as stated above, when the bill passes, the power and control of the question has gone beyond the House of Representatives and is vested in the President and Senate of the United States and we will be compelled to accept their conclusions in this matter no matter what our opinions in the premises may be.

Therefore, if we intend to construct the canal, if we believe that it will build up our commerce and develop our country and bring prosperity to our people, there is but one provision in the bill in which we are concerned, and that is the appropriation of the money for its construction, and there is no reason why we should delay making this appropriation on account of other stipulations contained in this bill. If we are not willing to trust the President and the Senate to look after the American interests in making these treaties, we should not pass this bill; but if we wish to pass a bill, we of necessity must leave the foreign questions involved in the construction of the canal to the President and Senate of the United States.

I believe that the time for action has come, and that those who are earnestly and truly in favor of the construction of the canal will vote for the passage of this bill.

Pensions.

SPEECH
OF
HON. MARTIN H. GLYNN,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, May 7, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (S. 1477) amending sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27 1890—

Mr. GLYNN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: This bill has my hearty support for the reason that I believe it is a step in the right direction, a step which should have been taken by this country long ago. Unmeasurable is the debt which the United States owes the men who fought for its preservation, and less measured should be the rewards it has been bestowing upon its defenders and its saviors. For my part, I believe in a most liberal interpretation of the pension laws. I believe that this Government can foster patriotism in no better way than by generous treatment of the men who have been hurried to physical infirmities through their nights on the camp field; their days on the march; their hours on the battle ground; their gamut through dangers indescribable, sickness debilitating, wounds whose sores have healed, but whose effects remain written upon their constitutions in traces that will be effaced only by the hand of death.

In responding to the bugle blast of duty that summoned them to rally round the Stars and Stripes, the "boys in blue" showed their allegiance to the United States and consequently proved their love of country, for in love alone is planted the root of true allegiance. For our country's sake they cast aside every thought of self, every idea of personal gain, every tie that bound them to loving hearts, and rushed away to war—all to danger, many to death, many to come back home honored though racked and tossed along in Time's path many years ahead of their day in life by the infirmities which follow a soldier's life, just as weakness follows in the wake of overtaxed nature. For those now wrapped in the mantle of death we have erected shafts of marble and tablets of brass, written songs of glory and recited poems of praise. For those who yet live and suffer because of their soldierly duties we will to-day erect in law a monument, sing a song of glory, and recite a poem of praise by passing this bill which allows a more liberal interpretation of the pension laws, wipes out some of the absurd provisions of the old pension enactments, and gives the soldier some of the generous treatment which so rightly should be his.

I do not want to be considered, however, as holding this bill to be the acme at which we should aim in pension legislation. Far from it. I am in favor of a still more liberal law than this, and hope to see a more beneficent one placed upon the statute books in the near future. Inasmuch as this proposed law is more liberal toward our soldiers than the old one, and inasmuch as it has the indorsement of the Grand Army of the Republic throughout the country, I am pleased to vote for it, but in voting for it I indulge the hope that before many years have run their cycle Congress will see its way clear to give a reasonable pension to every man of 60 years of age who suffers from infirmities received in war, provided that every such man served at least three months in the Army and received an honorable discharge. To my mind that would make bearable, in a measure, the declining years of men who gave their best days to the service of their country and risked their lives for its preservation. To my mind that would dry the tear of sorrow and alleviate the pain of age under many a humble roof sheltering a man who served his country as well as did Grant, Sheridan, or Sherman, though because he was a private he must go to his grave with no world echoings of honor or funereal salutes of farewell from brazen-mouthed cannon or echo-ringing rifle. [Applause.]

In this bill we honor the private; we pay a tribute to the man behind the guns, the man who wins our victories, and create a competence for his widow and his family that must make them feel that, though republics may be ungrateful, as philosophers have held, still the United States, the Republic of republics, the only Government upholding a brotherhood of man and a fatherhood of justice, has a heart that pulses to the music of humanity and holds out a hand of justice to her soldier sons. And such soldier sons as are hers! The greatest in the annals of the world. Neither those of Alexander, nor of Hannibal, nor of Cæsar, nor of Napoleon, were the equals of the boys who lined up as adversaries in that bloody conflict of the sixties. In his history of the Peloponnesian war Rollin makes narration that the Athenians gave perpetuity to the custom of strewing flowers over their soldier dead, of burning incense over their graves, and of establishing a sort of memorial day in honor of the men who fell in battle.

The Athenians were a great people. We have imitated them in founding a memorial day. To-day we will outstrip them by passing a law which shows that we believe in honoring our soldiers while they live, and if my vote could do it we would honor them still more by passing a bill that would give them reward with a more lavish hand. I agree with old Cato, the famous philosopher, who once said that he hated "a soldier who moves his hands when he marches, his feet when he fights, and who snores louder in bed than he shouts in battle." [Laughter.] I hate that kind of a soldier, but I love our soldiers, because on the march and in the battle were ever embodied in them the very opposite characteristics which Cato despised, characteristics which command admiration wherever mind rules over matter, characteristics which have caused the world to look upon the American soldier as the synonym of victory and the personification of all that is desirable in military life. [Applause.]

There is no doubt in my mind that this bill will attain a large degree of popularity with all fair-minded people for its amendment of the rightfully abused sections of the law of June 27, 1890. Under that law many deserving men have been denied a pension because they could not prove that their disability resulted directly from service origin. Think of the absurdity of such a law! Imagine for a moment how impossible it is to prove more apparent and more traceable events after a lapse of nearly thirty years. Surely the rulings under the old law were saving the Government a few blood-earned dollars by many twistings of the neck of Justice! Thanks to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the zeal of the Grand Army of the Republic, this travesty of right will soon come to an end. The passage of this bill will ring down the curtain on this despicable farce.

The unanimity of the members of this House from North and South proves conclusively that the justice of the provisions of this bill are almost universally appreciated within this Hall. It is eminently right, too, that this bill should change the existing law so that the disabilities of the soldier can be aggregated. It is eminently right, too, that this bill should change the existing law so that the limit of income of a poor widow should be raised from $96 to $250 a year. If ever there was a law upon the statute books bringing crimson disgrace to this country, it was the provision which prevented the widow of a poor soldier from securing a pension if she had an income of more than $95 a year. Think of it! Ninety-five dollars a year! Why, it would hardly buy a human being enough food to eat, not to say anything about the other necessities of a civilized community. Ninety-five dollars a year to prevent a soldier's widow from getting a pension! Less than 27 cents a day! One of the proudest acts of my life will be to vote for this bill which wipes that disgraceful provision off the statute books and in its stead writes that the limit of preventive income shall be $250, and even this strikes me as rather small.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have covered about all the provisions of this bill upon which I care to speak. I had no intention of attempting an oration, but simply purposed to state in plain, hard terms some of the reasons why I believed that this country should come in the hour of trouble to the assistance of the men who came to the country's rescue in her hour of peril. And in closing allow me to say that I for one believe that this Government should see to it also that there is exercised a noble generosity in the bestowal of pensions upon worthy soldiers in the Spanish war. The spirit of a republic is opposed to a large standing army, and this Republic will never have need of a large standing army as long as it continues to treat its citizen soldiery according to the ethics of justice and of right. [Applause.]

Porto Rico.

SPEECH

OF

HON. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,

OF NEVADA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8345) entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and the Senate amendments thereto—

Mr. NEWLANDS said:

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not my purpose to enter into the constitutional question which formed so large a part of the discussion when the Porto Rico tariff was before the House on a former occasion. It is my purpose only to call attention to the governmental features of this bill outside of the revenue features and to call your attention to the fact that, although we made provision early in the day for the serious and deliberate consideration of all matters relating to the government of these insular acquisitions by the appointment of an Insular Committee, composed of the ablest and best men of the House, and that while that committee has been having hearings upon this subject with the intention ultimately of framing a bill and presenting it to the House, this measure providing civil government for the island of Porto Rico comes from the Senate, tacked on the House tariff bill, and is presented to us as an entirety without opportunity for amendment.

It is a measure considered in the Senate in the heat of debate over the revenue features of the bill, and without the calm deliberation that is essential to the consideration of these governmental features. It comes to this House, is referred to the Ways and Means Committee, is reported back to the House without deliberate consideration there, and this House is now called upon to vote upon the entire bill without the report of the Insular Committee and without opportunity to present amendments to it. This is in startling contrast with the deliberation of our action on the Hawaiian government bill. There commissioners were appointed by the President, went to Hawaii, came in contact with their people, familiarized themselves with their institutions, touched the soil from which these institutions sprang, and reported a bill which went to the Committee on Territories of this House and was submitted there to careful and deliberate scrutiny, and, having been perfected there, was presented to this House, was considered during three days of debate, during which amendments of great value to the liberties of that people and to the proper government of these islands were submitted and adopted.

You will all recollect when a motion was made by Representative HILL, from Connecticut, to the effect that the section providing for a Delegate from Hawaii should be stricken out and a mere commissioner should be substituted, similar to the commissioner provided for in this bill, without right to sit in the deliberations of this body, but simply to act as the representative of the insular government in the Departments here—you will all remember the earnest, vigorous, and eloquent speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] in response to that motion, and you will all recall that the entire House, Republicans as well as Democrats, responded favorably to his appeal that we did not need a lobbyist from the Hawaiian Islands, a mere commissioner who would dance attendance upon our Departments, who would meet Representatives in the corridors, hat in hand, grateful for a moment's recognition, but a Delegate representing an intelligent people, deputized by them to represent them on this floor, without the power to vote, it is true, but with the right to participate in debate and to represent the interests of his constituents in Congress, this House having the opportunity to subject his views to the scrutiny of inquiry and to test the sources of his information.

I insist upon it that to-day if this House were untrammeled by the rule which has been adopted, a motion to substitute a Delegate from Porto Rico to the Congress of the United States for a commissioner to our Departments would carry this body by an overwhelming vote. And recollect that such a provision was adopted in the Hawaiian bill, though but one-fifth of the people there are white, whilst in Porto Rico seven-tenths of the people are white. Then you will also recollect the beneficial provisions which were put in the Hawaiian bill regarding the land monopoly and the conditions of labor.

I contend it is impossible to legislate regarding any of these new possession unless you take into consideration their economical conditions. For the first time in our history we are called upon to legislate regarding tropical countries, those regions kissed by the sun, where animal life of intense vigor and fierceness exists, and where vegetable life displays itself in all the enlarged forms of production, and where man alone is inferior. I contend that the initial step in legislation regarding these islands should be the development of the individual man; that man who is to become a citizen; that man who is to exercise self-government; that man who is to have the intelligence to protect and the courage to defend his rights.

Now, what has been the conditions in these tropical regions? Why, sir, labor there has always been degraded, sometimes as the result of economic conditions, sometimes as the result of the oppression of power, sometimes as the result of the oppression of wealth represented by the land-owning classes. This is true of Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines. The masses of the people are ignorant, degraded, abject. Republican institutions are impossible in a country where such conditions exist, for the very strength of a republic is not in the wealth, cultivation, or refinement of the few, but in the intelligence and sturdy independence of the many.

If, then, we are to prepare the people of these islands for the blessings of self-government, the most important thing is the development of the laboring classes.

Now, what are the discouraging conditions in all these islands? They are that the laborers are semiservile, having no interest in the soil, but merely attached to it as peons or serfs. This is true of Hawaii, where the sugar plantations are owned by wealthy corporations and individuals, and the lands are worked by Asiatic labor. It is true of Luzon, where the land has drifted largely into the hands of the religious organizations. It is true of Porto Rico, where nearly 1,000,000 people occupy an island 100 miles long and 40 miles wide—one of the most densely populated agricultural regions in the civilized world and where the great masses of the people have no interest in the soil.

Porto Rico produces sugar, tobacco, and coffee. We are about to take her into the commercial union of the United States and to give her the benefit of our enlarged markets. The agricultural production of Porto Rico will be largely stimulated and the prices realized for her products largely increased. What will be the tendency of all this? Why, simply that capital will seek to acquire the land, and that gradually these lands will drift into large holdings and will be controlled by syndicates and corporations. Shall we, then, simply content ourselves with prescribing a form of government suited to a free people without taking into consideration the fact that the entrance of Porto Rico into our commercial union will vastly increase the value of the lands at the expense of the labor employed on the lands, or shall we take into consideration the economic conditions of these islands, the degraded condition of labor, and seek to establish a system by which the benefit of the increased production will go to the laborers themselves and not entirely to the landowners?

It seems to me apparent that the time for action upon these questions is now, for otherwise, when this governmental bill shall go out of our hands, the whole subject-matter of conditions in Porto Rico will drift from our consideration and our whole time will be taken up with domestic affairs. Preventive legislation is much more beneficial than remedial legislation. If we allow things to drift, the most oppressive land monopoly will be organized in Porto Rico, based upon semislave labor, and it will be extremely difficult later on to remedy conditions; but if we take hold of the matter now we can make provision in this very bill that will prevent land monopoly, and will secure to the laborers the advantage secured by the incorporation of Porto Rico in our commercial union.

In the Hawaiian bill we take these matters up. We limited the holdings of agricultural corporations, we provided for reports to the Department of Labor as to the area and extent of agricultural holdings, the condition of the laborers employed on the holdings, their nationality, and their wages. We also provided for a commissioner of labor, who should make reports both to the Hawaiian legislature and the American Congress regarding the condition of labor as to sanitation, intelligence, wages, and other conditions; and thus we laid the foundation for intelligent action both upon the part of the Territorial legislature and of Congress. This bill is entirely wanting in these matters. It provides simply for government without regarding the conditions of the people governed and without regard to the economic conditions which, if neglected, will make good government absolutely impossible, however perfect may be the form of the government framed.

The question of land monopoly is one that is not familiar to the people of this country. We have here 70,000,000 of people in a country capable of supporting four or five hundred millions, but this question is one which has become a most vital question in all densely populated countries, and we must recollect that Porto Rico is one of the most densely populated countries in the world. The best security for stable and intelligent government there will be small holdings or present proprietorship, and a bill providing for the government of Porto Rico which does not take hold vigorously of the land and labor questions utterly fails in all the purposes of scientific government.

Seneca Nation of New York Indians.

OF
HON. WILLIAM H. RYAN,
OF NEW YORK.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 7, 1900,

On the bill (H. R. 4718) to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys arising from the leases made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. RYAN of New York said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: This bill is for the purpose of correcting abuses which have become chronic with the Seneca Nation of New York Indians and are a disgrace now not alone to the fair name of the Empire State, but also to the United States Government, whose wards these red men are. I submitted the measure to the House at the request of a large number of representative members of the tribe. It has the approval and commendation of the board of Indian commissions, and Mr. W. A. Jones, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has urged that it be passed. Investigations by Congress have proved that the moneys accruing from leases and otherwise have been improvidently expended.

While I do not wish to contend that there are no redeeming features to the form of government and practices in vogue in the collection and disbursement of this money, still I wish to draw the attention of the members of the House to the fact that time and again Congress has taken this matter up and has given the officers of the tribe every opportunity to convince the members in control of Indian affairs in the House and Senate that no irregularities were going on, but they have absolutely and totally failed on each and every occasion. In fact, the whole burden of evidence has proved conclusively that the funds of the Seneca Nation are being misappropriated.

THE SIX NATIONS AND THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

Prior to the year 1784 the Six Nations of Indians were rampant in New York State, the Senecas being particularly numerous in that section of the State which borders on Lake Erie and its attributary streams. In that year, however, the Government entered into a treaty of peace with the Senecas, to bring to a close the ravaging exploits of the red men. By the provisions of that treaty, as I understand it, the United States assumed protection over the Senecas, and took them in as wards of the Government. Reservations were then established throughout the entire western portion of New York. Senate investigations have held that the Government—the Federal Government—held title to this land in trust for the Indians. It appears that Massachusetts claimed the land under a charter to the Plymouth Company from Charles II of England. New York claimed the same lands under a grant from the Duke of York. A commission was appointed by each State to settle these disputed claims. That commission met at Hartford, Conn., and a settlement was effected on December 16, 1786, Massachusetts ceding to New York all claims of government, jurisdiction, and sovereignty, and New York gave to the Bay State the right of preemption from the natives. It was practically, in a few words, granting sovereignty to New York and the right of Massachusetts to buy the land in case the Indians desired to sell.

This quasi settlement of the ownership of the lands was effected two years after the peace-treaty conference. At the time the peace treaty was signed by the Government and the famous Indian chief Cornplanter, who acted with other chiefs for the Seneca Nation, the United States set aside about 6,000,000 acres of this land for Indian reservations.

THE LAND TITLES.

Some few years later Robert Morris received from the State or Massachusetts its preemption rights to this land and what title it may have had to give. I fail to see, however, that Mr. Morris received any title from the State of Massachusetts except the right to buy this property in case the red men wanted to sell. Nevertheless, in 1797 Mr. Morris secured from the Indians all but thirteen of the reservations, being all save about 1,000,000 of the 6,000,000 acres set aside by the Government. From this transfer, I believe, the Seneca Nation received $75,000, which was deposited in the Treasury of the United States, the agreement being that the interest on this sum was to be turned over annually for the support and maintenance of the tribe.

Mr. Chairman, we have now reached the point where the Indians have left about 1,000,000 acres of their original grant. In those earlier times it seems that 5,000,000-acre land sales where the city of Buffalo, the city of Rochester, and many smaller cities and towns now stand were passed over without much comment or record and on very flimsy titles. I believe the Indians have to-day about 55,000 or 60,000 acres of that land, and the white men are still claiming title to it.

THE OGDEN LAND COMPANY.

A corporation known as the Ogden Land Company was the institution that passed out title to those now claiming ownership. Let us see what title the Ogden Land Company had to this property. The Ogden people derived their alleged title from Robert Morris through and under his deed from the State of Massachusetts, his title being one of preemption solely.

Webster defines preemption to be the act or right of purchasing before others, as the privilege or prerogative formerly enjoyed by the king of buying provisions for his household in preference to others. This was abolished by Charles 11. In American law, a privilege enjoyed by Government in relation to Indian lands. Congress has the exclusive right of preemption to all Indian lands lying within the territory of the United States. (Burrill's Law Dictionary, supra; 8 Wheaton, 543; 1 Kent's Commentaries, 257.)

The late Hon. Charles Daniels, for many years a justice of the supreme court of New York State and a jurist of the highest standing, was thoroughly familiar with all the facts concerning the claim of the Ogden Land Company. He said in the House of Representatives:

Now, Mr. Speaker, all that the Ogden Company have in connection with this matter is simply the right to buy out the Indians in case the Indians are willing to sell. They have no further authority over the property in any shape or form, and the Supreme Court of the United States, in 5 Wallace, decided that the Indians were owners of the property and no person had the right to interfere with them or force an exchange of property unless they were willing to sell. It was simply the option to buy the lands of the Indians, and the Indians refused to sell. From the time when the treaty was first made with them—and they were cheated by the treaty—the Ogden Company were really required to and did convey back to the Indians these two reservations because of the fact that they had been cheated; and, I repeat, from that time to this the Indians have been unwilling to make any agreement with these people or to part with their title under any circumstances.

In the case of the New York Indians (5 Wallace, 761) the Supreme Court of the United States held—

That until the Indians have sold their lands and removed from them in pursuance of the treaty stipulation, they are to be regarded as still in their ancient possessions and are under their original title, and entitled to the undisputed enjoyment of them.

Judge Nelson says:

All agree that the Indian right of occupancy creates an indefensible title to the reservation that may extend from generation to generation, and will cease only by dissolution of the tribe or their consent to sell to the party possessed of the right of preemption.

Indian Commissioner Jewell, when in charge of the Seneca Agency, made a thorough study of the title to the property. In closing his report he has to say:

The consensus of opinion would seem to be that the Indians have an indefeasible right and title to the occupancy of their lands reserved to them and their heirs forever, subject only to the right of preemption when they choose to sell. Preemption and sovereignty being inseparable, it is difficult to see what tangible interest the Ogden Land Company have in these lands. In my opinion it is clear that the Ogden Land Company have no vested right in these Indian lands. If the Indians choose to sell their title, and the Ogden Land Company purchase upon the terms made by the Indians, and the sale is made with the consent of the agents of the State of New York, and in the presence of a commissioner of the United States Government, and ratified by the United States Government, and the terms of sale completed, then the Ogden Land Company would get a title, and not otherwise.

It is beyond question that the Indians are entitled to occupy their lands from generation to generation, and until they become absolutely extinct, and when they do become extinct the title is in the General Government. I have cited the progress of title and depletion of these lands in order to demonstrate how watchful Congress should be lest all the lands of the Seneca Nation be taken from them and they become, in their entirety, a burden on the Government. As I have before stated, there are still two reservations up in the western end of the State, comprising about 55,000 acres, occupied and owned by the Allegany and Cattaraugus tribes of the Seneca Nation. The property is known as the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations, and is located in the counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and Erie.

THE TREATY OF 1826.

In the year 1826 a treaty was entered into between the Indians and the Ogden Land Company whereby the Indians were to release 86,887 acres of their property in New York State, and were to receive from the land company $48,260. This treaty was never ratified by the United States Senate. In addition to this, the Government provided them with other lands west of the Missouri River for their permanent homes.

Acting under that agreement, the Government set aside for them 1,834,000 acres of land in the State of Kansas, allowing approximately 320 acres to each individual of the 5,700 New York Indians. When the territory comprising this land was opened up for settlement under the Administration of President Lincoln the Indian lands were bought up. Some of the red men received their pro rata share of the money; others did not. In the urgent deficiency bill of this session there is an item appropriating $2,000,000 to satisfy the claims of the Indians who did not receive their money from the sale.

The tenth section of that treaty provided that the tribe was to remove to their new homes within five years. The deed from the Seneca Nation to Ogden & Fellows (comprising at that time the Ogden Land Company) conveyed four reservations—the Buffalo Creek Reservation, estimated to contain 49,920 acres; the Cattaraugus Reservation, estimated to contain 21,680 acres; the Allegany, estimated to contain 30,469 acres, and the Tonawanda, estimated to contain 12,800 acres.

The status of this case has been determined by the Government, the Senate investigating and reporting.

However, the Indians were given five years in which to migrate to their new homes, five years in which to forsake their familiar camping grounds, their hunting grounds, and their fishing grounds, and strike out for the West, where the red men were fast being driven. It is not unnatural that they revolted a bit at this procedure, and we find that before the expiration of the five years in which they were given to "vamose" difficulties arose between them and the Ogden Land Company, which finally resulted in another treaty—that of 1842. The Indians had refused to accept the new conditions. We note that the land company made another backdown, and by this treaty of 1842 stipulated that the Seneca Nation might continue in the occupation of the reservations of Cattaraugus and Allegany, two of the four which had been deeded by the treaty of 1838. The cession of these lands by Ogden and Fellows gave the Indians a further title of some sort in these two reservations. They at least held the land thereafter by the right of occupancy.

The Seneca Nation for its part of the treaty—and we all know that the Indians were dealing with men who had no more right to these lands than they themselves had, and it is my belief not near as much—for the nation's part of the treaty, it conceded the right of occupancy of the Buffalo Creek and Tonawanda reservations to the predecessors of the Ogden Land Company, Messrs. Ogden and Fellows. But the Indians residing on these two last-named reservations still refused to give up their lands. They had been given large tracts of land in Kansas on which to establish their permanent homes. They accepted this, but refused to quit the occupancy of the Tonawanda Reservation, and they are there yet.

The Kansas land was sold. The bulk of the money from this sale did not go direct to the Indians, but was taken by the Ogden Land Company, and the Indians were told they could have the Tonawanda Reservation for it. This deal was consummated by a treaty formulated in 1857. The Indians' refusal to leave the reservation left the treaties of 1838 and 1842 still unexecuted, so the treaty of 1857 did nothing further than to put the Tonawandas back to the position they held prior to the treaty of 1838. The status of the Indians and the Ogden Land Company had undergone no change during the intervening years, but by virtue of the terms of the treaty of 1857 and by an act of Congress in March, 1859, the Indians' purchase of the land from the Ogden Company—with the funds from their Kansas sale—gave them all the title the Ogden people were able to give, as well as their own right and title. The full title of the reservation, therefore, is now held by the comptroller of the State of New York in trust for the Indians.

The Cattaraugus and Allegany tribes did not receive their money from the Kansas sale, but Congress has at this session appropriated money to reimburse them. They did not, however, quit their reservations. What I have here stated to the House is, in general, I believe, the status of the Indians in so far as their land rights are concerned. Eliminating the verbiage that usually accompanies the reports of the ethnological researches—and their burden of proof flows always in the same direction—there is much circumstantial evidence to show that in earlier days the Indians were not given the voluminous portion of the many transactions into which they were drawn by the white investors and prospectors, but I have not touched on this fact, because we have now to deal with the Indian as he is to-day, not what he was one hundred years ago. Congress must shape his future. He has been taken out of his natural channel and placed amid new conditions and surroundings, and his training for generations back has not been such as would enable him to adapt himself to this new life. He can not battle successfully with his white brethren, and, being under the protection of the Government, Congress must assist him along his way until his race is run.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE SENECA INDIANS.

While we are looking to the future of the Seneca Indian I ask the indulgence of the House in an effort to show how corruption has existed in the handling of the funds of the Seneca Nation for years back and has become worse with age. We note that until the year of 1847 the tribal form of government was in vogue in the Six Nations. The chief was absolute. He directed the affairs of the tribe and handled all the funds. In 1847, however, the members of the Seneca Nation revolted against the chief. For what? Because it was charged that he was misappropriating the funds of the members of the tribe. The chief had to go. The tribal government was abolished and a constitutional form was established. The tribe elected a president, a treasurer, a secretary, and a council. This council was composed of 16 members, 8 from the Cattaraugus Reservation and a like number from the Allegany Reservation. The chief had received for distribution about $12,000 annually, being the interest on the funds held in trust by the Government.

We now have on the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations about 2,300 Indians. The form of government established in 1847 still prevails. The nation receives from various sources each year between $20,000 and $25,000. The greater portion of this money is received from leases given by the Indians for divers purposes, but in the main bought up by oil and gas speculators. In 1870 a grant of 45 acres was given to the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, and a few years afterwards the individual Indians began to grant leases to settlers outside of this 45-acre tract. The people holding these individual leases applied to Congress, and in 1875 the leases were confirmed by both Houses under the stipulation that they were to run for twelve years. Again in 1891 Congress extended the leases, which had been confirmed by the council, to ninety-nine years.

MONEY TO BE DISTRIBUTED—HOW?

Since this trafficking in leases began the individual Indian has fared very badly. All moneys received should be distributed pro rata among the members of the two reservations; but the officers have been most careless in this distribution, and as a result the Indian receives approximately about one-tenth of his pro rata share. A bill similar to the measure now before this House passed the Senate in the Fifty-fifth Congress, but died here. At the time the measure was before the members in the other end of the Capitol an investigation was ordered, and I quote here some of its findings. The following is the officer's report:

Committee.

It will be noted from the table that the account listed "miscellaneous accounts" increased nearly $4,000 in one year.

The Committee on Indian Affairs of the House gave a hearing on this bill some time ago. All the officers of the Seneca Nation attended and two representatives of the tribe. The officers opposed the bill. The representatives of the tribe were strongly in favor of it. I will read the report of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which fully explains what transpired at that hearing. The officers, by their own statements, showed incompetency and carelessness bordering on crime in the handling of the funds of the tribe. The report says:

The committee gave a full hearing to the parties interested in this bill, at which there were in attendance the officers of the Seneca Nation opposed to certain members of the Seneca tribe, who favor the bill, and members of the Board of Indian Commissioners, who were earnestly in favor of the bill. That hearing, together with Senate Document No. 190, second session Fifty-fifth Congress, discloses the fact that the method of keeping accounts in the Seneca Nation now is totally defective; that the officers were unable to explain any discrepancies that appeared in the accounts, and stated that it was the custom of the nation at the close of each year to pass the accounts and immediately destroy all vouchers. It also disclosed the fact that in addition to irregularities in the handling and accounting for the moneys that there is extravagance in the disposal thereof, and it is believed that the bill now reported will correct these errors. Therefore it is favorably reported.

PROVISIONS OF THIS BILL.

The bill provides that all moneys arising from the various sources, rents from village leases, rents from oil leases—for a portion of the reservation has been leased out to oil and gas speculators—all this money under the provisions of the measure will be collected by the United States agent of the New York Indian Agency and disbursed by him pro rata among the Indians. It provides that he shall make a report to the Government here of all money collected and from what sources and how distributed. Of the money he receives he will turn over, if the House and Senate pass this bill, $2,500 to the treasurer of the Seneca Nation to meet the routine expenses of the council in the government of the two reservations. After this amount has been deducted, together with his fee of $250, he will distribute the balance among the heads of the families of the nation in the same manner and under the same conditions that the annuities paid to the nation by the United States are distributed.

Further, the agent will be under bond to the United States in such sum as will be approved of by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my motive in pressing this bill is none other than to protect these Indians from the pernicious methods of the officers of the tribe. The Government is bound to support the Seneca Nation, but in doing so we must insist that the funds of the reservation be divided pro rata among the members of the tribe, and not go to enrich a few.

Post-Office Appropriation Bill.

OF
HON. JOHN W. GAINES,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 23, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10001) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. GAINES said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Congress is given the express power to establish a postal system, the words of the Constitution being: "The Congress shall have the power to establish post-offices and post-roads." This grant gives Congress the sole power over and control of the postal system. The courts of last resort without dissent hold that this power gives Congress the sole right to say what shall be included in and excluded from the mails.

The recent case of Rapier ex parte (143 U. S., 134-135), the Louisiana Lottery case, affirms the older case of Jackson ex parte (96 U. S., 729), which held that—

The power possessed by Congress to establish post-offices and post-roads embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country.

The right to designate what shall be carried (in the mails) necessarily involves the right to determine what shall be excluded.

Chief Justice Fuller, in affirming the Jackson case, says:

While the legitimate ends of the exercise of the power (postal power) in question is to furnish mail facilities for the people of the United States, it is also true that mail facilities are not required to be furnished for every purpose.

Interstate trust contracts are prohibited by the anti-trust statute of 1890, under the power given Congress to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations. Although thus condemned, we still permit and thereby aid such trusts by allowing them to use the mails to carry on their outlawed business.

Why should we exclude these obnoxious combines from the front door and let them in at the side door? Why not say trusts shall not use the mails to carry on their business? We have said this to the Louisiana Lottery and other obnoxious concerns and crushed them throughout the entire domain of the United States. Congress, under the adjudications alluded to, has the sole power and the right to exclude anything it chooses from the mails, whether moral or immoral. The right to use the mails is a privilege, not a fundamental right. This service is not, as Justice Fuller says, "furnished for every purpose."

At an early day in this Congress I introduced a bill, found at length in my speech in this House January 19, published in the RECORD, volume 33, page 10756, which proposes to bar these obnoxious monsters commonly called trusts from the use of the mails. In that bill I undertake to define, and I think I have successfully defined—and if not, I pray that this Congress may successfully do so—exactly what trusts are, and exactly what trusts or combines or monopolies should be included in, and exactly what should be excluded from, our mails. We know what this powerful, far-reaching power can do. It crushed outright the Louisiana Lottery, which had been upheld by the State and Federal courts.

I am glad to say that what I have said heretofore, and possibly what others have said, so far as I know, has brought sharply to public attention the question of this power of Congress and its capacity to destroy trusts. I am delighted to find my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. HEPBURN, agrees with me in the construction of this power. He has introduced a bill excluding the pictures, periodicals, advertisements, contracts, etc., of prize fighters from the mail. And I submit, if this postal power can be legitimately invoked to bar from the mails those who knock out a few of the people a part of the time, certainly it can and should be invoked to close the mails to concerns which knock out all the people all the time.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, that great minds are really taking up this question [laughter] and suggest that we invoke this postal power of Congress to crush out these concerns rather than permit them longer to paralyze the arms of industry and strike from the lips of the laboring people their hard-earned crumbs.

Mr. Chairman, I find in a recent issue of the American Law Review, March-April, an article from the pen of evidently a distinguished gentleman who has been thinking along the same line, Prof. E. W. Huffcut, of Cornell University, who concludes that one of the ways to crush out the trusts is to invoke the power of exclusion from the mails. He says:

There are perhaps three ways in which Congress could effectively exercise a power to restrict or destroy the business of State corporations engaged in interstate commerce. * * *

(1) It might forbid such corporations as fall within a definition of monopoly the use of the mails. (2) It might tax State corporations upon their interstate commerce. (3) It might directly prohibit State corporations from engaging in interstate commerce.

His second and third propositions do not commend themselves altogether to me. Upon his first proposition—to exclude from the mails—he says:

Congress has exercised the right to exclude from the mails letters or circulars concerning lotteries or other enterprises in which there is the element of chance (act September 29, 1890, 26 Stat. L., 465), and this legislation has been held constitutional, citing the Jackson and Rapier cases. It has exercised the right to prohibit the carriage of indecent publications and articles in the mails or by interstate carriers. (25 Stat. L., 496; 29 Stat. L., 512.)

It has forbidden the transportation of diseased cattle or meat which has been exposed to infection. (23 Stat. L., 31; 26 Stat. L., 1039.) All these acts are a proper exercise of the Federal police power.

But it is now clear that the police power is not confined to the protection of health or morals or safety, but extends to the protection of the reasonable and convenient exercise of private rights. (173 U. S., 285; Lake, etc., R. R. vs. Ohio.)

Why, then, may not Congress denounce monopolistic combinations, whether in the form of corporations or not, as a hindrance to such rights, and deny to such combinations the use of the mails?

It may denounce gambling contracts into which persons voluntarily enter, and forbid such contracts to be made or executed by the use of the mails a fortiori. It may denounce a monopoly which compels the people at large to buy the necessaries of life at a price fixed by the monopoly, and may deny to it the use of the mails.

The postal power is exercised regardless of the police powers of Congress. Congress, being the author and sole director of our postal system, has the power to exclude from the mails, regardless of the question of whether or not the thing excluded is moral or immoral. That it is immoral is an additional reason why it should be excluded. The postal power, as stated, is a granted right, and could and does exist regardless of the often-doubted police power of Congress.

The postal system would be more effective in crushing trusts than we at first blush would judge, for the reason that it applies uniformly to State and interstate mails. And therefore to say to trusts, whether engaged in State commerce only, or interstate only, or both, that you shall not use the mails, so necessary for your business, would crush trusts engaged in State commerce only, as well as those engaged in interstate trust business only, or those engaged in both. The commerce powers of the several States operate and can only operate upon commerce carried on within the limits of the respective States, while Congress can only regulate interstate commerce. But we see the postal system operate on both State and interstate trade. Hence, to deprive them—trusts engaged in State trust or interstate trust business—would be a uniform denial and sweeping destruction of these institutions.

The power of the several States over State commerce and of Congress over interstate commerce—both powers being clear and now exercised by the several States and by Congress respectively—has failed to control or destroy these nefarious combines. Whether the State laws are insufficient or not enforced or the Federal law is insufficient or not enforced we do not here stop to question, but we do say that the trusts are increasing and thriving while the people are crying out against these concerns that are daily sinking their fangs deeper and deeper into the body politic and destroying the people's right of free trade between the States and in the States.

If protection, "the mother of trusts," is to remain the law of the land, as it will under Republican administration; if we are not to have free trade, which would largely destroy these trusts, then we should, and at once, exclude from the mails these concerns and aid both the States and the United States in dealing promptly, vigorously, and successfully with them. It has been long the law of the land that Congress, through the commerce clause of the Constitution, can not reach monopoly and trust engaged in trade done within the several States.

It is equally clear Congress alone can regulate trade between the States, and that the States have the power to control State commerce is unquestionable. In the leading recent case, Addystone Pipe Company Trust Case (175 U. S. Rep.), decided December 4, 1899, by unanimous court, it was found that a trust was doing a State trust trade and interstate trade. The court held the anti-trust act of 1890 prohibited the interstate trust traffic, but that the act did not, and could not under the Constitution, control the State or domestic trust trade. I quote the conclusion of the court in this case:

The views above expressed lead generally to an affirmance of the judgment of the court of appeals. In one aspect, however, that judgment is too broad in its terms—the injunction is too absolute in its directions—as it may be construed as applying equally to commerce wholly within a State as well as to that which is interstate or international only. This was probably an inadvertence merely. Although the jurisdiction of Congress over commerce among the States is full and complete, it is not questioned that it has none over that which is wholly within a State, and therefore none over combinations or agreements so far as they relate to a restraint of such trade or commerce. It does not acquire any jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement which relates to commerce wholly within a State, by reason of the fact that the combination also covers and regulates commerce which is interstate. The latter it can regulate, while the former is subject alone to the jurisdiction of the State. The combination herein described covers both commerce which is wholly within a State and also that which is interstate.

In a still later case (March 19, 1900), the Waters-Pierce Oil Company vs. State of Texas, Justice McKenna, reading the opinion for the court, discussed the power of the States to require domestic and foreign corporations to comply with State laws regulating them. The court said:

A corporation is a creature of the law, and none of its powers are original. They are precisely what the incorporating act has made them, and can only be exerted in the manner which that act authorizes. In other words, the State prescribes the purposes of a corporation and the means of executing those purposes. Purposes and means are within the State's control. This is true as to domestic corporations. It has even a broader application as to foreign corporations.

The court cites and reaffirms the old cases, amongst which we find the Head Case, 2 Cranch., 127 (1804).

The court in this case reaffirms the former holdings of the Supreme Court, and in brief says: "They [the States] may exclude the foreign corporation entirely." * * * They may be restricted in the "discretion" of the States. "The whole matter rests in their [the States'] discretion." I now call attention to what the court says on the State's powers over foreign corporations:

In Paul vs. Virginia (8 Wall., 168), the dependent and derivative rights of corporations were again declared. Bank of Augusta vs. Earl was quoted from; and it was again cited that a corporation is the mere creation of local law and can have no legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignt where created, and the recognition of its existence in other States and the enforcement of its contracts made therein depend purely upon the comity of those States.

Having no absolute right of recognition in other States, but depending for such recognition and enforcement of its contracts upon their assent, it follows, as a matter of course, that such assent may be granted upon such terms and conditions as those States may think proper to impose. They may exclude the foreign corporation entirely; they may restrict its business to particular localities, or they may exact such security for the performance of its contracts with their citizens as in their judgment will best promote the public interest. The whole matter rests in their discretion.

Here, then, is the old law recently reenunciated as to the powers of the respective States over "domestic" and "foreign" corporations. As to the former, we see the "purposes and means are within the State's control," while as to "foreign corporations" the power is "broader," which is that the States may go so far as to "exclude" them "entirely."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. I yield ten minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, there is something wrong somewhere, that in the face of these powers of the States and the Federal Government they are not exercised so as to relieve the people from the burden imposed by these unnatural, insatiate combines. I have heard of no new cases filed against any trust or combine by order and direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, who alone has the power and right under the trust act of 1890 to direct such suits. I have heard of many suits filed under State trust laws, and I am glad to know that this oil case comes from the Democratic State of Texas and arose from the fact that this great oil concern defied the anti-trust law passed by that State.

And I am equally delighted to state that the Addystone Pipe Company case came from Tennessee, and rejoice to state that there was a criminal proceeding filed as well as the injunction heard in this case against this corporation, and that both suits were instituted by Democratic officials, one of whom I knew well; he was my particular friend, now dead, the Hon. James H. Bible, United States district attorney. He was a Democratic elector with me in 1892, and his memory is near and dear to all who knew him. His record shows he was a faithful and patriotic official. Here are two leading cases against trusts from Democratic States.

What do we hear from the great State of Ohio, the home of the President and his distinguished aids-de-camp? We hear the trusts there refuse to comply with the orders of the courts and that relief is denied the people, the legislature just having adjourned without taking any action. Why, General Monnett, the distinguished ex-attorney-general of that State, practically says to me, in a letter, that the trusts in that State are more powerful than the courts; that the courts have submitted interrogatories to the trusts and they refused to answer, and the Republican legislature that has just adjourned refused to remedy the law, though General Monnett and others, as private citizens, urged proper amendments.

What is the history of the Republican party in that State on this subject? The President of the United States was four years governor of Ohio, yet no trust legislation was had during his administration. Why? The power of the State to so legislate was old and well known. Justice McKenna cites cases decided in 1804, ninety-six years ago, in support of the opinion of the court in the Texas case two months ago. The President can not plead ignorance of this old law and right of the States. He failed again to do his "plain duty." But it remained for the trusts to bury politically Governor Bushnell and the patriotic Monnett, by whose influence a trust law was passed in that State.

General Monnett undertook to enforce it vigorously, with the result that the courts were overridden by the trusts, and he and Governor Bushnell turned out of office without even a decent political burial. The administration of General Monnett was not indorsed by the Republicans on the trust question, but the Democrats did indorse it and went down in defeat.

I will read a clipping from the St. Louis Republic of April 16, 1900, showing that the Ohio legislature failed to pass any anti-trust legislation, although General Monnett writes me that he had suggested certain amendments which would strengthen existing law. The Republic says:

NO ANTI-TRUST LAWS—OHIO LEGISLATURE WILL ADJOURN WITHOUT OFFENDING MONOPOLIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15.

The Ohio legislature will adjourn sine die at noon to-morrow. The past week has been a perfect orgie of legislation, and all records have been broken in number of laws enacted. None of the anti-trust bills have become a law. The Price bill, requiring all domestic and foreign corporations to make annual reports to the secretary of state, passed the house, but the senate has not acted upon it. A final effort will be made to break the deadlock on the appropriation for the Ohio centennial, but there is little hope that it will succeed.

Compare the record of Democratic State legislatures and Republican legislatures, Democratic State and Federal officials with Republican State and Federal officials, and you will find that the Democrats prove their faith by their works—oppose trusts and enforce the laws against them, where the Republican officials pretend and do nothing but cultivate these monsters "of so frightful mien as to be hated need but to be seen."

I have before stated that the great weakness in the Sherman anti-trust law is this: That the Attorney-General of the United States has the sole power to say when suits shall be instituted against these concerns and when they shall not. If he had the disposition to vigorously insist on this prerogative, he has not the time. This was never intended to be a one-man government. The President is one man, it is true, but his powers are limited and he is controlled largely—absolutely in some matters—by Congress, and sometimes by the Senate alone. But as the law is, the Attorney-General has too much power and it should be changed, even if no other legislation is had.

I am opposed to putting it in the power of any one man, I would not care if it was Andrew Jackson himself, to say when and whether or not suits against trusts should be filed. I want the right given to the people, the suffering people, the people who are the victims of these nefarious concerns, and let them go to the criminal courts, the Federal courts, and say: "Here is a trust that is grinding me to death and I have not the money to employ a great lawyer to back up a lawsuit; I have not the railroad fare to go to the Federal Government at Washington to see the Attorney-General about my rights." I want to give the right to the plain people, who are the sufferers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Government for Porto Rico.

OF

HON. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Thursday, March 29, 1900.

The Senate having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes—

Mr. BEVERIDGE said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: The first issue joined in this debate involves the power of Congress over the islands and the peoples which Providence has placed in our keeping, and therefore the possible expediency of retaining them. It involves the power and progress of the Republic throughout the future. For if Congress has not a free hand to deal with these islands as their different conditions and changing needs demand, it may not only be inexpedient but it may be difficult to hold them. To treat Porto Rico as we treat Hawaii, and to deal with the latter as we deal with the Philippines, and to apply to all immediately the same form of government which the intention of statehood has prescribed for our Territories from which our States were formed, is a proposition the unwisdom of which appears in its statement.

We have the greatest opportunity, the greatest duty with which Fortune ever blessed a nation. Events have established us in positions of command over the Pacific. The key to the commerce of the East is in our hands. We are the warden of the gates of the Gulf. With the canal a completed work, we control the natural future highways of ocean commerce more than any power than England. More than any people of history, Providence is placing us where, finally, we may compel the peace of the world. Porto Rico, Cuba, the Canal, Hawaii, the Philippines, make us the sovereign power among the nations. I say this because I can not believe that we will surrender our possessions to others because we can not invent appropriate methods for their government.

I can not believe that our Constitution so manacles our hands and narrows our vision and numbs our brain. I will not admit that our Constitution is such a charter of death. I will not admit that our fathers, those master minds of history's most expanding and administering race, so anchored us within a narrow harbor when the high seas call us, their islands are ours, and the inhabitants thereof need our guiding hand to civilize and to redeem them. My faith is in a Constitution which is a chart by which we sail all seas and make all ports—a Constitution which is a commission for the appropriate exercise of our strength as it develops.

For one, Mr. President, I rejoice that we have these possessions. I believe that we have them by the decrees of a Providence which, in all our history, has outrun the wisdom of Presidents and Congresses; and I accept the privileges, duties, and burdens of our situation in the spirit expressed to me by our great Admiral, as we stood on the Olympia's decks and looked across to the mountains of Luzon, when he said:

"A higher power than mine was in this business; a higher will and a wisdom than ours unfurled that flag over this ocean empire—ours now, and ours forever."

The Philippines, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and, as I hope, in the future, by the free choice of her people, Cuba—all ours. In the markets they command, in the markets they afford, in their resources to be developed, in their people to be educated, in their sovereign location upon the future highways of the world's greatest commerce, in their strategic positions in all future wars, rendering us impregnable ourselves and giving the validity of superior power to any arbitration we suggest; in a hundred circumstances these possessions are valuable to the Republic beyond our present ability to estimate. If we hold them, this Senate chamber, in coming centuries, will ring with praise of the wisdom that accepted our opportunity and placed the Republic on the throne of the world. If we surrender them to more discerning and powerful peoples, succeeding generations will condemn the folly that not only yielded our high advantage, but placed the Republic at the mercy of its possible future foes.

FREE HAND NECESSARY TO PROPERLY CARE FOR OUR POSSESSIONS.

And yet I repeat again that the possible surrender of all the war has won for us is the first issue in debate; for it may be difficult to keep these islands unless we may provide for them according to the wisdom of events—according to the common sense of situations. The needs of Porto Rico are peculiar to Porto Rico; we must administer to them as good judgment may demand. The needs of Hawaii are peculiar to Hawaii. The needs of the Philippines are peculiar to the archipelago. The needs of all are unlike the needs of our American States when they were Territories.

The people of each island group are unlike the people of the other. And none of them are like the American pioneers who dominated our continental wilderness. And if we may not adopt measures fitting the condition and the necessities of each and change those measures as conditions and necessities change, it might possibly develop that it would be better to give them up. The alternative proposed by the opposition is not inviting.

That alternative is the proposition that our Constitution extends, whether we wish it to or not, over peoples who do not understand its meaning; that these peoples shall be provided for according to a fixed formula of government prepared for the highest type of self-governing communities the world ever saw; that before these people even comprehend the term self-government, before they realize its duties, burdens, and rewards, exercise of that function is to be forced upon them; that they are to be made a part of the American people, States of the American Union, and that Porto Rican Senators, Hawaiian Senators, and Filipino Senators shall sit here, equal in dignity and power to the representatives of Massachusetts, New York, or any State of this homogeneous Nation, and that all this shall be determined immediately and irrevocably, now and for all the future. This is the alternative forced upon us by a partisan opposition. This is the alternative which a political faction, searching for a campaign issue, advances at one of the critical periods of our history.

PRINCIPLE OF FREE HAND STATED.

Let me state what is here involved again. The Government says that Congress may provide such a government for these islands as will be best for them and for us; the opposition says that we can act in only one way toward them, and that way the way devised for our infant States, which were bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh when they were Territories. The Government says that the Republic must teach and train and guide these children for years, for decades—in some instances it may be for generations—till they comprehend what equal laws, free speech, and all the substance of liberty means before we give into their hands that self-government which it required hundreds of years for us to comprehend and then hundreds of other years for us to learn to use. The opposition says that we shall bestow self-government now.

The Government says that it is unwise at the present time to consolidate them with the self-governing people of the Republic; the opposition says that they are this already, by a Constitution that travels faster than our intentions, and applies, by its own force and in its entirety, to situations for the control of which the fathers wrote an apt and specific clause in that very Constitution itself.

The Government says that our power is as ample as the necessities of our situation; that to unprecedented conditions we may apply new and appropriate devices, just as our fathers applied new methods to the novel conditions that surrounded them, and that the Constitution does not limit us to a single form and method of government in "territory belonging to the United States." The opposition says that our power is limited to a fixed method not designed for, nor applicable to, the conditions before us. The opposition says that, in working out the welfare of our island wards, we have no liberty of invention, no scope for the exercise of common sense, no power to apply to one situation that method which is best for it and to a different situation another method which is best for it.

According to the opposition, the Constitution ties our hands and nullifies our understanding; according to the Government, the Constitution places in our hands the commission of all needful powers, and inspires our minds to their best efforts to invent new laws for new conditions, new methods for new necessities. The opposition says that now, this moment, the decree shall be, nay, is, irrevocably registered that the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and every other possession we may acquire during all our future shall be States of the American Republic, with Congressmen and Senators helping to devise our laws or to corrupt them. The Government says that we reserve the future for the future, but that for the present we will hold these islands as a sacred trust, dealing with them as wisdom and righteousness from day to day shall dictate, developing them into gardens, their inhabitants into happy and prosperous peoples, and when the time shall come that American ideas, American methods, and the American spirit changes their minds, their characters, their habits of thought, and their conception of government, then we or our successors in Congress may admit them into or reject them from the blood of our National life, as the wisdom and justice of posterity may determine.

In a word, the question is whether the Constitution gives Congress a free hand over our possessions, or whether, if we retain them, the Constitution gives them a free hand over us.

We are like a farmer with a farm, part adapted to corn, part to fruit, part to woodland pasture, part a swamp which draining will render fertile, part a highland which irrigation will make productive. The Government says that we must have a free hand to deal with each portion of that farm as its situation and quality requires. The opposition says that, over all, precisely the same agricultural treatment must prevail, regardless of difference of soil or conditions. The sower who sowed alike by the wayside, among thorns, in stony places as well as in prepared ground, is repeated here in those who seek to scatter self-government and the Constitution alike on the people of the Philippines, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, in equal measure, no matter whether they are prepared for it or not, as well as on the brothers of our blood in our American Territories, whom centuries of race education, experience, and tendency had prepared.

We are like a modern business man with many and dissimilar enterprises. The opposition says he must deal with all alike, must devise and apply a common system to different situations; we declare that he should have a free and constructive mind, to meet each situation with appropriate and, therefore, different action.

And so the results of our determination will be as important to the Republic in the future as they are to-day, for they involve directly our growth and its method, our mission and our power to perform it, our whole destiny as the sovereign people of the world.

Mr. President, that phrase is no vague nor vain expression. It is the holiest article of faith in the breast of the common American citizen. He believes that the American people is becoming and is to be the sovereign and saving power among the nations. He knows that human progress is not steady and continuous, but by successive impulses imparted by the master people of each period of human development; that those master peoples who have been the successive guardians of the progress of mankind have been endowed with a vitality, an organizing, administering power which made them in their day the sovereigns of the world; and that, to the eye of History, the work of each of these master peoples has been a necessary part in the development of the human race.

And the profoundest faith of the American people is that our day as the master people of the world has dawned. Their profoundest resolution, so deep and elemental that it is an instinct, is that we will, in our great day of world dominion, do our great work of world regeneration better even than England did and is doing her vast and yet, compared with what ours will be, her lesser work in her day; better even than Rome did hers (and at her Titanic achievements let no man sneer); better still than the Greeks did their work, into which the roots of our civilization and liberty sink and draw, through the soil of three thousand years, some of the most valuable elements of our moral and intellectual life.

It is time to announce the higher law of our National power and the duty it implies; of our National aspirations and the work that justifies them. The American people were not made for a passive example; we were made for a constructive force among mankind. Ours is not the destiny of him who eats, drinks, and is merry because to-morrow he dies. Our energy, passing the power of any people in the world to-day, yea, of any people who ever lived, is meant for a vaster work and a nobler than self-adornment, self-indulgence, and self-admiration.

And if this is so, are we to be stayed by some quibbler's strained construction of our Constitution considered as a dead and merely written instrument, and not as a living, growing Constitution, developing as the American people develop, and, like Christianity, revealing new beauties and new powers as our sight becomes stronger, clearer, more enlightened?

THE VALUE AND DANGER OF PRECEDENTS—OUR PRESENT SITUATION UNPRECEDENTED IN OUR OWN HISTORY.

The present exact situation is, for us, unprecedented. Our action must be without example in our own history. The decisions of our Supreme Court are not to the precise point, and where analogy applies those decisions to the present conditions they are conflicting and confused. This is fortunate rather than the reverse. New situations should be met with new methods. Search for precedents where none can exist, effort to apply opinions of judges to a condition neither before them nor dreamed of when they wrote those opinions, is not helpful. There are some cases containing expressions which appear to be on one side of the present controversy and others containing passages apparently on the other side; but none of them completely illumine the new fields of effort and of duty into which we have entered.

I admit and assert the authority of precedent. I understand that the philosophy upon which the authority of precedent rests is as deep as civilization itself. But that very philosophy demands that precedents shall apply only to like situations and that the solutions of new problems shall not be hampered by fitting them into inapplicable precedents. The very philosophy of precedent demands the creation of new precedents out of new occasions. Surely we can see more clearly the situation before us with our living eyes than with the dead eyes of the fathers, and even those dead eyes looking not at our problems, but at theirs.

Precedent has its rightful authority, but it has its danger, too. It sanctifies the past, but, used beyond its rightful sphere, it forbids the future. China, we say, is living in the past. She is living in her precedents. She inquires not the best way; she asks only the way of the fathers. She is reminiscent; not inventive. Her memory is abnormal; her initiative is atrophied. Drugged with the opium of precedent, she sits and dreams of ancient glories and the ancient gods. The science of the modern world is a lie to her, because the fathers knew it not. Our medicines are poison, because they are not inherited from the distant past, and enchantment is efficacious still, because her ancestry dealt with the magic of the night. Spirits of evil fly upon the air, and workmen fix charms upon buildings where they labor, to frighten the fell influences of the nether world, because their fathers did the like for a thousand years. Precedent has shod with lead the feet of this puissant people and put upon her eyelids the somnolent spell of dreams. Happy for China when she shall shake that slumber from her blood, and her people, refreshed and inspired by the energy of progress, shall meet each new emergency, opportunity, and duty by the wisdom of a living mind, and not by the wisdom of a brain which, for a thousand years, has been thoughtless dust, and, even when quick and vivid, was solving, not the problems of to-day, but those of the entombed and storied centuries.

Can we, therefore, unaided by judicial decisions, find in the Constitution the free hand needful for our new task? Have we the discretion of our own wisdom? Are we to have the liberty of our national manhood? Are we to have the power of our mission? Did the fathers, unthinking, put a period to our career as an administering people and close the door of the future in our faces? Is this great movement, which has aroused the world to wonder, inspired the American people with the noblest national feeling mankind has seen since the days of Elizabeth, and which makes us, for the first time, the masters of our fate, because it makes us a master among the nations; is this most hopeful movement in the evolution of the world's civilization, this awakening of the American people to their power, their opportunity, and their mission; is this elemental, racial development to cease because a partisan faction so construes our Constitution as to forbid the American people from moving forward to their destiny? And cease it must, if we find not the amplest power, expressed or implied, in our Constitution, for we, above all the peoples of the world, are a people of law, and our Constitution is the supreme ordinance of National life.

CONSTITUTION GIVES FREE HAND UNDER FUNDAMENTAL GENERAL LIMITATIONS.

But the Constitution does give us power as ample as our present opportunities; power so express and emphatic that the opposition dare not quote it, lest it confound them, but fly to subtleties and refinements of other sections not bearing on the matter in dispute; power written by the instinctive anticipation of our development; power penned by the racial impulse in the blood of the fathers; power so complete, emphatic, and unusual that there is in it the suggestion of duty—

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."—Constitution of the United States, Article 4, section 3.

So the Constitution says that there can be territory "belonging to the United States." Congress can even "dispose" of that territory. But "territory belonging to the United States" can not be a part of the United States in the sense the opposition insists—that is a contradiction in terms. If "territory belongs to the United States," and at the same time is a part of the United States in the sense in which the opposition uses that word, it belongs to, is owned by, a body politic of which it is itself a part—which is an absurdity in reasoning. And Congress may even "dispose of territory belonging to the United States." "Dispose" of—how? Not by making that territory States only; not by making that territory a part of the Republic only. No; and provision for such disposition of territory is made elsewhere in the Constitution. But the words "dispose of any territory belonging to the United States" stand there unlimited as to the method of that disposition.

We can make it a part of the United States if we wish. We can set up independent government if we wish, and alienate it utterly; and yet we could not do that if it is a part of the United States; for how can the United States alienate any part of itself? Or how can any part of the United States alienate itself from the United States?—which is the converse of the proposition. Our Southern brothers asked the latter question, and a million men answered it with their lives.

"Congress shall have power to dispose of territory belonging to the United States."

"Dispose of." We can sell this "territory belonging" to us, then; yet how can we sell it if it is a part of us?

We can sell Puerto Rico; we can sell the Philippines; we can turn them adrift, and all this has been proposed by those who now declare that they are a part of the United States. Does any man doubt that the United States can dispose of Puerto Rico by selling it to another nation? And yet this could not be done if it is a part of the United States in the sense in which the opposition maintain that it is a part of the United States. So that the very power to "dispose of territory belonging to the United States" is the power of the free hand over that territory. The bestowal of that very power is a denial that the Constitution extends over that territory, since, if it so extended, such power would be inconsistent with and contradictory of such a condition.

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

"Power to make all needful rules and regulations."

Think of power more comprehensive than that. You can not. Power to "dispose of," to sell, to abandon, to exchange, to set up independent government, if we do not keep this "territory belonging to the United States;" power "to make all needful rules and regulations respecting territory belonging to the United States," if we do keep such territory. And it is not a power implied from other sections, as are many of the powers now exercised by Congress and the entire National Government. It is a power expressed—not a power implied.

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting territory or other property belonging to the United States."

"Territory or other property." "Territory belonging to the United States" is "property" of the United States, says that Constitution. And if "property," we have the rights of "property," which are familiar to all. But the Constitution even emphasized those rights, and unnecessarily declared that Congress might even "dispose of" it, if Congress so pleased.

Of course Congress, in exercising this power, must pass laws in the manner prescribed in the Constitution. The Constitution determines the method of Congressional action in exercising all its powers, as, for example, the passage of the bill by both Houses, its signature or veto by the President, and so forth. And the Constitution fixes certain fundamental general limitations to and absolute general prohibitions on the power of Congress, as, for example, the passage of ex post facto laws, and so forth; and when Congress makes "needful rules and regulations respecting territory or other property belonging to the United States," it can not transgress these general limitations or prohibitions any more than it can pass laws in any different manner than the one marked out in the Constitution. This is, of course, self-evident, but I state it only that even partisanship shall not say that we put Congress above the Constitution.

OUR INSTITUTIONS EXPLAIN OUR CONSTITUTION.

Does partisanship say that, under power so broad, we could, in providing a new government for Porto Rico, establish a monarchical form of government there, and that therefore we must so construe the Constitution as to forbid such a power? I answer that we could not, even if another section of the Constitution did not, in terms, forbid it.

Why not? Because our Constitution in terms forbids? Yes. But also because our institutions forbid. Institutional law is older, deeper, and as vital as constitutional law. Our Constitution is one of the concrete manifestations of our institutions; our statutes are another; decisions of our courts are another; our habits, methods, and customs as a people and a race are still another.

Our institutional law is like the atmosphere—impalpable, imperceptible, but all-pervading and the source of life itself. There is scarcely a decision of our courts of last resort involving great constitutional questions which does not refer to the spirit of our institutions as interpreting our Constitution. It is our institutional law which, flowing like our blood through the written Constitution, gives that instrument vitality and power of development.

Our institutions were not established by the Constitution. Institutional law existed before the Constitution. Our institutions had their beginnings well-nigh with the beginning of time. They have developed through the ages. Magna Charta only marked a period in their growth; the assertion of the rights of the Commons marked another; our Revolution marked another; the adoption of our Constitution marked another still. Our institutional law, therefore, the spirit of our written Constitution, as well as that instrument itself, forbids the establishment of monarchy by American authority, in devising new governments for our possessions. Partisanship shrieks "imperialism," and asks where we find words to prevent the development of a czar, beginning with absolute power in our possessions and ending with absolute power in the Republic, if such power as the Government claims the Constitution confers be exercised.

I answer: I find the impossibility of such a development in our Constitution itself; but also, and as fully, in our institutions. I find it in the speech of the people; in the maxims of liberty; in our blood; in our history; in the tendencies of our race. Words would not prevent autocracy if the desire for a king were in the hearts of the people. Words can not bestow republican institutions if the idea of and preference for an absolute ruler is in the minds, traditions, and practices of a people, as they are in Asia.

And words can not impose a czar upon a people whose very speech is the speech of self-government, whose ideals of self-rule for centuries have grown clearer, brighter, dearer. And those who utter fear of "imperialism," meaning by that the overthrow of our republican institutions, are either insincere or else unbelievers in the soundness of American institutions, the purity of the American heart, and the noble intentions of the American mind.

OUR PROGRESS DUE TO OUR INSTITUTIONS AS WELL AS TO OUR CONSTITUTION AND SOMETIMES IN SPITE OF OUR CONSTITUTION.

I have no respect for constitutional learning which deals alone with the written words of the Constitution, or even with the intention of its framers, and ignores the sources and spirit of that great instrument. The Constitution did not give us free institutions; free institutions gave us our Constitution. All our progress toward liberty and popular government, made since the adoption of the Constitution, has been the spirit of our institutions working out its sure results, through the Constitution when possible, and over it when necessary.

Jefferson wrote, in the Declaration of Independence, a denunciation of slavery and called it an "execrable commerce;" it was stricken out at the request of Georgia and South Carolina, and years afterwards slavery was recognized in our Constitution. But slavery was opposed to the spirit of our institutions, and while legalized by our Constitution and defended by armies as brave as ever marched to battle, constitutional slavery went down before institutional liberty; and Appomattox was the capitulation of the word of death in our Constitution to the spirit of life in our institutions.

The Constitution contemplated and provided for the election of Presidents by electors, who should select the best man to preside over the Republic, irrespective of the people's choice. That was the intention of the fathers. But in that they did not correctly interpret the spirit and tendency of our institutions, which is toward getting the Government as close to the people as possible; and so, in spite of the Constitution, in spite of the intention of the fathers, in spite of the fact that this plan was pursued for several elections, the spirit of our institutions prevailed over our Constitution, and no Presidential elector now dare cast his ballot against the candidate for whom the people instruct him to vote.

Every amendment of our Constitution marks the progress of our institutions.

Wherever the Constitution has correctly interpreted our institutions it has lived; wherever it has not correctly interpreted our institutions, it has died. Wherever our Constitution has been weak and insufficient in its apparent expressed powers, the spirit of our institutions has given it life. Read Marshall's opinions; read most of our great constitutional decisions; read the whole history of American constitutional progress, if you would know the beneficent influence of our institutions on our Constitution. Our institutions are not the destroyers of our Constitution, as partisanship would have men believe. No; our institutions are the saviors of our Constitution. The doctrine of implied powers, which has saved the country and the Constitution too, has been made possible only by reading our Constitution by the light of our institutions, as Hamilton and Marshall did.

OUR INSTITUTIONS AS WELL AS OUR CONSTITUTION OUR SECURITY.

And so our security, the security of our island wards, the security of liberty, is not in the written word of the Constitution alone; it is there, of course, but it is in our institutions also, which are the spirit of the Constitution, which illuminate and emphasize the meaning of that noble instrument. England has no written constitution; some countries have had ideal written constitutions. And yet England has steady and continuous liberty and law, while those others, even with written constitutions, sometimes have had bureaucracy and military absolutism. They had the forms of liberty and popular government in these written constitutions, but they did not have free institutions, which alone make formal constitutions living and vital things. England, without a written constitution, is almost as free a government as ours. Law reigns supreme. The poorest gatherer of rags has equal rights before the bar of justice with belted earl or millionaire, and those equal rights are impartially enforced. Neither wealth nor title are favored more than poverty or humble rank in the courts of England; and even royalty appears as witness, the same as his meanest subject.

The Government itself is subject to the will of the people; and no ministry remains in power in face of an adverse majority, or forces into law an act of which the people disapprove. The suffrage is constantly enlarging, and the rights of labor are almost as carefully guarded by the laws of England as by ours. England's treatment of Ireland has been harsh, severe, unjust; and yet even there the spirit of a larger liberty is gradually growing, and Parliament has put through a measure in the interest of the Irish tenant, compelling the landlord to sell his land whether he wants to or not, at a price fixed by others than himself, and enabling the tenant to buy the land by the payment of his rent. Tolerance, justice, and individual liberty are steadily developing throughout the British Empire, instead of diminishing.

To-morrow's RECORD could be filled with examples of the exercise of free government throughout England's dominions and of laws in the interests of labor, of poverty, of life's unfortunates. And yet England has no written constitution. But she has institutions, free institutions, institutions similar to those we have here in America. We surpass England in having developed free institutions, until our Constitution, which is the highest expression of free institutions, has been produced. And the most inspiring thing in all the history of human hope is the development of free institutions on either side of the ocean, by two great peoples, one in blood, speech, religion, law, and in their world-wide mission, but two peoples in nationhood, in interests, and in destiny.

OUR INSTITUTIONS NECESSARY TO UNDERSTAND OUR CONSTITUTION.

It is the free institutions of England that preserve and increase the liberty of Englishmen, and diminish and destroy the authority of the monarch, who is now only the personification of the Nation—the emblem of the Empire. It is England's free institutions that, in Egypt, in Hongkong, in Ceylon, in the Malay States, in India, have given the people of those dark places the fruits of liberty to eat for the first time in all the strange history of the oppressed and wasted Orient. And it is our free institutions, as well as our Constitution, that in America make kings impossible, and have, for a hundred years, wrought for a larger liberty and a more popular government.

And it is the spirit of our institutions, as well as our Constitution, that will prevent the abuse of power by American authority in Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, or any other spot blessed by the protection of our flag—aye, and write, "Accursed!" across the brow of him who, even in thought, would wield a scepter. It is our free institutions, working now by one method and now by another, after the fashion of our practical race, that will establish order, equal laws, free speech, unpurchasable justice, and "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" throughout our ocean possessions and prepare the way for the Constitution itself.

For, Mr. President, our institutions can go to these people before our Constitution goes to them. Our institutions can precede our Constitution, as they did here in America itself. Did not Washington and his countrymen have free institutions for years before the Constitution was adopted? Did not the signers of the Declaration of Independence have the spirit of free institutions, although the Constitution was not thought of at that time? Where our institutions go, there our Constitution may go, when conditions justify it, for our Constitution is the last and highest and most precious expression of our institutions. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."

It is our institutional law, therefore, of which men should inquire who would know the meaning and the life of our constitutional law. We have heard "Constitution," "the letter of the Constitution;" we have listened for our institutions, and in vain. And yet is it not written that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life?" Is it not written that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God?" I respect not the expounders of constitutional law who have not learned the history of our institutions, of which the Constitution is the richest fruit, until that history is a part of their being.

I respect not constitutional charlatanism that fastens its eye on the printed page alone, disdains our institutions as interpreting it, and refuses to consider the sources of that Constitution—the development of our present form of government for a century and a half from the old crown charters, the English struggle for the rights of man regulated by equal laws which preceded that, the spirit of Dutch independence, Dutch federation, and Dutch institutions, working upon that, and still back to the counsels of our Tenton fathers in the German forests in the dim light of a far-distant time.

KNOWLEDGE OF CHARACTER OF A PEOPLE NECESSARY TO UNDERSTAND THEIR INSTITUTIONS.

If a people adopt a written instrument, you must understand that people and their institutions before you understand the writing. You can not separate a people and their history from a written constitution which is only a part of that history. The same words by one people may have a different meaning used by another people. Any writing can only be an index to the institutions of a people. A people's institutions are the soul of the written and unwritten law. You must understand the French people, their history, and their institutions, before you can understand their written constitution. You must understand the American people, our history, and our institutions before you can understand our Constitution.

Our institutions embrace individual liberty and self-government, but they also embrace organization and administration.

They are the expression of the characteristics and tendencies of our race, as are the institutions of every people. Our race is the most self-governing but also the most administrative of any race of history. We are the explorers, the colonizers, the administrators of the world. We are this, not from necessity, but from irresistible impulse, from instinct, from racial laws inherited from our forefathers. Even in our own national history our pioneers reclaimed Kentucky and the Mississippi wilderness; they crossed the Rockies and seized Oregon; even when their homes behind them were still surrounded by virgin forest and untouched plain, they explored new regions and claimed new empires, and left behind them the crimson trail of their own blood, shed that the march of our race might not be stayed.

They did this because they could not help it. And wherever our race has gone it has governed, and wherever it has governed law, order, justice and the rights of man have been established and defended. All this has been in obedience to our institutions, which, in turn, are merely expressive of racial character. Our institutions are carried in the breasts of American citizens and soldiers wherever they go.

CONSTITUTION CAN NOT BE READ BY THE DICTIONARY ONLY.

So we have in our Constitution not only express words of power to acquire and govern new lands, as our race had always done, but those words must be read as the large expression of our institutions as a people. If our institutions are not adapted to administration as well as self-government; if they are fixed and unyielding; if our racial instincts are against expansion, organization and administration of governments; if our history and traditions are reactionary, then these words of power in our Constitution must be read as power merely to dispose of and regulate territory possessed at the time the Constitution was written and in the way then established.

Whatever our history, our race tendencies, our institutions, these large and vital meanings must pour through the Constitution, which is their medium, and without which the Constitution is only an assemblage of lifeless words. We can not read our Constitution by the dictionary only; we must read it by the great lexicon of our institutions and their history. We can not read it by the temporary intentions of the fathers only; we must read it by all the experience of all our past as a race, and all the necessities of all our future as a people. Even the wisest of the fathers saw but poorly into our future with their thoughts, but they comprehended all that future with their race instincts. For example, Jefferson said we had territory enough for our posterity to the thousandth generation, and there spoke his thought; but at that very moment he was securing Louisiana, even when he was declaring that he had no constitutional power to do so, and there spoke the instincts of our race. In a century the Republic will number more than 200,000,000 souls; problems undreamed of by the fathers will arise; they will be unsolvable if the Constitution is but an instrument of words; they will be solved if the Constitution is the expression of our institutions.

And so, when we read those institutional words—

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States"—

we must read them as the utterance of the most vigorous branch of the world's greatest expanding and administering people. Coiled up in those words of racial purposes and power is all the energy of Raleigh and of Drake, of Clive and Cook, of Winthrop, Smith, and Penn, of that whole resistless people that has poured around the world its healing tide of civilization, always and everywhere giving equal rights under equal laws, protecting commerce, planting social method, and establishing the statutes of the Almighty Father to whom our race has ever looked, upon whose Name we have ever called, and of whose divine Will we are the agents in our day.

These words of power in our Constitution contain the law of our growth; they are the statute of the free hand to achieve that growth; and back of them is the guaranty of our institutions that, beneath that free hand, justice and liberty shall dwell among the peoples given into our keeping. And it is not possible that such power will be perverted or abused until our institutions, rooted in the soil of centuries, are no more, and until the high character and purposes of the American people are, by some malign miracle, changed and debased.

In the end it all comes to that—faith in the American people who, as I believe, are the trustees under God of the civilization of the world in the great day of our sovereignty now dawning. It is this faith which exalts our service to the Republic to the dignity of a rite. It is a faith the American people hold with a silent fervor that gives them power and purity; and woe to them and to us if we justify not that faith by our works—for "faith without works is vain."

If, then, the Constitution gives Congress a free hand over our possessions, how shall that power be exercised over each? How shall we deal with Porto Rico, whose case is immediately before us? This is the second question involved in the present discussion, and the answer is that we should give the people of that island a civil government adapted to their needs, and with that civil government we should give them reciprocity of trade with us.

HYPOCRISY OF DEMOCRATIC FREE-TRADE PROPOSITION.

Mr. President, the partisan opposition pretend to want free trade not only with Porto Rico, but with the Philippines also. But there is no sincerity in their attitude, for they advocate free trade with our new possessions, they say, because they are a part of the Republic, as our States and organized Territories are a part of the Republic, and in the same sentence advocate the abandonment of the possessions themselves—which is an antagonism in premises and a nonsequitur in conclusion. This partisan opposition asks free trade with Porto Rico and the Philippines not because they believe in it, except as they believe in free trade with all the world, but to frighten the timid with incorrect statements about competition with pauper labor, and so to induce the Nation to abandon these priceless possessions.

That is the motive of the partisan opposition in urging free trade with Porto Rico. It is an issue they shall not have. Reciprocity is the policy first announced by the President of the United States, followed by formal bills in both Senate and House. When, later, the necessity for money for Porto Rico was believed to be urgent and instant, a bill to raise it by the method which was thought to be the best at the moment was reported in the House. The supporters of that bill in the House stated that the tax it proposed was a temporary expedient, and that reciprocity was to follow it. But after that bill had passed the House and had come to the Senate, the President, through a second message to Congress, recommended an expedient—the appropriation of more than $2,000,000 collected from the present tariff between this country and Porto Rico (and which is more than the House bill would have yielded during its entire life)—which gives the island and its people the money needed for the present without the tariff provided for in the bill which had passed the House, and which now enables us to stand for the reciprocity of trade which the President had announced from the first as our policy and duty.

And so the statesmanlike recommendation of the President relieves us from the necessity of long deferring reciprocity with our little island and takes from an obstructing partisan opposition an issue which it had attempted to appropriate for the purpose of blinding the American people, and thus stripping the Republic of those possessions which have cost the Nation so much in money and in blood.

Can men ask why members of the House voted for the House tariff bill, and why we do not vote for the same measure here? The answer is that, with the immediate necessity for revenue for Porto Rico confronting the House, it had that reason for its course. Were that the situation here our similar action might be similarly justified. But our appropriation of more than $2,000,000 the Government had already collected from the present tariff between this country and Porto Rico, giving Porto Rico more ready money at this very moment than the tariff bill which passed the House would have afforded in the two years of its life, takes from the Senate the reason for voting for that bill which was influential with the House.

By this appropriation the Porto Ricans should have money enough to last till a scheme of local taxation on land and the products of land, on luxuries and stimulants, on the scores of approved subjects of taxation, can be adopted and put in operation; or until experience shall compel or justify a continuous tariff.

PUERTO RICO NO PRECEDENT FOR PHILIPPINES.

Reciprocal trade with Porto Rico is no precedent for the same thing with the Philippines. None of our measures with Porto Rico are necessary methods for our administration of government in the Pacific archipelago any more than our Hawaiian bill furnishes an example for Porto Rican legislation. The free hand given Congress by the Constitution means appropriate measures for Porto Rico determined by the conditions of that island and its relations to us and to the world; appropriate measures for the Philippines determined by the same considerations of wisdom; appropriate legislation for Hawaii, determined by like standards of common sense; appropriate action as to Cuba and to such other portions of the earth as may become ours or fall under our protection, as conditions and all the elements of sound judgment may dictate in each particular case.

And there is no business in the world that would not run into bankruptcy on any other plan. To declare for a uniform policy of government or taxation in the beginning; to ignore differences of peoples, of distance, of location with reference to other markets, of resources in comparison with our own, and of all the long catalogue of facts out of the consideration of all of which alone, sane conclusions can come, is to write "failure" on the swelling sails of the largest, noblest, most hopeful movement ever launched by any people upon the seas of world endeavor. And such a uniform policy is what the opposition to the Government urges in order to defeat the whole movement of expansion; and we decline to adopt the opposition's programme, either by declaring for uniform tariff or for uniform free trade.

THE ATTEMPT TO CONFUSE THE ISSUE.

I repeat, that it is for this purpose that those who, for partisan reasons, oppose the Government, attempt to intertwine a tariff with the constitutional principle of a free hand. They try to mingle reciprocity with Porto Rico with Calhoun's doctrine that the Constitution, of its own force, extends over "territory belonging to the United States." If a continuous tariff were inextricably involved with Lincoln's constitutional principle of a free hand, for which Lincoln's party stands to-day as he stood forty years ago, I should fight to have a continuous tariff adopted. For the power to act freely with our possessions is the best condition on which we can successfully keep them; and to surrender them is treason to our future.

But the imposition of a tariff is not involved in the constitutional principle of a free hand. The very reverse is true. This is proved by the statement of the principle itself, and it can not be stated too often, for its statement is its best support. The free hand, under the Constitution, means that we can adopt reciprocity with Porto Rico, if that is wisest and best for Porto Rico and for us; a Territorial form of government in Hawaii, if that is wisest and best for Hawaii and for us; a tariff relation with our possessions in the Far East, if that is wisest and best; and do anywhere and at all times what is wisest and best for our possessions and for us within the fundamental prohibitions in the Constitution. It does not mean uniform tariff or uniform free trade, but exactly the reverse. And so the highest exercise of the constitutional free hand is the adoption of reciprocity with Porto Rico, because that is wisest and best for her and for us at the present time and is a fulfillment of implied national engagements.

Gentlemen of a partisan opposition, you shall not make this false issue. You shall not be permitted to say that reciprocity with Porto Rico means that Calhoun's doctrine is again alive and that the Constitution, without our consent, extends over the territory which that Constitution itself declares is "territory belonging to the United States." And you shall not make the plea that the Constitution extends over our possessions; that they are therefore a part of the Republic as our States and organized Territories are a part of the Republic, with full free trade; that if we have free trade with our possessions we will come into competition with their labor; and that, therefore, we should get rid of those possessions—I say you shall not make that plea without having that fallacy exposed to the people. For if, as you declare, the Constitution does extend over these possessions, if they are a part of the United States, then you, if you were in power, could not get rid of them; for no power can alienate territory that has become a part of the United States, in the sense that our States are part of the Republic and that, as the opposition insists, all of our new possessions shall be immediately made a part of it—nay, are a part of it now.

So that if your position is correct, gentlemen of the opposition, your success in the coming elections would not relieve Americans from competition with Filipino labor, which you say free trade would create, but, on the contrary, would forever fasten that competition upon us. For Democratic success would be declared by you to mean that the people indorse the Calhoun theory that the Constitution extends over these islands; that they thereby are a part of the United States, with free trade and all privileges of States; and if that is so, it is a condition you could never change, since you could not alienate a part of the United States.

But if the Government prevails among the people in the coming election, it means that we can do as we please with these possessions, even to alienating them, if the interests of the Republic demand it—though that contingency is unthinkable. If we are right, we can protect ourselves from Filipino labor, if it should be found necessary to do so. If the opposition is right, free trade is there now, and there irrevocably and forever.

RECIPROCITY WITH PUERTO RICO A VALUABLE EXPERIMENT.

Reciprocity with Porto Rico will help that island; it can not hurt us. It will help us as much as it will help Porto Rico. It affords us a safe experiment with our possessions at the very beginning of our experience as an administering power. A Nation of 70,000,000 of people with a continent for its home, and practiced in all the arts of industry, can not suffer in competition with an island smaller than a single county of Texas, more than a thousand miles from our nearest port and peopled by fewer inhabitants than any one of several of our large cities, poverty stricken and prostrate, ignorant of the meaning of self-government, and beholding modern civilization as through a glass darkly. If the American Republic, just embarked upon the grandest world career of all time, fears competition with the least of its possessions before we have tried the experiment, let us strike our colors as a sovereign power, tack from our course marked out by the high inspiration of great events, put into the port of decay, go out of commission, and let the mighty voyage on which our Nation started be sailed by other peoples of bolder hearts, loftier faiths, and eyes of clearer vision, as the opposition to expansion and to our entire world career would have us do.

Reciprocity with Porto Rico is not only a matter of duty and good policy—it is a measure of economic wisdom. It is a part of the reciprocity for which the great statesmen of the Republic have planned and toiled. And it is reciprocity, not with a foreign country, but with our own possession. It is a reciprocity of nature; Porto Rican products supply what we need and can not so well produce; we supply what Porto Rico needs and can not as well produce. It is a reciprocity decreed by natural laws to which our acts must in the end conform.

When our markets are open to Porto Rican products, industry will and must of necessity be be stimulated all through our island, and Porto Rico, now desolate, will be placed in the position of prosperity justified by its resources, location, and possibilities. She will herself pay all the money needed for her government with greatest ease. And with her prosperity she will in turn endow us. Her markets will exclusively be ours, for our tariff against Europe and the world will be her tariff against Europe and the world, and so our clothing, flour, corn, implements, and all the products of our farms, mills, and looms will have exclusive markets there. And the more prosperous we make her by offering our markets to Porto Rico, the more she can buy of us, and will. Increasing prosperity means increasing desires; increasing prosperity means more money to satisfy those desires.

And so reciprocity creates a new and exclusive market for what we raise and make, and supplies the money to make that market valuable—supplies the money by buying from our own island necessities now purchased from foreign lands. But to close our markets to our own possession or to make those markets dear and difficult is to take from our masses the opportunity to purchase at lowest prices the necessities produced on our own territory; and to make the markets of our own dependency dear and difficult to our producers is to deny to ourselves the opportunity to sell our own products at best prices to our own possession. It may be that experience will demonstrate the contrary, or that experience will confirm these apparently clear conclusions; but until experience does demonstrate the contrary reason indicates that reciprocity with our own possessions is a logical and desirable result of expansion, and that obstruction to trade between us and our possessions is a negation of expansion. It is unwise to refuse the instruction of an experiment that can not injure us and that we owe to our island as a matter of justice and fulfillment of implied national obligations. And now that we have given Porto Rico more ready money immediately than any tariff that has been proposed would give in two years, the Senate has not a reason left which influenced the House in passing the House bill.

THE EXPERIMENT CONCLUSIVE.

And the reciprocity recommended by the President in his first message, and made possible by our appropriation of more than $2,000,000 to the Porto Ricans as recommended in his second message, gives us this experiment in insular administration, right at the outset, that will not occur again—an experiment that will indicate the results of reciprocal exchange of products between us and our possessions as satisfactorily as if that course had been pursued as to all, just as a drop of some new compound in the chemist's test tube reveals all its qualities as completely as if a gallon of it had been examined, which, if dangerous, would have destroyed the experiment, and the experimenter, too.

It may be that reciprocity with Porto Rico will suggest consequences so damaging, if experienced in larger measure, that it will be abolished even there, and never again proposed in the development of our policy as an administrator of government in our island possessions. It may be that it will show the fears of many to be groundless, and discover benefits and blessings undreamed of even by its advocates, and thus furnish a light for our now unillumined pathway as an administrator of insular dominion. And whatever the results of reciprocity with Porto Rico, they will enable us to outline a policy as to our new possessions based on actual experience.

But to permanently continue a tariff between the Republic and "territory belonging to the United States," as though that territory were a foreign country and not our own possession, would be to leave unsolved all the problems before us and unanswered all the speculation in which it is our duty to indulge in thinking out the best way to administer our ocean empire. And we will not refuse this instruction in our new task, afforded us by the same favoring Providence that placed the task itself before us. We have before us a new career, and the censure or applause of the world and history; and we have an object lesson which can not injure us and can not fail to enlighten us; and we will avail ourselves of it.

EFFECT OF OUR ACTION ON LATIN AMERICA.

Weighty as these reasons are, there is another charged with almost destiny-determining consequences. It is the effect of our action on the Latin-American—the Spanish-American—mind, over which our influence has been growing for a quarter of a century, and which the welfare of the Republic requires shall become controlling. It has been the dream of American statesmen for three-quarters of a century to make this Republic the friend and protector of the weaker South American republics, until finally, in imagination, the colors of our flag might intertwine with theirs, the symbol of mutual trust, mutual affection, mutual trade, mutual prosperity, and mutual defense.

Into deeds this great thought has gradually grown until pan-American congresses actually convene beneath the Stars and Stripes, and the Bureau of the American Republics is a part of the machinery of our Government. Our growing influence in South America is fraught with blessings to the Republic and to those countries too, second only to the trade of the Orient. This great advantage, this long-fostered influence in South America, we propose to foster still. We have appropriated to Porto Rico more than $2,000,000 ready money as suggested by the President. We will adopt a civil government and reciprocal trade. And thus, by a generosity without precedent, we establish forever our friendship with all Latin America which Republican statesmen have so long, so patiently, and so painfully been erecting.

Why will Latin-Americans be influenced in our favor by this course? Think of the circumstances! This island of beauty and natural wealth came to us like a bride to the arms of her beloved. Where Luzon resisted Porto Rico submitted—no, she did not submit; she welcomed us. Where Cuba was turbulent, Porto Rico was and is tranquil. We do not remind Porto Rico of her unfitness for self-government; she asserts it herself and asks our instruction. With a humility that touches the hearts of the American people she asks our protection.

Sir, where our flag is fired on my voice is for war, overwhelming, relentless, decisive war, till resistance is utterly exterminated; but where our flag is welcomed my voice is for mercy and loving-kindness for the very same reason that it is for war when that flag is opposed. Bullets for bullets, but bread for blessings. Porto Rico came to us like Ruth, saying, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

Thus comes this little land, pleading, like Ruth, only that she may glean in the harvest after the reapers. And she is hungry; we will feed her. She asks for the liberty to live; we will free the hands of her industry. She is bruised and wounded and weak; we will soothe her bruises, heal her wounds, strengthen her weakness. The American people will have it so. Call it sentiment, if you will; but sentiment is the strongest quality of the American character. It is sentiment that has inspired all the heroism of our heroic history and written on the statute books of the Republic every law that will, in the world's future, be the justification for our existence.

Our giving reciprocity of trade to this faithful little island, then, will inspire confidence throughout Latin America. It will increase that friendship which is the basis of all genuine international understandings. It will encourage other peoples to welcome our protection whenever it may be to our interest to extend it; and it will be the unimpeachable witness at the bar of the nations and of history to our fidelity to our national pledges, even when only implied, and to the purity of national purposes, even when not specifically declared.

But if we had refused reciprocity of trade to our own island, that came to us willingly, and to whom our national promises were at least impliedly made, every envious nation of Europe would have pointed all South America to that act, denounced us as betrayers of the confidence reposed in us, and planted distrust of us in the hearts of millions who should look to us as their friend and elder brother. As the power that is to be the chief councilor among the nations of the western world; as the power that is, as it were, to be the presiding officer in the congress of the peoples of this hemisphere, with all the incalculable advantages to them and to us that come from such relations, we must not destroy, but we must increase their faith in us.

And our treatment of Porto Rico, which is of their blood and speech and faith, will advance us decades in their confidence and esteem. It is a situation in which the future sleeps. The economic results of any fiscal act that has been proposed in either branch of Congress are temporary; but their effect upon our future as the dominant power of the Western Hemisphere, and therefore of the world, is permanent and beyond computation. Tens of millions of money might be spent and years of patient effort given to create an opportunity for binding the common people and the governments of Central and South America to us in confidence and affection, equal to the present one, which Fortune has placed before us. And it will not be thrown away.

And this relation of friendship, which we have so long been cultivating, and which we will now make stronger, means for us, on its material side, increasing and finally predominance of trade throughout the Western Hemisphere, and therefore new and practically exclusive markets for all our farmers raise and all our factories make. And if we refuse to consider this phase of the situation we refuse to do our duty to the American people, whose servants we are, and fail to discharge our national obligations to a people that welcomed us.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IMMEDIATELY REQUIRED.

For these reasons I favor immediate reciprocity, and I shall go on record, if I am able to be present, as voting for amendments giving immediate and unrestricted freedom of trade to our island of Porto Rico. But if we in the Senate who believe that Porto Rico should have reciprocity at once are not able to so amend the civil-government bill here, I shall, after voting for reciprocity amendments, vote for the civil-government bill as recently modified by the committee, because we must not deny civil government to the people of Porto Rico a moment longer; because the bill, as now modified, insures reciprocity with Porto Rico as soon as the civil government of that island provides a system of taxation of its own; and because the bill, as now changed, gives free food, clothing, and implements to the islanders at once.

So that the sooner Porto Rico gets civil government the quicker it will get absolute reciprocity, under the modifications which the committee have finally made to the bill. I should be glad if the bill could be so separated that we might vote for civil government without the revenue feature, although the committee have now modified that feature so as to insure early freedom of trade—and this modification is much better than the House proposition, and infinitely preferable to the present tariff arrangement between this country and Porto Rico. But as the bill stands, unless we can amend it further, we must vote for it as modified by the committee, or else vote against civil government altogether; and civil government must no longer be denied to the people of Porto Rico. Longer delay of civil government to these people is denial of justice.

And so, after voting for immediate and unrestricted reciprocity amendments, I shall vote for the civil-government bill because it does establish civil government at once, and because, under the recent modification by the committee, it also establishes absolute reciprocity in the near future. It ought to establish unrestricted trade instantly, and it may be that the House will so amend it if we should not so amend it here. But if we are not able to so amend it here, and if the House should not so amend it, but adopts the modified civil-government bill, the committee's late modification does give us the absolute certainty of unrestricted trade at no distant date.

On the other hand, if we deny civil government to Porto Rico, if we leave the present tariff untouched and deal with our island as if it were a foreign country, we make no progress of any kind toward helping Porto Rico. It is, therefore, better to adopt the civil-government bill, with the revenue feature as now modified by the committee, if we can not agree to further amend it, than to deny all constructive legislation to the island. The bill providing for a tariff both ways, about which there has been so much conflict, is not before us now. The committee's final modification, made after consideration of opposing views, has destroyed that bill, admitted the principle of reciprocity to be desirable, and provided for its partial realization immediately and its complete realization soon.

While the bill as a whole is still not what I would have it, in its failure to give immediate reciprocity to Porto Rico, and in other particulars, and while it may have to be amended by future Congresses, it does establish a working civil government which must not be delayed another moment, and does insure early reciprocity, and so is a step in the right direction in our progress as an administering Nation, and is a recognition of those great principles on which that progress depends.

MEANING OF OUR NEW NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. President, the great movement on which the American people have embarked is a movement of conscience as well as of power; of civilization as well as of commerce. It touches the shores of every sea. Directly or indirectly it affects all humanity. We go forth on a world career; we must conduct it with a world statesmanship—a statesmanship that considers the effect of every law we pass upon the peoples over whom our influence is extending and upon the world at large, as well as upon ourselves.

Sir, administration of government means more than balance sheets; more than weights or measures. It means this, but it also means the weighing of the hearts of men and the balance sheets of the affections of the governed people. Why to-day do England's colonists voluntarily tax themselves by preferential tariffs in order to give England the advantage of their trade? Why to-day do Canadians, Australians, and sons of the Empire everywhere voluntarily enlist to fight and die in far and savage lands that the dominion of England's flag may be extended? Why to-day are England's governed people themselves among the bravest of those who charge to their deaths in defense of that banner? What, within a single half century, has thus reversed English colonial history and experience? Simply a statesmanship practical enough to consider sentiment as a real factor in the government of peoples.

The American masses, in whose breasts dwell the purity, power, and hope of the Republic and of the world, understand this well. They mean to profit by the world's large lesson. They feel and deeply know that we are henceforth the master people among mankind. And they mean that our dominion shall be exercised in righteousness. They doubt not that human progress is one vast and swelling harmony which not even all the discords of history can destroy, and they mean that in all that divine and splendid composition the noblest, highest, purest, tenderest note shall be that struck by the American people as the sovereign power of earth.

Military Academy Bill.

SPEECH
OF
HON. HENRY C. SMITH,
OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 15, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11589) making appropriations for the Military Academy—

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The educational features of the bill under consideration meet my hearty approval.

I have the honor to represent a district which contains one of the largest educational institutions of our country, which leads me to take cognizance of and an interest in the matter of the pending bill.

That institution is the great University of Michigan, which has and exerts an influence throughout our land. It may almost be said to control the legislation of Congress, for it has 19 representatives in this Congress—more, I believe, than any other institution of learning. And yet, with all of its far-reaching power and influence, with all of its civilizing influence, the cost of that institution of learning from the beginning till now has not been, I am told by its president, as much as the cost of an ordinary battle ship. There is no question of the patriotism of our people. There is no question that there is no pressing necessity for a large standing army. The history of the past forty years shows plainly that we have an Army available at all times, because within the last forty years over 400,000 men have given up their lives in this country for the flag. [Applause.]

Our armies prove successful, unconquerable, and formidable because they are men of education, men fighting for wife and home. They are not mere hired assassins, paid butchers, but real patriots.

The flag means more to the poor man in this country than to any other. It is a grand spectacle to see the poor man leave the farm and the home, part paid for—all that is dear to him—leave duty to wife and children, to fight his country's battles, without hope of adequate reward. And my heart goes out not to the trained officer in command, but to the common soldier who faces the leaden hail to see the flag ride in triumph above the smoke of battle. He is my hero.

The patriotic fervor found among our people in times of national peril leads me to believe that there is no call upon this Government to maintain at great expense a large and useless standing army.

The people love the flag, not because of the grand achievements of our armies on land and on sea, but because that flag represents their sacrifice; because they know and feel that wherever we may go, if the Stars and Stripes wave above us, there freedom is.

The law of self-defense is instinct in the lowest of God's creation. And it animates the loftiest and the gentlest of all creation.

The great General Grant, when Lee passed his sword to him at Appomattox, and all was over, did not want to humiliate the fallen and the vanquished. He sought to urge the erring ones to return to their homes, and to the pursuits of peace, and to the Union.

So long as our schools teach patriotism, that war is for peace and not for conquest, they ought and will be sustained, and not longer.

General Deficiency Bill.

Imperialism, intrigues, and secret alliances threaten the life of the Republic. All patriotic citizens should join in the battle to save the Republic, and when that victory is won the people can then carry all needful reforms to a successful conclusion.

HON. JOHN S. LITTLE, OF ARKANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 14, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11537) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes—

Mr. LITTLE said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Many people in this country believe that there exists between this country and Great Britain "an understanding" that reaches far beyond the ordinary relations of friendship that should properly mark the extent of this country's relations with the kingdoms and monarchies of Europe.

Many potent evidences exist to show that there is a secret understanding or, in other words, a secret alliance existing between this country and Great Britain. No thoughtful man can study the history of these two nations for the last two years without entertaining the gravest suspicions that such is the fact.

England for many years has foreseen the danger of an alliance by her neighbors that would threaten her national existence, and as soon as war had been declared between this country and Spain she at once set about to show great friendship for this country and to inspire bad blood between this country and Germany.

The greatness as well as the friendship of the Anglo-Saxon race was heralded in every pro-English newspaper on both sides of the ocean and sung by every pro-English patronizing citizen in this country. Everything possible was done and said to belittle Germany and to engender bitter feelings between their citizens and ours. And several times during the Spanish war it was made to appear that we were on the very verge of war with Germany, which afterwards proved to be without any foundation. It is boldly claimed by the English sympathizers here and in England that England, on account of her great friendship for us, stood by us in the Spanish war. If she did, it was because we did not need her assistance, and she could make the pretension without sacrifice and use the "good understanding" to her own advantage. And well has she accomplished her purpose.

Mr. McKinley, his advisers and diplomats, have been but clay in the potter's hands. She inspired the imperial policies that are being pursued by this Administration, and drew our nation into the politics of Europe and engaged them in the unholy business of conquest and empire. Strange as it may seem, yet it is true that no sooner had this purpose been accomplished, and the "good understanding" thoroughly established, than she set about to overthrow the two little Dutch Republics in South Africa. And while that small band of liberty-loving people are struggling to maintain their independence against overwhelming odds, our Government officials look on with indifference, while they compare the list of dead and captured from the Philippine Islands with like returns from South Africa. No official expression of sympathy, no offer of friendly mediation is made; and when it is learned that their envoys are coming to the nation's capital to ask the good offices of this Government in bringing about a peaceful cessation of hostilities, consternation seizes the Administration, the Cabinet is assembled, consultations are doubtless had with the British ambassador, Mr. Pauncefote, and it is given out to the press that they will be received as citizens but not as official representatives of their Governments. The Administration is bound hand and foot by its advocacy of English policies, and stands dumb while defying public sentiment and rejecting the appeals of the Boer envoys.

Mr. Chairman, I will insert as a part of my remarks an extract from an editorial and many statements not only charging but strongly tending to prove the existence of a secret alliance between this Government and Great Britain, all from the Irish World of May 5, 1900, as follows:

We charge President McKinley with having entered into a secret alliance or understanding—call it what you will, the effect is the same—with the English Government. It is the most serious charge ever brought against a President of the United States, and we do not make it upon mere assumptions or upon unsubstantial grounds. But we back the charge with proofs, with evidence from the President himself, from his ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, from his Secretary of State, from his special commissioners, from his Army and Navy favorites, from his supporters in both Houses of Congress, from English cabinet officials, and from his ardent friends and backers here.

To this charge Mr. McKinley has entered two general denials, which, in strict justice to himself, we shall quote. In his message of December 5, 1899, he said:

"We have remained faithful to the precept of avoiding entangling alliances as to affairs not of our direct concern."

At the annual dinner of the Ohio Society of New York a few months ago, Mr. McKinley said:

"We are neither in alliance nor entanglement with any foreign power, but on terms of amity and cordiality with all."

Against these rather equivocal disclaimers we place the evidence spoken of above, introducing it with a synopsis as follows:

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S PRO-BRITISH UTTERANCES.

At the annual meeting in London on May 8, 1899, of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society at the Mansion House, the lord mayor presiding, United States Ambassador Choate read a letter from President McKinley which expressed warm admiration for the society's work, and added:

"This is a great year for the Anglo-Saxon race."

Ambassador Choate in a speech before the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom in London, March 15, 1899, said that President McKinley in his letter of credence "relied with confidence upon my constant endeavor during my stay in Great Britain to promote the interests and prosperity of both countries."

The Hon. Barry Foster, M. P., who was in this country in 1898, called upon President McKinley November 18. In speaking of the President, Mr. Foster said: "Quite naturally what impressed me most strongly was his good will toward Great Britain."

The most elaborate state dinner given at the White House during the present Administration was given on the evening of November 16, 1898, in honor of the Anglo-Canadian commissioners on the Alaskan boundary dispute. The English ambassador was seated in the place of honor, and the British flag was much in evidence among the table decorations.

Mr. McKinley's message of December 5, 1899, denied entangling alliances "as to affairs not of a direct concern."

The London papers of December 6, 1899, blamed Chamberlain's alliance speech at Leicester for the equivocal denial of entangling alliances in Mr. McKinley's message.

SECRETARY HAY'S ALLIANCE WORK AS AMBASSADOR TO ENGLAND.

At the Easter banquet held in the Mansion House, London, on the evening of April 20, 1898, Mr. Hay, now Secretary of State, made his first public speech as United States ambassador to England. Speaking of the relations between the United States and England, Ambassador Hay said: "The good understanding between us is based on something deeper than mere expediency. All who think can not but see there is a sanction like that of religion which binds us in partnership in the serious work of the world."

At the annual dinner of the "American" Society in London, July 4, 1898, Ambassador Hay was the principal speaker. Among other things, he said:

"Now that the day of clear and cordial understanding has come, which so many have long desired and waited for, may we not hope it will be permanent?"

The Marquis of Ripon presided.

A committee of the Anglo-American League of London, headed by its chairman, Mr. James Bryce, presented to United States Ambassador John Hay, September 8, 1898, an address congratulating him upon his acceptance of the portfolio of Secretary of State in Washington. In response to the address Colonel Hay said:

"I shall hold myself signally fortunate if I am able to do anything to continue and strengthen the relations of fraternal amity between our two nations."

AMBASSADOR CHOATE AND HIS ALLIANCE WORK.

London papers of March 12, 1899, expressed jubilation and satisfaction over the announcement that President McKinley had appointed Joseph H. Choate ambassador to England.

The gross and wanton insult hurled at the Irish in America by Joseph H. Choate, while the guest of an Irish society on Ireland's great national feast day in 1893, made him persona grata to England, a fact which influenced Mr. McKinley in making choice of an ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Ambassador Choate was the guest of the Hardwicke Club, of London, on May 6, 1899, where all the leading judges and most of the distinguished members of the English bar had assembled to welcome him. Among other things, Mr. Choate said:

"I feel very much at home to-night. A characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon race is to make ourselves at home wherever we go. Our nation has now followed your example in that respect."

Ambassador Choate, at a luncheon at the Staffordshire Agricultural Society's show at Wolverhampton, England, July 25, 1899, said he believed that no question could ever arise between the United States and Great Britain to interrupt the constant peace which had held them together during the last eighty-five years.

Ambassador Choate, speaking at the banquet of the American Society in London on July 4, 1899, said: "When an American, on hearing that I was to come to England, cried out, 'God save the Queen!' he completed my outfit, for when a man couples 'prosperity to the American people' with the other sentiment he gives an American ambassador the fullest credentials and all the diplomacy he needs."

Ambassador Choate, speaking before the Sir Walter Scott Club, in Edinburgh, Scotland, November 10, 1899, referred to "the ironclad friendship that now prevails between the two nations."

COLONIAL SECRETARY CHAMBERLAIN PROCLAIMS ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

In a speech delivered at Leicester, England, November 30, 1899, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies in Lord Salisbury's cabinet, said:

"The union, the alliance, if you please, the understanding, between these two great nations (England and the United States) is indeed a guaranty of the peace of the world."

AMBASSADOR CHOATE CORROBORATES CHAMBERLAIN.

At the annual Thanksgiving banquet held by the American Society in London on November 30, 1899, Mr. Joseph H. Choate, American ambassador to England, said: "Let England and America clasp hands across the sea, and the peace of the world is absolutely secure."

The press of England on December 1, 1899, received Mr. Chamberlain's announcement of Anglo-American alliance at Leicester with great joy, commenting upon it as an official utterance.

As early as May 13, 1898, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, England's colonial secretary and Salisbury's right-hand man, proclaimed the English intention to procure Anglo-American alliance. In a speech at Birmingham he said: "It is one of the most satisfactory results of Lord Salisbury's policy that at the present time these two great nations understand each other better than they ever have since, over a century ago, they were separated by the blunder of a British Government."

The Marquis of Salisbury, premier of England, in the course of a speech at the annual banquet of the lord mayor of London, November 9, 1898, said, in reference to the appearance of the United States as an Asiatic factor, that it was "a grave and serious event which may not conduce to the interests of peace, though I think in any event it is likely to conduce to the interests of Great Britain."

At the lord mayor's banquet in London November 9, 1899, Lord Salisbury spoke of the "happy relations existing between the United States and ourselves."

Mr. Michael Davitt put a series of questions to Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs George N. Curzon in the House of Commons March 14, 1898, with a view of eliciting information concerning Anglo-American alliance negotiations. Mr. Curzon said the questions were of such a nature that it was inexpedient to reply to them. [Loud cries of "Hear!" "Hear!" from the Unionist benches.]

In March, 1898, Sir Ellis Ashmead-Bartlett, M. P., wrote a pamphlet advocating an alliance with the United States. "Till this country," said Sir Ellis, "recurs to the alliance marked out for it by history and nature our foreign and imperial policy is bound to meet with disturbance, danger, and but too probably disaster."

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE IN SAMOA.

In March, 1899, the American and English consuls in Samoa, with Rear-Admiral Kautz, of the American Navy, commanding the Philadelphia, and Commander Sturdee, of the English navy, issued a proclamation deposing King Mataafa and requiring his followers to leave Apia on pain of forcible expulsion if he refused to obey. The King's friends made a move toward his defense, when the American and English war ships began a bombardment of native villages, burning many of them. The Anglo-American attack upon Mataafa was made in defiance of the protest of the German consul, who refused to allow the German war ship Falke to participate in the slaughter of innocent people.

Rear-Admiral Kautz, writing to his cousin, Mrs. Charles N. Lindley, of Cincinnati, Ohio, from Samoa, under date of March 23, 1898, said: "I am not at all popular here with the Germans. But I am all right with the English and hope to pull through with them."

THE ALASKA BOUNDARY AGREEMENT GAVE ENGLAND A FREE HAND AGAINST THE BOERS.

A dispatch from Washington, dated May 20, 1899, announced that the Government had been requested by England to abandon its intention to send troops to Pyramid Lake, in the disputed Alaskan territory. An order for troops to proceed there was countermanded by the War Department at the request of the Secretary of State.

The Alaska boundary modus vivendi was officially ratified October 20, 1899, by an exchange of notes between Secretary of State Hay and Mr. Tower, British chargé d'affaires. This agreement released England from complications here and enabled her to draw upon Canadian troops for the conquest of the Boers.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY ENGLAND'S ALLY AGAINST THE BOERS.

On October 12, 1899, the English colonial office officially announced that "Mr. Macrum, the United States consul in Pretoria, with the consent of his Government, has taken charge of British interests in the Transvaal." Mr. Macrum did not know that he had been loaned bodily to England until afterwards.

The President's "strictly neutral" attitude on the war in South Africa was proclaimed by Second Assistant Secretary of State Adee October 12, 1899.

The State Department announced through the press on November 4, 1899, that this Government had never recognized the independence of the Transvaal Republic.

William McKinley has refused to receive an accredited representative of the South African Republic officially. Russia, France, and Germany recognized Dr. Leyds as the Transvaal's diplomatic representative.

The appointment of Adelbert S. Hay, son of Secretary Hay, consul at Pretoria, South African Republic, to succeed Charles E. Macrum, was announced from Washington December 3, 1899.

English newspapers, commenting upon the appointment of the son of Secretary Hay as consul at Pretoria, called it "a gracious concession."

EX-CONSUL MACRUM'S EVIDENCE, WHICH HAS NOT BEEN IMPEACHED.

Ex-Consul Charles E. Marcum's charge of Anglo-American alliance, based on evidence which he secured as consul at Pretoria, which evidence has not been impeached by the State Department. Published February 14, 1900.

Reported from Washington, December 16, 1899, that Mr. McKinley was angered by the refusal of President Kruger to allow the United States Consul to supply the English prisoners in Pretoria with delicacies and money.

Secretary of State Hay, December 27, 1899, defended England's action in seizing a cargo of American flour consigned to the neutral port of Lourenzo Marques.

The London Times, December 29, 1899, said, apropos of Secretary of State, Hay's defense of England's action in seizing American flour: "The Washington Government is acting as we should have wished and expected them to act."

The Hon. Anthony M. Kelly, ex-mayor of Richmond, Va., one of the judges of the international court at Cairo, Egypt, wrote a strong protest to a home paper against the Anglo-American alliance against the Boers, which he heard the English boasting of in Cairo.

The cruiser Montgomery was sent out to the coast of Africa to do police duty for England, keeping the natives of Sierra Leone quiet while releasing British war ships for service against the Boers.

President McKinley's offer of mediation in the South African war last March was made without consultation with any other power. This course prevented a joint offer and gave England a coveted opportunity to declare that she would not tolerate intervention. This declaration made it impossible for any country to intervene in a peaceable way. The London correspondent of the New York Sun, writing under date of March 17, 1900, hinted that this complete clearance of the situation for England was the result of a previous understanding between Salisbury and McKinley.

MR. M'KINLEY'S MINISTERS AND CONSULS AS ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE PROMOTERS.

On the departure of the Australian contingent for South Africa to fight against the Boers the American consul at Sydney, New South Wales, hung a banner from the consulate which bore this inscription:

"America wishes Australia's patriots Godspeed."

Henry L. Wilson, Mr. McKinley's minister to Chile, congratulated the British minister February 22, 1900, on English successes in South Africa.

Mr. Thomas S. Harrison, United States agent and consul-general at Cairo, Egypt, and Ethelbert Watts, United States vice-consul-general, spoke in approval of Anglo-American alliance at a banquet to Gen. Sir Francis Grenfell, given by British army officers in Cairo December 25, 1899.

The London Daily News announced in December last that "the British and American ministers at The Hague have asked permission to retire to Antwerp, with a view of avoiding personal unpleasantness during the anti-English attitude of the Dutch."

MR. M'KINLEY'S SUPPORTERS IN CONGRESS DEFEAT PRO-BOER RESOLUTIONS.

Pro-Boer resolutions buried in the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives: Resolution of sympathy, introduced by Representative JETT, of Illinois, December 11, 1899; resolution of recognition, introduced by Congressman SULZER, of New York, December 16, 1899; resolution of sympathy and intervention, introduced by Representative SULZER March 1, 1900.

Senator MASON'S resolution of sympathy for the Boers, introduced December 6, 1899, has been kept from a vote by the backers and supporters of Mr. McKinley in the Senate.

A resolution introduced in the House by Congressman SULZER, of New York, asking information of the Secretary of War concerning English fortifications on our northern frontier, was adversely reported by the Republican Committee on Military Affairs, which report was sustained by the Republican majority in the House by a vote on March 20, 1900.

HAY-PAUNCEFOTE CANAL TREATY OF ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

A letter published in the London Daily Mail of May 30, 1898, from its Washington correspondent, announced that the writer had learned from "a high authority in the State Department that important preliminary steps toward an Anglo-American alliance have already been taken." He made this prediction, since verified to the dot: "The United States are to build the Nicaragua Canal and Great Britain is to have the use of it in time of war."

The Hay-Pauncefote Nicaragua Canal treaty conceded all the claims of England under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which three American Secretaries of State had declared abrogated through the repeated violations of its provisions by England.

The Hay-Pauncefote agreement also prohibited the United States from erecting fortifications on the entrances or closing the canal to its enemy in time of war.

Ambassador Pauncefote's term here extended a year, because, as the London Times said, March 3: "It is largely due to his personal action that the United States and Great Britain have been brought closer together."

WORKINGS OF THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE AT THE HAGUE PEACE CONFERENCE.

The American delegates appointed by Mr. McKinley to the peace conference held at The Hague voted with the English representatives on June 22, 1899, in the disarmament section, for the retention of dum dum bullets. All other nations voted against these horrible projectiles.

At the final session of the international peace conference at The Hague, July 21, 1899, the American delegates appointed by Mr. McKinley stood with the English delegates and prevented the abolition of dum dum or explosive bullets by civilized nations.

MR. M'KINLEY'S COMMISSIONERS ARE FOR ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

President Schurman, of Cornell University, chairman of Mr. McKinley's first Philippine commission, in a speech before the Congregational Club of New York, at the Hotel St. Denis, December 18, 1899, said:

"One of the most beneficent results of the war with Spain was the bringing together of the British and American people."

The award of the Anglo-Venezuela boundary arbitration commission, rendered October 3, 1899, sacrificed the interests and rights of the South American Republic to the Anglo-American good understanding. Ex-President Harrison, Venezuela's counsel, said of the verdict:

"The award is a matter of mutual concessions—a compromise. The decision was dictated by considerations which had nothing to do with justice to Venezuela."

MR. M'KINLEY'S FAVORITE ARMY OFFICERS FOR ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

General Merritt, Mr. McKinley's confidential agent during the Paris treaty negotiations, said at the St. David Society's dinner in New York that he sympathized with the British in the present war—that is, the war against the Boers.

At a banquet held by the New England Society of New York December 22, 1898, Gen. Wesley Merritt, Mr. McKinley's mouthpiece at the Paris peace conference, said: "I am willing to bring you testimony as to the English feeling of gratitude that we are extending our dominions to include the Tropics. We have the English feeling with us."

American Army and Navy officers in Habana and Manila honored the Queen's eightieth birthday, May 24, 1899, by holding banquets and making pro-English speeches.

MR. M'KINLEY'S NAVAL FAVORITES WANT ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND.

Rear-Admiral Sampson, McKinley's favorite naval officer, made an address at the banquet held by the British Schools and University Club of New York May 24, 1899, in which he said: "That homely proverb, 'Blood is thicker than water,' appeals to every man of us here, and is itself an outcome of the good-fellowship which has existed between our naval services for years."

Admiral Sampson, McKinley's favorite in the Navy, joined the New England Society members in singing, "God Save the Queen," at a banquet in New York December 22, 1899.

Captain Coughlin, of "Hoch der Kaiser" notoriety, an Administration naval favorite, writing in the New York Independent in May, 1899, said:

"I believe that the Americans understand and appreciate it (English good feeling), and that we are certainly moving toward an alliance."

Capt. A. T. Mahan, member of Mr. McKinley's "board of strategy," advised "Americans not to hold pro-Boer meetings; such conduct might offend England."

MR. M'KINLEY'S FRIENDS AND SUPPORTERS ANGLOMANIACS.

A petition, accompanied by a confidential circular of explanation, dated New York, July 27, 1898, was sent out in thousands for the signatures of persons in favor of Anglo-American alliance.

Mr. Whitelaw Reid, owner of the New York Tribune and Mr. McKinley's envoy to the Queen Victoria jubilee celebration, was its chief promoter.

The New York Chamber of Commerce, which has been loyal to England since it received its charter from George III, ardently supports McKinley with voice and purse.

At its one hundred and thirteenth annual dinner, November 14, 1898, "The Queen of England" was the first toast proposed. It was drunk standing, the whole company singing "God Save the Queen."

Senator DAVIS, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and one of Mr. McKinley's Paris peace commissioners, said in an interview with the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Mail, published in that paper December 13, 1898: "I favor a treaty of alliance, including the United States, England, and Japan. I do not see why other nations should object to the alliance. If they do, let them."

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, ex-minister to Spain, in a speech before the Army and Navy Club, of New York, early in February, 1899, said: "Had it not been for the unfaltering, unchanging, and loyal friendship of England, and the attitude of her minister at Madrid, your minister might have failed to do the little he did do, because the representatives at Madrid of Continental Europe were ready at any time to interfere with the plans of the United States if the British minister would only join them."

Judge William R. Day, McKinley's ex-Secretary of State and president of the Paris Peace Commission, at a banquet held in his honor by the Stark County Bar Association at Canton, Ohio, January 2, 1899, said: "If I were called upon to state the most gratifying circumstances of our foreign relations during the war, it would be in the uniformly cordial and hearty friendship of the English before and during the struggle."

Mr. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, Mr. McKinley's close friend and political supporter, made a speech in the Union Methodist Church, New York, May 15, 1898, in the course of which he said: "The two great English-speaking countries, standing shoulder to shoulder, are the most inspiring and magnificent spectacle of the century."

A banquet was held at Tampa, Fla., in honor of the Queen's birthday May 24, 1898. "The Queen of England and Empress of India" was the first toast. Army officers were present.

A letter of regret was read from President McKinley at the celebration held in Buffalo, N. Y., May 24, 1899, in honor of Queen Victoria's eightieth birthday. Chapin Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Buffalo, organized the Anglomaniac love feast, and had as guests of honor the mayor of Hamilton, Ontario, and a body of English army and navy veterans of that city. Mayor Diehl, of Buffalo, presided over the exercises, which were held in the Central High School.

At the celebration in honor of Queen Victoria's eightieth birthday held by the citizens of Tampa, Fla., May 24, 1899, American war ships were ordered to participate, which they did by firing salutes and decorating with bunting.

Commenting upon Anglomaniac celebrations held in this country in honor of the Queen's eightieth birthday, the London Times of May 25, 1898, said: "It must be among the deepest satisfactions of her age to see the unhappy feeling evocated by that sense of Anglo-Saxon brotherhood and presage of Anglo-Saxon destiny to which Colonel Taylor, of the American Society in London, gave eloquent utterance, and which President McKinley has expressed as the regard and affection which the American people cherish toward our Queen."

PROTECTING THE ALLIANCE—REPUBLICANS IN THE HOUSE DEFEATED AN INQUIRY INTO ENGLAND'S CANADIAN FORTIFICATIONS.

On March 20, 1900, the Republican Committee on Military Affairs, through Chairman HULL, reported adversely upon this resolution, introduced by Congressman SULZER, of New York:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the House of Representatives as early as possible what fortifications Great Britain is erecting, constructing, and completing along the northern frontier of the United States, especially at Puget Sound and other places on the Pacific Ocean contiguous to the State of Washington and the District of Alaska."

The question of tabling the resolution was put to the House and the Republican majority sustained it by a vote of 110 to 96.

NO OFFICIAL SYMPATHY—PRO-BOER RESOLUTIONS IN THE HOUSE SQUELCHED BY M'KINLEY'S SUPPORTERS.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1900.

Representative SULZER to-day introduced the following resolution in the House:

"Resolved, That the Republic of the United States sympathizes with the brave Boers in their struggle for freedom and independence, and hereby declares that the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

"The Congress of the United States hereby protests and remonstrates against the barbarous war now being waged by Great Britain against the patriots of South Africa, and the President is hereby authorized to take such steps as may be expedient in his judgment to secure and bring about an honorable peace between the contending parties."

The resolution was referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee, where, of course, the Republican majority buried it out of sight.

RECOGNITION RESOLUTION KILLED.

WASHINGTON, December 16, 1899.

Representative SULZER, of New York, introduced a joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists in South Africa and according belligerent rights to the Transvaal Government. The resolution was as follows:

"Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the Government of the United States recognize a condition of public war between the Government of Great Britain and the Government of the Republic of the Transvaal, and the United States of America hereby declare that they will maintain a condition of strict neutrality between the contending powers, and accord to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

"The Congress of the United States protest and remonstrate against the barbarous manner in which the war has been conducted by Great Britain, and the President is hereby authorized to take such steps as may be expedient in his judgment to secure an observance of the laws of war as recognized by all civilized nations and bring about an honorable peace."

This resolution has not been reported.

SYMPATHY RESOLUTION SQUELCHED.

WASHINGTON, December 11, 1899.

To-day Representative JETT, of Illinois, one of the influential members from the Middle West and a leading member of the Committee on Military Affairs, introduced this joint resolution in the House of Representatives:

"Whereas the people of the United States are, and have been from the time of gaining their independence, a patriotic and liberty-loving people, and at all times opposed to oppression, and have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other peoples to free themselves from domination and oppression: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States watches with deep and abiding interest the heroic struggle of the people of the South African Republic against cruelty and oppression, and it is our desire and hope that they may achieve their independence in the present struggle in which they are engaged."

The Foreign Affairs Committee, or the Republican majority of the committee, has kept this resolution pigeonholed up to date.

SENATORS BACK M'KINLEY—A PRO-BOER RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY SENATOR MASON KILLED IN COMMITTEE.

Senator MASON, of Illinois, on Wednesday, December 6, 1899, introduced a resolution in the United States Senate declaring that the sympathy of the people of the United States is with the Boers. The resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas from the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other people to free themselves from European domination: Therefore,

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That we watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the South African Republic against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty."

Senator MASON has framed his resolution in the language of the paragraph in the Republican platform relating to Cuba.

Mr. MASON'S repeated efforts to get this resolution before the Senate have been defeated by Mr. McKinley's supporters in that branch of Congress.

STOOD BY ENGLAND—THE UNITED STATES DELEGATES AT THE PEACE CONFERENCE THE ONLY BACKERS OF THE ENGLISH FORDUM DUM BULLETS.

THE HAGUE, July 21, 1899.

Baron de Staal presided at the plenary session of the International Peace Conference to-day to place the final seal upon the labors of the disarmament section.

The first part of M. Van Karnebeck's report relating to the prohibition of dropping explosives from balloons was unanimously agreed to.

M'KINLEY'S DELEGATES ENGLAND'S SERVANTS.

The second part, prohibition of the use of asphyxiating projectiles, was agreed to by all except the United States and Great Britain, whose dissent nullifies the agreement of the others.

The third part, which relates to expanding bullets, occupied the major part of the sitting, owing to the question of the dum dumbullet used by the British army.

DUMDUM BULLETS SUPPORTED BY ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. White, head of the United States delegation, made a speech opposing the prohibition of the dumdum bullet.

Captain Crozier, the military member of the United States delegation, offered as a substitute the following:

"The use of bullets should be prohibited which inflict unnecessarily cruel wounds, such as explosive bullets, and in general every kind of bullet exceeding the limits necessary to put a man immediately hors du combat."

Eight countries voted for Captain Crozier's proposal—the United States, Great Britain, Denmark, Greece, Servia, Portugal, China, and another. All except the first two named supported the substitute only in hope of securing unanimity in the conference, it being known that the impossibility of securing the adhesion of America and Great Britain to the committee's report would render futile any treaty.

GIVING WAY IN ALASKA—ENGLAND'S SUGGESTION THAT AMERICAN TROOPS BE WITHDRAWN COMPLIED WITH.

WASHINGTON, May 20, 1899.

The British Government has suggested to the State Department that, in view of the danger of a conflict between the contending factions in the disputed territory connecting Alaska and the British Northwest, the United States reconsider the reported intention to send troops to that territory.

This Government has abandoned for the present the intention to send a company of infantry to Pyramid Lake, in the disputed territory. An order for troops to proceed there was issued by the War Department, but this has been countermanded at the request of the Secretary of State.

M'KINLEY A FRIEND IN NEED—THE PRESIDENT AGREES TO A MODUS VIVENDI ON THE BOUNDARY DISPUTE TO FREE ENGLAND'S HANDS FOR THE WAR AGAINST THE BOERS.

WASHINGTON, October 20, 1899.

After an exchange of formal notes to-day between Secretary Hay and Mr. Tower, the British chargé d'affaires, the modus vivendi defining temporarily the Alaska boundary line became effective.

The preamble of the modus vivendi, omitting the references to American and British maps, is as follows:

"It is hereby agreed between the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain that the boundary line between Canada and the Territory of Alaska, in the region about the head of Lynn Canal, shall be provisionally fixed, without prejudice to the claims of either party in the permanent adjustment of the international boundary, as follows." The temporary boundary is then fixed and an agreement made for jointly policing the line and setting up temporary boundary posts.

AMERICAN CONSUL'S MAIL OPENED BY BRITISH CENSOR.

The mail for the Transvaal had been stopped at Cape Town by order of the (British) high commissioner. When the mail was finally forwarded to me, after Colonel Stowe, the consul-general at Cape Town, had secured its release, I had the humiliation, as the representative of the American Government, of sitting in my office in Pretoria and looking upon envelopes bearing the official seal of the American Government opened, and officially sealed with a sticker, notifying me that the contents had been read by the (British) censor at Durban.—From statement made by Charles E. Macrum, ex-consul to Pretoria, South African Republic, February 14, 1900.

AMERICAN CONSUL'S CABLEGRAMS DELAYED BY BRITISH CENSOR.

On November 14 I again wired the Department, stating that I could not leave without permission; that I would forfeit my post if the reasons which I would give to the Department did not prove satisfactory. This cable was delayed by the censor until December 2, when I had advices that it had just been forwarded.—From statement by Charles E. Marcum, ex-consul to Pretoria, South African Republic, February 14, 1900.

MACRUM'S TESTIMONY CORROBORATED.

Facsimile of United States official envelope opened by the censor at Durban, printed in Irish World of March 3, from the New York Journal.

After examining the contents the mail matter was replaced, and the opening closed by what is known as a "sticker," bearing the British coat of arms and the initials V. R. (Victoria Regina), and the general post-office number of the document.

AMERICAN WAR SHIP IN ENGLAND'S SERVICE—THE CRUISER MONTGOMERY SENT OUT TO THE COAST OF AFRICA ON POLICE DUTY, TO RELEASE ENGLISH SHIPS FOR SERVICE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

It was by the merest accident that the country discovered last December that the Navy Department has placed one of our war ships at England's disposal. The first knowledge the public had of the entire cooperation of one of the Departments in the Boer war was obtained through a letter of a sailor which appeared in the New York World. The writer of the letter was attached to the cruiser Montgomery. Why this ship was sent to Africa is thus explained in the letter:

"Now, about these English and Boers, we have the pleasure of cruising up and down the west coast of Africa to keep those 'niggers' quiet. Things look very bad here for the English; they took all the troops out of Sierra Leone and sent them down to Cape Town. Now those 'niggers' are breeding trouble and trying to get the best of the English.

"It seems to me and to everybody else that we are doing the work for the English."

This was denied at the Navy Department, and the station chart, showing the Montgomery to be at Montevideo, was triumphantly produced. Senator MASON, of Illinois, heard about the letter. He got hold of it. It was brief, and informed the recipient that the Montgomery had been doing patrol duty at Sierra Leone to protect the interests of the British.

Senator MASON visited the Department and inquired about it, but got little satisfaction. He then announced in a Washington newspaper his belief that the Montgomery was doing police duty for England and his purpose to inquire into it. Even after the publication it was denied at the Navy Department that the Montgomery had been at Sierra Leone at all. Afterwards the Department refused to discuss the matter, and then it was freely admitted that the Montgomery had been in those waters.

EVIDENCE FROM EGYPT—THE HON. JOHN M. KEILEY SENDS A PROTEST FROM THE LAND OF THE NILE.

A significant link of evidence comes from Egypt in the shape of a vehement letter from the Hon. John M. Keiley, one of the judges of the international court at Cairo. Judge Keiley, who was formerly mayor of Richmond, Va., is in a place where English army officers and other English officials freely discuss international relations, and the boast of McKinley's friendship for England has rung in his ears since the beginning of the war in South Africa.

The indignation aroused by these triumphant proclamations of American backing prompted Judge Keiley to write a strong letter of protest, which was addressed to the Richmond Times. The letter is dated November 18, 1899, and, among other things, Judge Keiley says:

"May I be allowed to raise a discordant note in the envious concord of hostility to a sister Republic, which seems to voice the opinion of the people of our country, as to the war on the burghers of the Transvaal?

* * * * * * *

"With only one dissent, the people of Christendom are denouncing it as the most wicked, causeless, and cruel assault made in our days by one nation on another; and that dissent comes from America. Have we forgotten our own history?

* * * * * * *

"Cut off from all the world, this little handful of farmer patriots, driven, after fifty years and more of heartless persecution, to defend their homes, numbering less than the population of Richmond, are defending their liberties against an Empire which embraces more than one-fifth of the people on the earth.

"It is a spectacle illuminating with immortal glory the dying days of a sordid century.

"And the great Republic alone of all the nations on the globe refuses them even sympathy. For shame!"

MERRITT LOVES ENGLAND—M'KINLEY'S COACH TO THE PARIS PEACE COMMISSIONERS A RED-HOT ANGLOMAN.

The New England Society of New York celebrated on the night of December 22, 1898, the ninety-third anniversary of its own birth and the two hundred and seventy-eighth of the landing of the Pilgrims.

The current sentiment for England was shown by President Howland, who said:

"I think it is due to our friends across the water to drink to the health of the Queen."

Her Majesty's health was drunk amid tumultuous applause and the waving of napkins and handkerchiefs.

Among the speakers was Gen. Wesley Merritt, Mr. McKinley's special mouthpiece at the Paris peace conference. Among other things, Mr. McKinley's favorite general said:

"MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: I have been a long way from home and have not heard much of what was going on in the United States, but I have heard a great deal from the colonists in the Far East, and while not a wise man from the East, I am willing to bring you testimony as to the English feeling in the colonies and their gratitude that we are extending our dominions to include the Tropics. [Applause.]

"We have a great work before us. What we have done, and what the Administration has done, has been in the interests of the country. There is much that attracts us from every side in the Tropics. We can extend our commerce there, and we can extend the trade of America. We have the English feeling with us." [Cries of "Good!" and applause.] "When we are in the colonies of England, as I discovered in returning from the Tropics, they assure us that we can not let go of anything that we have. A great many people have insisted that the Constitution forbids it. To those I have said: 'We have outgrown the Constitution; it is not worth while to discuss it. We are here, and we are here to stay.'" [Applause.]

WHAT GENERAL MERRITT SAYS—THE GENERAL WAS SELECTED BY M'KINLEY TO CONVEY THE PRESIDENTIAL WISHES TO THE PEACE COMMISSIONERS AT PARIS.

Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. A., who interpreted the Presidential mind to the American Peace Commissioners at Paris, spoke at the sixty-fifth annual banquet of the St. David Society (Welsh) of New York. He said that he "sympathized with the British in the present war."

"At Manila," he said, "they stood by us, proving that blood is thicker than water. They are with us in trying to establish the principle all over the world, in South Africa and Manila, that every man is entitled to enjoy untrammeled the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Whatever may be said about the Nicaragua treaty, I am satisfied that the British tried to do the right thing by their American cousins."

ADMIRAL KAUTZ'S BOAST—WRITING FROM SAMOA HE SAID: "I AM ALL RIGHT WITH THE ENGLISH."

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 26, 1899.

A letter written by Rear-Admiral Kautz to his cousin, Mrs. Charles N. Lindley, of Cincinnati, has been made public by the recipient. It is dated March 23. In the letter he says:

"You will probably read a lot of stuff about me in various newspapers, but I can assure you that I am all right and have done nothing that I nor my friends may be ashamed of, unless it is the making of a king, which I was obliged to do to-day. But he is a very inoffensive sort of young fellow—a native, 10 years of age. He wears a French admiral's cocked hat, but no shoes or stockings or trousers; still, considering the torrid weather, he looks very well in this climate. But I hardly think he would look as well on Fourth street, Cincinnati. I am not a king here, but just plain 'boss of the ranch.'

"The German consul had that position up to my arrival, but since then he has been a very silent partner. I am very much afraid he does not like me—in fact, I am not at all popular here with the Germans. But I am all right with the English, and hope to pull through with them. I have no doubt of being sustained by the Government in all I have done. I hope to get away from here in a month from this time, but will not be in San Francisco before the middle of May.

"With love to the Kentucky Colonel and yourself.

"Your cousin,

"ALBERT KAUTZ."

LONDON REJOICED OVER ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE IN SAMOA.

The news that British and American sailors joined in the work of slaughtering Samoans for supporting their lawfully elected ruler was hailed with joy in London. The London Morning Post, in referring to this partnership in murder, said of it: "The one bright spot in the dark business is that the Americans and English fought splendidly together."

A press dispatch dated Apia, March 23, said: "The American and British troops are standing side by side, vying with each other in occupying the post of greatest danger. During the night fighting they both displayed the greatest bravery. The war ships have continued the shelling of the villages for a week. Whenever gatherings of Mataafa's troops are sighted within range of the cruisers' guns, fire is opened. Several villages have been burned.

PRO-BRITISH MINISTERS—OUR DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVE AT THE HAGUE SHOWS HIS SYMPATHY FOR ENGLAND.

The London Daily News announced last December that "the British and American ministers at The Hague have asked permission to retire to Antwerp with a view of avoiding personal unpleasantness during the anti-English attitude of the Dutch." We have here a sample of the ill feeling created against us abroad by the ostentatious manner in which the McKinley Administration has ranged itself on the side of England. Our representatives in Europe, taking their cue from Washington, have made it known that they, too, favor English interests.

M'KINLEY'S ARMY FAVORITES FOR ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE—GENERAL DAVIS FOR ALLIANCE—"I FAVOR A TREATY OF ALLIANCE, INCLUDING THE UNITED STATES, ENGLAND, AND JAPAN."

LONDON, December 13, 1898.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Mail summarizes this morning an interview he has had with United States Senator CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, of the Peace Commission, who, he says, advocates a triple alliance between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. The correspondent says:

Mr. DAVIS declared that American and British interests in the Far East run quite parallel, and that therefore the two powers should act jointly. "I am not appealing to sentiment," he said, "though blood is thicker than water, and this argument should not be ignored. My thesis in favor of co-operation is borne out by the coldest logic. I favor a treaty of alliance, including the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, for the protection of all their interests north of the equator. The rest of the world would have a wholesome fear, synonymous with respect, for us."

"There are still five hundred years of vigorous fight in England," said Mr. DAVIS, "which shows no sign of decrepitude, while strong as America is it will take promise and policy. I do not see why other nations should object to the alliance. If they do, let them. Germany already, by special legislation, has immensely injured America's commercial interests. German-Americans regret this attitude on the part of the mother country."

Senator DAVIS has been one of Mr. McKinley's most ardent supporters. He is chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

WOODFORD HELPED ALLIANCE—THE EX-MINISTER TO SPAIN CALLED ENGLAND OUR PROTECTOR.

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, ex-minister to Spain, talked to the members of the Army and Navy Club of New York, early in February, 1899, on things he knows about the preparations for the recent war. Among other things, he said:

"Your minister did the best he could; but let me tell you that had it not been for the unfaltering, unchanging, and loyal friendship of England and the attitude of her minister at Madrid, he might have failed to do the little he did do, because the representatives at Madrid of continental Europe were ready at any time to interfere with the plans of the United States if the British minister would only join them."

In the London dispatches in New York papers of February 5, 1899, we find the following:

"The recent speech of Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, former United States minister to Spain, before the Army and Navy Club at New York City, has been applauded by all Englishmen and has provoked divers comments. The moral most of them draw is that it helps the friendly understanding between the two countries."

The London Globe says: "Our moral support of the United States has been of incalculable value to them, by their own admission. In return we require something more than Admiral Dewey's platonic approval of the civilizing mission of England."

M'KINLEY'S NAVAL FAVORITES FOR ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE—SAMPSON IS PRO-ENGLISH—MR. M'KINLEY'S PET ADMIRAL SAID WE ARE TOGETHER, MEANING ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

In an address made by Rear-Admiral Sampson before the British Schools and University Club, of New York, on the evening of May 24, 1899, he said:

"The thoughts suggested by the sentiment of our fraternal relations are too fine to be spoiled by indifferent speech, and I am no speechmaker. Thoughts crowd upon me and plead for worthy utterance. That homely proverb, 'Blood is thicker than water,' appeals to every man of us here, and is itself an outcome of the good fellowship which has existed between our naval services for many years.

"This year's experience has made us realize its truth, and we of England and America feel, as we perhaps would not have felt twelve months ago, that we are together about this board as members of one great, world-wide family, with interests and sympathies in common.

"The warm feeling which we mutually rejoice in to-day has many causes, too many and too subtle to be here discussed. But, underlying them all, and making them all fruitful, has been the wise and uninterrupted policy of the Government of Her Majesty, your Queen, whose birthday we are here to celebrate. May she live long and prosper, and may we never prove ourselves her unworthy children."

MORE SAMPSON ANGLOMANIA—THE MAN WHOM MR. M'KINLEY TRIED TO MAKE THE HERO OF SANTIAGO LOVES THE QUEEN.

Mr. McKinley's pet naval commander, the man whom he advanced over the heads of others, but who was destined by fate to get no more honor than justice would have decreed, attended the annual banquet of the New England Society of New York December 22, 1899, in company with General Merritt, also a Presidential favorite.

Judge Howland, a rank Anglomaniac, presided. He proposed a toast to "Her August Majesty, the Queen." "At that," says a New York paper, "Gen. Wesley Merritt, Admiral William T. Sampson, J. Pierpont Morgan, and many others sprang to their feet at President Howland's call. The band struck up. It was a love feast. They sang:

God save our gracious Queen,
God save our noble Queen,
God save the Queen.

SCHURMAN FOR ALLIANCE—HE WAS CHAIRMAN OF MR. M'KINLEY'S FIRST PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

At a regular meeting of the Congregational Club of New York, in the Hotel St. Denis, December 18, 1899, President J. G. Schurman, of Cornell University, and chairman of Mr. McKinley's first commission to the Philippines, said:

"Whether England be right or wrong in taking up the gauntlet thrown down by Kruger, I will not undertake to say, but I do know that in the Orient, where we have had trouble, our cause has been England's cause. I do know that while observing neutrality she has facilitated our work in all ways possible."

President Schurman said that the British home government had ordered British ships to go through the archipelago and that their captains were instructed in the course of their voyage to meet the leading insurgents and point out to them the folly of further resistance to the United States. One of the ships that went on this mission, he said, was the Powerful, commanded by Captain Lamberton, of whom much has been heard in South Africa.

One of the most beneficent results of the war with Spain, President Schurman said, was the bringing together of the British and American people.

CHAMBERLAIN'S VISIT HERE—HE PROCLAIMED THE ENGLISH DESIRE FOR AN ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, England's colonial secretary, was in this country on mysterious business in September, 1898.

Here is the enthusiastic manner in which he indorses the proposal to have this country pull England's chestnuts out of the fire. We quote from an interview which appeared in the daily press:

"When I declared in Birmingham in May that even war itself would be cheaply purchased if in a great and noble cause the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack should wave together, I had no mental reservation, and I am happy to say that I voiced the sentiments of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand Englishmen.

"England is ready," and this was said with emphasis upon each word, "to meet the United States more than half way.

"It is for you to determine how close the relations between the two countries shall become. There are no great obstacles to be overcome in bringing the English-speaking people in alliance. When your Senate decides that it is to your interests to join with us in securing certain benefits to both nations, the alliance will quickly be an accomplished fact.

"Why should not we be allied? Our interests are common, as is our language.

"We are both trying for the betterment of mankind. Now let us have a little better understanding all around and we can snap our fingers at hostile intrigues."

CHAMBERLAIN PAVED THE WAY—IN MAY, 1898, HE ANNOUNCED THAT THE TIME HAD ARRIVED FOR ANGLO-SAXON ALLIANCE.

LONDON, May 13, 1898.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies, made an important speech on public affairs at Birmingham this evening.

Referring to the policy of strict isolation that England has pursued since the Crimean war, he remarked that this had been "perfectly justifiable," but he added:

"The time has arrived when Great Britain may be confronted by a combination of powers, and our first duty, therefore, is to draw all parts of the Empire into close unity, and our next to maintain the bonds of permanent unity with our kinsmen across the Atlantic. [Loud cheers.]

"There is a powerful and generous nation," said Mr. Chamberlain, "speaking our language, bred of our race, and having interests identical with ours, I would go so far as to say that, terrible as war may be, even war itself would be cheaply purchased if in a great and noble cause the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack should wave together over an Anglo-Saxon alliance. [Prolonged cheers.]

"It is one of the most satisfactory results of Lord Salisbury's policy that at the present time these two great nations understand each other better than they ever have done since, over a century ago, they were separated by the blunder of a British government."

SALISBURY'S PLAIN HINT—SPOKE OF THE "HAPPY RELATIONS EXISTING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND OURSELVES."

At the lord mayor's banquet held in London November 9, 1898, Lord Salisbury, premier of England, said:

"And I will say that I have noted, as one of the cheering symptoms of the present time, the happy relations existing between the United States and ourselves [cheers] and the sympathy with which we watch their approach toward the same great problems that we ourselves have had to solve."

CHOATE CORROBORATES SALISBURY.

LONDON, November 10, 1899.

Mr. Choate, the American ambassador, declared in a speech at the Sir Walter Scott Club, in Edinburgh, to-night, that Lord Salisbury's generous and cordial reference to the United States in his speech last night met with a great and hearty response in America. He added:

"The ironclad friendship that now prevails between the two nations means peace not merely between your country and mine but among all the nations of the earth. It tends by advancing civilization to promote the prosperity and welfare not alone of the Anglo-Saxon race but of the whole human race."

A FORECAST VERIFIED—ALLIANCE PREDICTIONS MADE BY THE WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE LONDON DAILY MAIL IN MAY, 1898, HAVE BEEN FULFILLED.

LONDON, May 30, 1898.

The Washington correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, cabling Sunday, says:

"I have just learned from a high authority in the State Department that important preliminary steps toward an Anglo-American alliance have already been taken. How far these negotiations have proceeded it is not easy to ascertain, for, naturally, strict secrecy is maintained. But my information is that the preliminary suggestions have been made and that the subject of such an alliance is practically before the two Governments.

"The recent visits paid by Sir Julian Pauncefote to the State Department have not, it seems, had reference altogether to the Canadian negotiations. According to my authority, the features of the proposed alliance now being considered are these:

"Great Britain is to recognize the Monroe doctrine, is to attempt no increase of her territorial possessions in the Western Hemisphere, and is to indorse the American construction of that doctrine.

"The United States are to build the Nicaragua Canal and Great Britain is to have the use of it in time of war.

"The United States are to have all the territory from Spain in the present war, and Great Britain is to protect the United States in the possession thereof if this should be threatened.

"The United States are to stand by England in her policy in China and the East, and all the British ports in the East are to be opened to the United States under the most-favored-nation clause."

The Hay-Pauncefote canal treaty and Secretary Hay's "open-door" negotiations with the powers give striking evidence of the accuracy of the London Daily Mail correspondent's information.

Mr. Chairman, I desire also to submit as a part of my remarks an article which recently appeared in the Washington Post, from the pen of a distinguished American, Hon. J. B. Henderson:

UNRESTRAINED AUTHORITY—THE DEVELOPMENTS IN CUBA WERE INEVITABLE UNDER EXISTING CONDITIONS.

EDITOR POST: Our people, along with yourself, seem to manifest great surprise at the development of frauds in the government of Cuba by the United States.

In government, as in nature, like causes produce like effects. This fact was known to our forefathers. They knew not only from historical teachings, but from their own personal experience as colonies of England, that unlimited power is always corrupt. Hence, the whole scheme of our Government is a careful and guarded limitation of powers. Their solicitude on this subject is expressed in almost every line of the Federal Constitution.

After General Washington, the president of the convention which framed this Constitution, had nearly completed his second term as President of the United States, he bequeathed to his fellow-citizens that priceless legacy known as his Farewell Address. In it he said:

"Respect for its (the Government's) authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government; but the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

That Constitution which he so earnestly asked us to obey as a sacred duty provides as follows: "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

The origin and history of this provision demonstrate the purpose that all money collected under Federal authority, whatever its source, should pass into the Federal Treasury. And when once there, it should not depart therefrom except in pursuance of appropriations made by law.

The lawmaking power, by that same Constitution, is vested alone in Congress. And Congress, in 1789, created the Treasury Department, and certainly tried to make its Secretary in this regard independent of the President. As to the public moneys, the Secretary of the Treasury is made responsible not to the President, but to the people of the United States. He is required to make his reports to the Congress, while all other secretaries must report to the President.

Even General Jackson, with his unbridled temper and the promptings of his military education, did not assume the power to touch the public deposits. He asked Mr. Duane, the Secretary, to do what was clearly within the Secretary's discretion, and he refusing, Jackson claimed no greater power than that of his removal from office. It is true that he accomplished by indirection that which he could not do directly, and this exercise of power toward an unjustifiable end will be best honored in its future avoidance.

Not only must public moneys go into the Treasury and remain there until Congress, the lawmaking power, shall order its removal by specific appropriation, but to the end that the general public, the masses of the people, may be duly informed, regular statements and accounts of both receipts and expenditures shall be published from time to time.

With all these guaranties of honesty in the handling of public funds, reenforced by the safeguards of checks and balances suggested by responsible accounting officers in an experience of a hundred years, it has been difficult to secure that fidelity and integrity sought and hoped for by the founders of our institutions.

Why should we be surprised, then, at the recent defalcations and embezzlements in Cuba? Are they not the legitimate consequences of a gross and radical departure from the Constitution, on which our institutions and our hopes of fidelity and purity of administration are all based?

Look at the order of the President, made through the Postmaster-General, in July, 1899, under which Mr. Rathbone's administration as director-general of posts in Cuba has been conducted. Upon him alone is conferred unlimited authority to establish post-offices and to appoint postmasters and fix their compensation.

He has unrestrained authority to establish post routes and fix the compensation of all persons and companies carrying the mail. He is to make all contracts touching the questions of transportation and distribution of the mail. And his power is equally unlimited to collect and disburse all moneys arising from that service in Cuba. Under this order he combines in himself, as regards this subject, all the functions of the legislative and executive departments of our Government on an island containing two millions of people. His sole will is the law. He is made pro hac vice an absolute monarch. No such autocracy exists on earth. He is to collect millions of dollars and expend it as his own sweet will may dictate.

There is no one to inspect his accounts. He is authorized to collect, and to hold and disburse as his own treasurer. He can disburse without an act of appropriation. He can pay out without a warrant. The lamentable part of this whole matter is that he who invokes constitutional limitations to restrain this wild delirium is no better than a traitor against his Government. After a while the traitors will probably be in the majority, and then, as heretofore in this uncertain world of ours, treason will again become respectable.

J. B. HENDERSON.

Mr. Chairman, I will also submit with my remarks the following extracts from a recent able editorial which appeared in the New York Journal:

IMPERIALISM THE NEGATION OF EXPANSION.

The difference between expansion and imperialism is the difference between strength and weakness. It is the difference between growth and agglomeration. An expanded nation is like a tree. Every part of it is a live, vigorous part of the organism, adding strength to the whole. An imperialized nation is like a hulk covered with barnacles. Move it into fresh water and its accretions drop off.

If you look at the maps of antiquity you will find seemingly mighty empires forming great splotches on the map, and a little later you will find other splotches covering almost the same spaces, but bearing different names. Now it is the Assyrian Empire, then the Babylonian, and again the Median, the Persian, the Empire of Alexander the Great, of the Seleucids, the Parthians, and the Sassanian Persians. It was not that one nation grew and died and was succeeded by another. It was that one tribe overran a vast tract of country, subjugated other tribes and ruled them for a time, and then was subjugated and ruled in its turn.

If Darius had been the ruler of a Persian nation, Alexander could never have chased him from end to end of his empire with 30,000 men. He was beaten because he was only the ruler of a dominant tribe, which had its hands full in keeping its subject populations in order before the invader came.

Spain was most powerful before she began to waste her vigor in foreign conquests. She became helplessly feeble when the sun ceased to set on her empire.

Even England, whose empire is the most stable that history has ever known, is not strengthened by her subject provinces. Her statesmen were beginning to talk of the "weary Titan" even before the Boers began to make that weariness more acute. It is doubtful whether England has ever been greater than she was in the time of Elizabeth, when her empire included not even Scotland.

But she has given us examples of what to follow and what to avoid. In Scotland we have pure expansion; in Ireland, imperialism. England took Scotland into full partnership. The Scotch were governed according to their own ideas. Their representatives were consulted before laws affecting Scotland were passed. Ireland was treated as a vassal. In passing Irish laws the rule was followed of finding what the Irish members wanted and then giving them the opposite.

The result has been that Scotland, which had been the hereditary enemy of England through her whole history down to the union of the crowns, is now more loyally British, if possible, than England herself, while Ireland is a permanently hostile camp in the heart of the empire.

The growth of the United States hitherto has been always true expansion. We have taken in territory with the purpose of making it an actual, integral part of the Republic. Now, for the first time, we are beginning to have subjects. The inhabitants of Porto Rico, says the bill that has just passed, "shall be deemed citizens of Porto Rico, entitled to the protection of the United States, and, together with such citizens of the United States as may reside there, shall constitute a body politic under the name of 'The People of Porto Rico,' with governmental powers as conferred by the bill with power to sue and be sued as such."

Here we have two classes of citizens in one place—citizens of Porto Rico and citizens of the United States. It is the case of Rome and her allies over again. And wherever the citizen of the imperial power resides, with his privileges not possessed by his neighbors, there jealousy and hatred spring up.

Porto Rico gives us our opportunity to expand in an American way if we choose. There has been a strong feeling in Central America in favor of annexation to the United States. It is almost certain that such a step would be popular in Nicaragua, if it should seem to be the only way of getting the canal. But that idea is based on the assumption that territory annexed to the United States becomes American. No independent republic, however weak or torn by dissensions, wants to turn itself into a colony.

If we had set Porto Rico on the highroad to American prosperity when Congress met sixteen months ago, the people of Cuba would not have been as clamorous as they are now for immediate independence. They would have been able to see the substantial advantages of American rule. As it is, Porto Rico is not an invitation, but a warning.

It has been customary to call each Presidential election the most critical in our history, but in truth there have been very few that could compare in importance with the one just approaching. Certainly there has been none such since the second election of Lincoln. After a hundred and eleven years of vigorous life under the Constitution, we are to decide whether that instrument has been outgrown.

We are to decide whether we shall abandon all our old maxims and start on the road down which Babylon, Persia, Macedon, Rome, and Spain moved to destruction.

Imperialism is not only not the same thing as expansion—it is its very negation. When imperialism begins, expansion stops. Under the imperial system the central power is stationary, and it reaches out and seizes all the outlying territory it can hold by force. The larger the pile of plunder becomes the weaker is the power that holds it.

FROUDE'S ROMAN LESSONS FOR AMERICA.

To the student of political history, and to the English student above all others, the conversion of the Roman republic into a military empire commands a peculiar interest. Notwithstanding many differences, the English and the Romans essentially resemble one another. The early Romans possessed the faculty of self-government beyond any people of whom we have historical knowledge, with the one exception of ourselves.

In virtue of their temporal freedom, they became the most powerful nation in the known world, and their liberties perished only when Rome became the mistress of conquered races to whom she was unable or unwilling to extend her privileges.

If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches, it is this: That free nations can not govern subject provinces. If they are unable or unwilling to admit their dependencies to share their own constitution, the constitution itself will fall in pieces from mere incompetence for its duties.

The Present Administration.

SPEECH

OF

HON. NICHOLAS N. COX,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, March 26, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. COX said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I simply rise in my place so that I may be entitled to print in the RECORD fully what I desire to say. I shall say nothing in malice or anger, but as far as I can give my reasons for opposing this enormous army and more than enormous expenses. I have done all I could do to prevent us from reaching a most deplorable state of affairs as I see it. In order to get together events and legislation as they occurred I shall try and give a condensed history of these things.

HISTORY OF EVENTS WHICH LED UP TO THE WAR AGAINST THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Recognize at the outset what we have done in increasing our Army and the money it is costing the people to maintain it, with every indication that we have not yet reached the high point in our expenses. We had when these troubles commenced a Regular Army of about 25,000 men. Our appropriation covering its expenses of every kind was about twenty-three millions. We have now 95,042 enlisted men, 3,492 officers. All included makes an Army of 98,541 men.

The cost of this Army during the next fiscal year, ending last day of June, 1901, amounts to the enormous sum of one hundred and twelve millions, as contained in the appropriation bill, and a conceded deficiency of twenty-five millions, making for the year one hundred and thirty-seven millions. Last fiscal year we appropriated eighty millions, and a deficiency is presented of about forty-seven millions. So the sum total for a standing army for two fiscal years amounts to the sum of two hundred and sixty-four millions. Let it be remembered that this does not include our appropriations for fortifications or ordnance. These sums added, as estimated, will make a sum approaching three hundred millions.

This is what we have to meet, and certainly it is important to know the plain truth as to what brought this about. I need not recur to what led up to the declaration of war with Spain. The first proposed legislation, as was generally understood, came from the President. It consisted in declaring the object of the United States—to establish a stable government, etc., in Cuba. These resolutions were adopted by the House with 17 dissenting votes. They went to the Senate and were almost, if not entirely, ignored, and the resolutions were approved April 20, 1898, as prepared by the Senate. The resolutions are as follows:

[Public resolution—No. 21.]

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Approved, April 20, 1898.

On the 22d of April, 1898, an act was approved which referred to the organization of the Army. This act, in section 4, however, provides "that the Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent," and can only be raised after Congress confers on the President the authority to raise such a force.

A bill reached the Committee on Military Affairs which, in its original shape, conferred on the President the power to inaugurate war without the action of Congress. This raised a lengthy debate in the committee. The bill had been prepared at the War Office. On the first vote in committee to insert the following language, "That upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration by Congress that war exists," then the President could call out the forces, etc.

On the first vote to insert this language it received only 2 votes. After reflection the motion was made to reconsider, and the amendment was inserted with only 2 dissenting votes.

On the 25th of April war was formally declared against Spain, and on the day after the general volunteer bill was passed with the amendment above referred to. This bill of April 25, under which the first volunteers were called and authority given to fill up the companies, regiments, etc., of the Regular Army to its maximum strength—this bill also declares:

That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis.

It further declares that nothing in this act shall be so construed as authorizing to increase the Regular Army, except 25 majors, which was necessary to organize according to modern tactics.

The calling out of volunteers and recruiting the Regular Army proceeded as rapidly as possible, and the fighting ended with Spain in a short time.

She was completely whipped and sued for peace. On the 10th day of December, 1898, a treaty of peace was signed between the United States and Spain. On the 11th day of April, 1899, this treaty was promulgated and became the agreement between United States and Spain.

Before the treaty had been ratified or promulgated, to wit, on the 21st day of December, 1898, the President issues his celebrated proclamation that the Philippine Islands belonged to the United States and declared our sovereignty over all these islands. This was the declaration of war against these people. This proclamation was issued on the above date, before the treaty had been ratified by the Senate.

On the 2d of March, 1899, the second volunteer bill was approved, authorizing the President to maintain the Regular Army up to its maximum strength of 65,000 men, and to call into service 35,000 volunteers, whose term expires July 1, 1901. These troops have substantially been called into service, as is shown by his message to the present Congress.

These are the substantial facts in regard to what Congress and the President have done.

Now I desire to state some undisputed facts in regard to Aguinaldo and his followers:

Admiral Dewey telegraphed Aguinaldo to come to the Philippine Islands. This arrangement was made through the United States consul. Aguinaldo did meet Admiral Dewey on our flagship Olympia. He was furnished with some arms belonging to the United States, and went to Cavite, his native town. From there he issued his proclamation calling his countrymen to arms, assuring them that the Navy of the United States and its Army were ready to help relieve his people from the tyranny of Spain. This proclamation was full of love and admiration for the Americans.

His people flocked to him, and, as Admiral Dewey says, it was wonderful. He forced the Spaniards almost under the guns of our Navy, and was holding them there until land forces of ours could reach Manila. About twelve thousand Spaniards surrendered, and after the surrender the forces of Aguinaldo were ordered by United States military authority to stay out of Manila, upon the ground that the Spaniards were afraid that they would massacre them. Admiral Dewey states that in every step, fight, or contact Aguinaldo had which put him in direct and personal contact with the Spaniards and his army, in driving the Spanish under our guns, he had conducted his operations according to civilized war. Another fact, he had captured many Spanish prisoners, who were treated kindly as prisoners of war.

When his army had reached near Manila, and he had fortified his position, he was ordered to fall back farther. He protested, and apprehended or feared that the Americans would leave him and the Spanish soldiers to fight it out. However, he obeyed the order and fell back.

On the 5th of February, 1899, the unfortunate firing on the picket line occurred, evidently brought about, to say the least of it, by carelessness, and on the part of the Filipinos without authority. Immediately, as soon as Aguinaldo heard the facts, he sent one of his generals to General Otis, stating that his men had acted without authority and proposed to agree on a neutral zone, so that no more blood should be shed, begging General Otis to stop until the matter could be settled. General Otis replied, in substance, that the war had commenced and must go on. It has gone on for over one year, and the results are familiar to all.

These undisputed facts I have given, and now I propound the question: By what legal authority is this war waged? An army of 57,508 men are in the Philippine Islands or on their way there. Who authorized this—war with a people nearly 10,000 miles from our capital, who never did us an unkindness in our history?

Here is an army of 57,508 men in the Philippine Islands or on their way there to enforce a policy promulgated by the President of the United States without a single word, resolution, or act indorsing such a policy from Congress, although Congress was in session when he issued his proclamation declaring his policy.

That Congress authorized the war or made a declaration of war, or that war existed, as provided in the first volunteer act, no one contends. Is it not well to examine and see what the President bases his war declaration on; what influenced him to inaugurate this terrible conflict; call out more troops than Jackson had to whip Great Britain; more troops than it required to whip Mexico; in a war without the action of Congress against a people who had never fired a gun at us, but had fought side by side with us in defeating an enemy against whom Congress had declared war?

If Congress did not inaugurate this war, and the President did, we call for his authority. Let him speak for himself. In his proclamation he asserts two grounds to sustain his action: First, that inasmuch as our representatives to negotiate a treaty with Spain have signed an agreement that Spain will let us have these islands; and second, because our arms have been victorious over Spain; therefore, I, President McKinley, declare that the sovereignty of the United States is extended over these islands, embracing a population of probably 10,000,000.

Now, if the agreement made between our commissioners and the commissioners of Spain was authority for the President to act, without the action of the Senate, what was the necessity of any action by the Senate. Remember that this agreement was signed between the commissioners at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898. On the 6th of February, 1899, Senate ratified the same. Ratified by the Spanish authorities March 29, 1899. Senate of the United States had to ratify it, and the proper authorities of Spain had to do likewise. Now, I submit that this agreement had no legal effect until ratified by the authorities of the contending parties.

The Senate could have rejected; so could the authorities of Spain. Now, suppose either had rejected it, where would have been the authority of the President to declare the sovereignty of the United States, by his proclamation, to extend over the Philippine Islands?

Remember that this proclamation was issued December 21, 1898, one month and a half before the Senate ratified the agreement, and over three months before Spain ratified.

Could not the Senate have rejected it? Could not Spain have rejected it? But regardless of this, the President declares the sovereignty of the United States over these islands before Spain had consented and before the United States had made legal the agreement.

As before stated, the President asserts as one of his grounds for making this strange declaration that our commissioners (whom he terms plenipotentiaries) had signed the agreement. No candid man can think that this authorized the celebrated order of December 21, 1898. He may have assumed that the proper legal authorities would ratify the agreement; but such an assumption would give no legal authority. When the Senate did ratify the treaty, war had already been declared by the President. We had to meet war, inaugurated by the President.

The other ground he asserts in this famous proclamation as ground of his authority is that on account of our victories over the Spanish we have gained this right to sovereignty. Now, if that be disconnected from the other reason assigned, then we have a clear case of "criminal aggression." It is seizing and acquiring territory by conquest. So the President declares in this famous unauthorized order that the United States owns the Philippine Islands, because our commissioners have signed a paper which has not been indorsed by either power, and because we have been triumphant over Spain.

Will anyone give themselves the trouble to compare this policy of the President with the joint resolution passed by Congress? Not one word in regard to the Philippine Islands, but an open, plain avowal that the United States disclaims any intention of acquiring territory by force. Yet the President says that because of our victories over Spain the sovereignty of the United States extends over every foot of these islands, and we will shoot you natives and destroy you until you agree to this.

Do not forget that Congress was in session when the celebrated order was issued—had just convened fresh from the people; yet no communication was sent to it asking what should be done or the policy to be adopted.

I call your attention in this connection to the flagrant violation of the agreement made between the two powers as set forth in the agreement:

ART. IX. The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress.

Not the President. Although the President, under his oath, signed the agreement and treaty, yet before it was law or a treaty he had plunged this country into war, and now proclaims, What will you do? Not in an official message to Congress, as provided for in the treaty, and as provided in the first volunteer act, that Congress should act; but war is upon us by the action of the President and the President only.

TREATY WITH SPAIN.

It is claimed by the supporters of the President that when we bought these islands from Spain under the treaty it was the duty of the President to force the inhabitants of the islands to recognize the complete jurisdiction of the United States over them. This the President asserted about three months before Spain agreed to sell them for twenty millions. How did the President know that Spain would sell for twenty millions before the proposition was submitted to proper Spanish authority? How did the President know over a month before the action of the United States Senate that the Senate would agree to this? How did he know when he declared war that Congress would appropriate the twenty millions? He did not know; but he in his order asserts the sovereignty of the United States regardless of what either power might decide. This he does in violation of the Constitution, which confers on Congress the power to declare war.

This he does in violation of the volunteer act of April 20, 1898, which requires him to reduce the Army to a peace basis as soon as the object for which they had been intended shall be accomplished.

He has violated the law in holding soldiers over the time of their enlistment and after the treaty with Spain had been made and peace proclaimed, when the law provides that they shall be mustered out when the objects for which they were called had been consummated.

Let me ask, who ever in Congress contemplated that after peace with Spain was made that the President should, of his own volition, hold the Army up to its maximum strength, and declare another war against our friends, and in truth our allies in defeating Spain? Who ever heard the Philippine Islands even named in the discussion about war on account of Cuba? Were the joint resolutions in regard to the war with Spain a fraud? Can Congress afford to engage in such business? Here is what Congress declared:

That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent; that it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Spain was compelled to do this; and after she had done this the President declared war against the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

But it is said we bought out Spain, and all her rights inured to us. Let me ask here, Was not the cruelty of Spain to the Filipinos equal to the cruelty to the Cubans? We were fighting Spain for humanity's sake; we are killing Filipinos for territory.

Congress declares war for humanity. The President declares war for territory.

Congress had Spaniards killed for the sake of humanity; under the present war the President declares his war against Filipinos because they want to be free.

But let us carefully examine this agreement with Spain. Who made it and what was the condition of the contracting parties?

Spain was at our feet. Her navies sunk, and her land forces defeated. She could not resist further. The commissioners, for generosity, offer her twenty millions for certain islands which Spain claims. The United States could have as well said, We demand these islands to indemnify us, and we will take them. Spain could have only responded, We can resist no more.

Now, it is here the claim is set up that it is the duty of the President to conquer these people and make them recognize the sovereignty of the United States. It has gone so far that the term is often used that the President is suppressing an insurrection. An insurrection against the laws of the United States, when no laws of the United States ever prevailed over them! But let us closely follow the power of the President under our Constitution to precipitate this country into a war; not how weak are the people or whether they can govern themselves or not. Where is the President's authority to inaugurate a war against a people who never were guilty of a hostile act against us?

The only pretext is found in the claim that we bought the country from Spain and paid twenty millions for it. Could Spain sell us more than she had? It is notorious that she only held a small portion of the seaports, and had utterly failed to bring the citizens under her dominion. So the plain truth is we bought the fight Spain was waging against these people. We undertook to do what Spain had utterly failed to do, and we took a bad job off of the hands of Spain and gave her twenty millions for the job.

Now, assume the President had authority to inaugurate war, and assume he had a right to abrogate the express terms of the treaty; that Congress should fix the political status of these people; by what authority is he now waging the war? If it is answered that, as President of the United States, on him devolves the responsibility to suppress insurrections, repel invasions, etc., tell me what law of the United States have these people rebelled against. The very strongest answer that can be made is that Spain, a power these people had been resisting for years, without their consent, without even a hearing from them, sold them out at about $3 per head, and the United States is trying to enforce the sale.

Does the President of the United States claim he is waging the war as President, or does he claim he is doing so as Commander in Chief of our armies? If he bases his action on the latter proposition, that he as Commander in Chief has a right to declare and wage war, then he is but a military dictator. If he puts it on the ground that he is President, and as such Commander in Chief, then he derives his power from the Constitution, which confers the power. If he relies on the Constitution, then he must abide by it. What clause of the Constitution confers on the President the power to declare that 10,000,000 people shall submit to the sovereignty of the United States, although they are opposed to it—people who had never been living under the Constitution? Especially may this question be asked: By what authority did the President declare this policy before the United States had even gone through the approval of a treaty made at its own dictation?

By what authority is the Army of the United States in the Philippine Islands? Is it there by virtue of the powers of the President? If so, then he acts under the Constitution, not above it. If these islands are ours and form a part of the domains of the United States, then the inhabitants are under the protection of the Constitution unless they have rebelled against it. But they could not rebel, because there was nothing, so far as our laws operated over them, to rebel against. But the President puts them in rebellion because they refuse to obey an order or proclamation of his unauthorized by any law or treaty.

If we should purchase one of the South American States, and this were done through the President and the Senate, and the people refused to agree to the sale, then the President of the United States and the Senate would inaugurate a war although every member in the other House was opposed to it. Then what use or power is in the Constitution which confers on Congress the power to declare war?

I ask why was it that the President precipitated this war without the consent or consideration of Congress? That body was in session. His party had control. He had offered a treaty, or did shortly afterwards, which distinctly declares that Congress shall have the power to fix the political status of the inhabitants of these islands. Why did he violate the law that called out the first volunteers, which directed him that as soon as the objects of the war were obtained—the defeat of Spain—that the Army should be brought back to the original peace basis? That law stands to-day. Did he not sign this act, which notified him at least that his authority to call for troops or inaugurate a war must be based on a declaration of Congress declaring war or that war existed?

You have an army of over 57,000 men operating against the Philippine Islands; and, without a word from Congress as to whether it is right or not, is simply engaged in voting these enormous sums of the people's money to pay this Army, called out and engaged in war inaugurated solely by the President of the United States, and that, too, before the constitutional body had even said we have bought these islands from Spain.

What kind of policy is this? We entered the war for the sake of humanity. We drove the Spaniards off the island of Cuba. This we declared to be our purpose, and only purpose, when we declared war—in the constitutional way—against Spain. We soon accomplished our avowed purpose. But to make it clear, we avowed we had no intention of trying to seize territory by force. This way of obtaining territory the President denounced as a crime. "It would be criminal aggression." What territory was referred to in this declaration? It certainly could mean no other territory than Spain laid claim to. It could not mean that we avowed not to take territory by force from a friendly power. It referred to Spain, and no one but Spain.

As soon as Spain was driven from Cuba the President—no one else—declared that the people of the Philippines should submit to our sovereignty. We could as easily put the island of Cuba in the treaty as any other island. We wrote our own agreement. Spain submitted, because that was all she could do. Our Government at once commenced to give the Cubans the right of self-government. Although the Cubans resisting Spain rendered us but little service, nothing in comparison with Aguinaldo and his army, we gave the Cubans self-government and declared war against the Philippines because they wanted self-government.

The President now, without one word from Congress, says to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, You surrender; lay down your arms; disband your organizations; kneel at our feet; hoist our flag over your country, and we will be upright and just to you. When Aguinaldo and his troops were driving the Spanish army under the guns of Admiral Dewey—and he was speaking in the highest praise of his conduct—and held the Spaniards in a pen until our forces arrived, did he or his people ever dream that they should be refused the privilege of entering Manila?

And that refusal based on the ground that the Spaniard soldiers, crying, cringing, and moaning for fear the Filipinos would butcher them. Our sympathy then turned to the Spaniard, whom we had driven out of Cuba, because of his brutal, inhuman, and un-Christian conduct had rendered him unfit even to be our neighbor. But they were prisoners of war, and the Filipinos had done their part in capturing them, and they, our enemies, received the kindnesses of the American Army, and the Filipinos ordered not to enter the city; but not only this, our general conceived that their lines were too close to the city, and they were ordered to fall back. They did so, and obeyed the United States officer. Is it strange that the confidence in their supposed friends was shaken?

Still tracing this suicidal policy, when the unfortunate firing occurred on the picket lines, Aguinaldo sent in post haste to General Otis to stop the fight. Says, too, "The action of my men is unauthorized. Let us establish a neutral ground until we can settle the matter." Immediately, without any conference with the President (for none was necessary), he replies, "The war has commenced and must go on." In a short time, so reported, 600 Filipinos were dead.

What brave, true American approves this policy? Who approves such conduct?

When the United States commissioners had met the Spanish commissioners at Paris, and the great interest of 10,000,000 people—our friends, who had helped us to defeat the common enemy—stood at the doors and begged simply to be heard, tell their thoughts, and maintain what they thought of their interests, we said: "No; we have used you as far as we need you. Begone! We will be humane and just." And before this agreement (all made by one side) had the authority of law the President declares war against these people, without a hearing and without even their presence in this treaty-making body, although they had more interest than anyone. To close the matter, General Otis tells these people war has commenced and must go on; all negotiations refused unless they surrender their arms, acknowledge their master, and on bended knees beg for mercy.

Who approves such a policy? Let me here for one minute call your attention to this famous policy. We thought enough of Aguinaldo to use him in assisting us. Call it by any name you please—alliance, agreement, or something else—one thing is certain, he was our friend. Your policy refuses to even talk the matter over or to negotiate. But while you are shooting his followers, who pray alone for liberty, you dispatch a general of our Army, and he goes to meet an old Mohammedan, surrounded with his harems and his slaves, and you put this chief on a pension for the liberty of hoisting our flag to float over his wives and slaves. You bought a place for the Stars and Stripes, and the same flag is used to destroy a people who were our friends and who ask only for liberty. Who approves this policy?

But let us take another step in considering this unholy war. The United States was agitating the feasibility of meeting the suggestion of the ruler of the Russians and to send our representatives to a meeting. The great purpose was to avert wars. The President of the United States sent five of our distinguished men to meet that great council. The appointment of these men was made on the 17th of April, 1899. Now, what was transpiring in the United States? Already the President had issued his declaration of war in December, 1898. But he did not stop at that. He wanted more troops, more soldiers, more war.

On the 2d day of March, 1899, the President approved an act, passed by his friends in Congress, authorizing him to maintain the Regular Army up to its maximum strength of 65,000 men, and to call into service 35,000 volunteers, with the power to officer these men and call them from any place he pleased. In this act the old volunteer act was abandoned. It provided that when the objects of the war were obtained these soldiers should be mustered out, and the Regular Army brought back to its peace basis. But the act of March 2, 1899, provided that this increased military power was "to meet the present exigencies of necessity of the military service."

Who was to judge what the exigencies of the military service were? The President, who brought about the necessity for this force? The President, by declaring war on the Filipinos, notwithstanding, by the treaty with Spain, ratified by the Senate and approved by the President, Congress should have the power to fix the political status of the inhabitants of these islands.

Do you approve of this policy? When this bill of March 2 was pending, time and time again, the question was asked, "What do you want with these new troops?" Not one word came from the President in answer, and not one word from his immediate leaders and his champions on the floor. We see now what he wanted them for. But as to the President's power to proceed and involve us in a war, let Senator FORAKER answer this question. The whole matter of governing these islands is with Congress, and Congress could establish such a government as it pleased, and this power was verified by the treaty of Paris, confirmed March 30, 1900, in the Senate.

What policy has the President? He has taken it away from Congress, in violation of the treaty, and assumed to manage the entire matter.

In Cuba the policy seems to be to allow them to govern themselves after we get done with them.

In Porto Rico the first opening of a policy is to confer on the President the appointing of a legislative body, a majority of whom may never have seen that island. In Porto Rico a tax is levied on the commerce of that island without any resident being consulted; a tax on their commerce if they dare trade with us.

Look at the policy! People who owe their allegiance to the United States, and have without resistance surrendered to the authority of the United States; 900,000 of them; many of them starving and dying; yet the policy is to confer on the President the governing power and then tax them without representation.

In regard to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, the policy is to shoot them. Was there ever such a contradictory, uncertain, and unjustifiable policy adopted by a civilized nation? But it becomes more indefensible when we examine what the President has said. As to acquiring territory by force, just what he is doing or attempting to do with the Philippines, he had denounced as criminal aggression.

In regard to Porto Rico, in a solemn message sent to Congress, he avowed himself in favor of free trade for Porto Rico, but in less than four months he changes and wants a tariff on the goods sent from that island to the United States.

He is reported as saying in one of his speeches in the West that a band of outlaws on the island of Luzon had rebelled against the authority of the United States, and of course this great Government could not submit to them; that they fired on our boys and the boys fired back. Look at these outlaws! After sixteen months fighting this band of outlaws were on the 1st of January last in sight of the headquarters of our army. Nearly 60,000 men have been sent to destroy them. General Lawton was killed within 14 miles of Manila, and the last skirmish was within 5 miles of the city. Outside the city we have hardly territory enough to camp our army on.

If the latest news is correct, General Otis is coming home and a demand for more troops is to be made. However, General Otis has accomplished something. He captured the wearing apparel of Aguinaldo's wife and his boy; neither was ever returned.

RESULTS SO FAR.

If I have been correct in following up this unfortunate policy, to put it mildly, will it not be well for us to examine some of the results? Let us see where we are going.

Imperialism and militarism are always twin sisters. No imperialism will be inaugurated if it has no military force to back it. The reason is plain. Public sentiment and love of individual liberty revolt or oppose it by force. Thus to be successful it must overcome the opposing force. But imperialism can not succeed without the force of an army. I do not mean to say that the army must be used to carry out on every occasion the policy of imperialism. I do not mean to say that force must in every instance be invoked to sustain arbitrary and unauthorized acts. But military force is behind, and the power to enforce the decisions and edicts of its chief. He would be harmless without it. Neither is it imperative that this force behind the despot should be used on every occasion. It is more terrible because it is not so used. It works its way insidiously, and it fastens itself as it goes. Especially is that so in a government like ours.

Look at your standing Army! Called into existence to whip Spain; and when Spain was whipped you increase your military force to whip a people you never had cause to complain of. A standing Army of over 100,000, and over half of which is engaged in killing people who never did us a harm on earth.

Can you reduce it? No; it will grow, and its power as a military force will be extended.

The United States mails are examined, and literature, not obscene, is taken from the mails because it may influence the volunteers to abandon a service they were never called upon to perform. Citizen soldiers are prohibited from obtaining information. You answer me and say the soldiers willingly stood by the exigencies. So much the worse. A combination between the soldier and the imperialist is but a common way to reach absolute power. Is our Government afraid to let its defenders read?

Nearly 1,000 citizens arrested in Idaho and imprisoned, with the liberty to talk through barbed-wire fences, in the presence of a sentinel, with their wives. No charge against them; no warrant to arrest them; no notice of the charge against them; no information how long they will be held in prison; guarded and released by military authority, under the approval of the Commander in Chief of the United States Army; courts open; no resistance to civil authorities, and not one civil officer molested in discharge of his civil legal duties.

A large standing army, numbering over 100,000; most of them employed in a war declared by the President and in plain violation of law.

A large navy, looking to like power, and the taxpayer utterly ignored.

There are powers sufficient to convert this Republic into a monarchy or military government; and if Congress does not act, the end is not far off.

Who are the allies of this tremendous power? Who is said to be our friend? Who approves our conduct? Great Britain. She applauds us and shoots the Boers. Great Britain kills the Boers because they want to be free. We shoot and kill the Filipinos for the same reason. Of course we are friends when engaged in the same crime. The only difference is, Who are you shooting? You will not permit a resolution of sympathy for the Boers because you are engaged in the same business. Look at your toadyism with Great Britain. Look at your recent treaty made with that power. A canal treaty, hung up in the Senate, but approved by the President. I challenge history to name the time or place Great Britain ever fired a shot for the individual liberty of man. Washington and Lafayette whipped her for freedom. Jackson enforced the result, but, but, oh, but.

This at last has reached the necessary result. A Senator of the United States stands in his place addressing the people of this great Republic (once was) and proclaims that in Cuba and the other islands seized by us the will of the Commander in Chief is supreme. What is that but absolute authority in the hands of one man? This might be excused as the expression of one man, but another has spoken—the Adjutant-General of the United States, not exactly in the official family of the Commander in Chief, but certainly so close that he speaks by his authority. Hear what he has to say:

> Of course under the Army regulations no officer is allowed to draw more than his salary. It must be remembered, however, we are in Cuba under a military government, which knows no law other than the behest of the President and the Secretary of War.

I am unable to see why the Secretary of War was a necessary adjunct to the President. He is but his appointee, but the proposition is more startling when the doctrine is asserted that there is no law in Cuba except the behest of the President and Secretary of War. I suppose naturally this doctrine would apply to the other islands, the difference only would be in the behest of the President and his Secretary of War. Let every man who loves our Constitution and form of government stop and think.

We waged war against Spain for just such doctrine and when we whipped her her doctrine is announced; this is a part of our humanity.

Every advocate of this present war asks the question, We are in it; what will you do?

Do right; do not prosecute further a wrong. Let the people establish for themselves a government. It may be crude, but give them a chance. Say to them, We do not desire to subjugate you and annex territory by force; that is, in our opinion, a crime. Hold them independent of the world, and let them know and realize that we are for those who govern themselves and the unfaltering friend of individual freedom.

Many arguments can easily be made for our own advantage and interest. But, in the name of all that is sacred, keep our flag over freemen.

Let me say in conclusion: I heard a great Southern man, at least great in words, proclaiming, "We will fire the Southern heart, instruct the public mind, and precipitate the cotton States into a revolution." I read of another prominent man of the North proclaiming that the "Constitution of the United States was a covenant with death and a league with hell." And now it is proclaimed by an officer of the United States, one who seeks to be made a major-general, and a Senator of the United States that although Congress organizes and pays an Army of 100,000 men, this great Army, at least in certain places, knows no law, obedient to no law, except the behest of the President. How fast the Constitution is melting away.

Pensions.

SPEECH

OF

HON. THOMAS M. JETT,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 7, 1900,

On the bill (S. 1477) amending sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890.

Mr. JETT said:

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a bill the provisions of which provide for the amendment of what is known as the pension law of June 27, 1890. I am most heartily in favor of this amended bill, because I think it will enable the applicants who apply under this act to get a better rating, and more nearly what is justly due them. Whilst this measure does not go far enough, yet it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, there is in my judgment a great inequality in the administration of the pension laws, and this becomes more and more apparent as the years go by. Just why this is so I will not undertake here to say, but that it is so no one I think will deny. This amended act if properly construed will give to the applicants for pensions under the act of 1890 a rating upon all of their disabilities. That is, in determining the inability of the applicant to earn a support each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown shall be the basis for the rating. This, I believe, will prove a great benefit to the veterans who are applying under this act, and many apply under the act of 1890 beause by reason of the lapse of many years they are unable to show to the satisfaction of the Dapartment that their disabilities had their origin in the service.

There is no doubt in my mind, and the more I have to do with the Bureau of Pensions, the more confirmed are my convictions, that many, many veterans are compelled to resort to this act and their pensions are limited to this act, whose disabilities were incurred in the line of service.

And now, Mr. Speaker, when we know, as we all surely do know, that such is the case, why should high-spun technicalities be brought in to defeat the soldiers from receiving their just reward and compensation.

These laws should receive at the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions a liberal construction instead of a strict construction.

Mr. Speaker, there is another feature in this pending measure that commends it to me. That is that the pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Bureau of Pensions, and not from the time of the examination of the applicant, as has been the practice heretofore. By this amendment to the act of 1890 it directs the Commissioner of Pensions, in the case of widows, to grant them pensions when they are left without means of support other than their daily labor and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, thereby taking it out of the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions to say what shall be the limit as to the amount of property the widow possesses before she shall be entitled to a pension; and this, too, is a wise suggestion and meets with my approval.

Mr. Speaker, I have stated that in my judgment I believed there was a great inequality in the administration of the pension laws of the United States, I adhere to that statement. I believe that it is correct; and in support of my position I desire to call your attention to the comparison of ratings under the general law and under the act of June 27, 1890, and I am quite sure every member of this House will agree with me. This table shows corresponding ratings for same disabilities under the general law and act of June 27, 1890, and will be found in the last annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions:

The two systems of pensioning compared:

General law.	Act of June 27, 1890.
The bases for ratings under the general law are:	The basis of ratings under this act is incapacity to labor, joined with incapacity to earn a support, and the grades of rating are dependent upon these two conditions.
(1) For minor disabilities, an anchylosed wrist or ankle..... $8	Minimum rate under this act..... $6
(2) For incapability to perform manual labor, equivalent to loss of hand or foot..... 24	Maximum rate under this act..... 12
(3) For incapacity to perform any manual labor..... 30

COMPARISON OF RATINGS.

General law.		Act of June 27, 1890.
Second grade	$30	Maximum rate	$12
Third grade	24	Disability equivalent to loss of hand or foot	10
Single hernia	6 to 10

Double hernia	8 to 14	Single hernia	6
Deafness:		Double hernia	8
Total both ears	30	Deafness:
Nearly total	27	Total both ears	12
Total of one ear and severe of other ear	25	Nearly total	10
Severe of both ears	22	Total of one ear and severe of other ear	8
Loss of one eye	17	Severe of both ears	6
Loss of sight of one eye	12	Loss of one eye	6
Anchylosis:		Loss of sight of one eye	6
Elbow	10	Anchylosis:
Knee	10	Elbow	6
Shoulder	12	Knee	6
Loss of portions of hand or foot: Rates vary, according to extent of amputation, from $10 to $17.		Shoulder	6
		Loss of portions of hand or foot: Rates vary, according to extent of amputation, from $6 to $10.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that this table conclusively shows that my contention is right and is well founded.

Mr. Speaker, from the report of the Commissioner on Pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, it appears that there were then on the pension rolls for service after March 4, 1861:

Army invalids under the general law	316,834
Navy invalids under the general law	4,721
Army invalids under act June 27, 1890	405,987
Navy invalids under act June 27, 1890	14,925
Total invalid pensioners	742,467

Of this number of pensioners under the general law 143,051 are now in receipt of pensions below $12 per month, and of the pensioners under the act of June 27, 1890, 105,787 are drawing pensions at $6 per month, 128,143 are drawing pensions at $8 per month, 26,540 are drawing pensions at $10 per month, 160,403 are drawing pensions at $12 per month.

And information received from the First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions shows that there were pending in the Pension Bureau on March 1, 1900, the following invalid claims in which no allowance had ever been made, namely:

Claims under the general law for service after March 4, 1861	22,082
Under the act of June 27, 1890	47,474

And it further appears from the Commissioner's report for the year ending June 30, 1899, that there were then pending 28,113 widows' claims under the general law and 38,470 widows' claims under the act of June 27, 1890; also that there were then in the rejected and abandoned files of the Bureau the following widows' claims:

Under the general law:
Rejected	14,927
Abandoned	80,266
Under the act of June 27, 1890:
Rejected	15,584
Abandoned	35,264

And that there were in the rejected and abandoned files of the Bureau on March 1, 1900, 80,331 claims of invalids under the general law; 94,017 claims of invalids under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. Speaker, from the above it will readily be seen that legislation upon the subject of pensions is greatly needed if the veterans who fought for the preservation of this Union, and who were willing to sacrifice their lives, as many did, are to receive that just recognition to which they are entitled from this Government. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to see, and my vote shall be in favor of making, just, liberal, and proper provision for the men that left home and family and offered their lives that the Union should not perish, but live forever.

Again, by reference to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions above mentioned, it will be seen that of the total number of pensions 143,051 under the general law are drawing less than $12 a month, and 260,470 under the act of 1890 are drawing less than $12, and that 105,787 are drawing pensions only at the rate of $6 a month, and that 128,143 are drawing only $8 per month.

I mention this in connection with the great number of rejected claims, as is shown by what I have read from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, to show that the present Administration has not been as liberal to the soldiers as they attempt to make believe.

Mr. Speaker, a short time ago I had occasion to make some remarks upon this floor, in which I referred to the policy of President McKinley in relation to the promotion of certain officers to the high ranks in the Army of the United States of major and brigadier general. And I desire here, Mr. Speaker, to insert, as a part of my remarks at this time, the list showing the appointments of major and brigadier generals that have been made within the last three years, and the length of service in the position to which they were appointed, together with the date of retirement.

*Suspended by court-martial. †Died.

At the time I called the attention of this House to the rapid process of making major and brigadier generals, and almost immediately placing them upon the retired list for the purpose of enabling them to draw an additional salary of $1,500 annually more than they would have been entitled to draw had they been retired with the rank that they had before these promotions were made, and the only justification that was made at that time or since were that these gentlemen were good officers.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that the men who fought under these officers were good soldiers and that they too are entitled to much consideration.

I would not detract in the least from the achievements and success of the officers of the Army, nor of these officers whose names I have mentioned, nor do I blame them for being able to command influence to bring about their promotion to higher ranks; but I do not want it forgotten that it was the private soldiers and officers in the lower ranks in the Army who went to the front and did the hard fighting upon a thousand battlefields and more, that enabled these and other officers who have gained distinction to achieve their successes as officers of the Army. It was the gallantry of the private soldier that enabled the officers to win battles. When favors are being bestowed, I, for one, do not want to see the private volunteer soldiery of my country overlooked, because it is the citizen soldiery of the land that we have got to look to when a crisis is on hand.

And I believe in treating those who have fought the battles of the nation with that due consideration that will be an inspiration to those whom we may hereafter call upon to do like service.

Mr. Speaker, while we are making provisions for those who actually participated in line of battle upon the field and suffered the hardships of Army life, let us not forget those that remained at home in suspense and cared for the household and kept together the children while the husband might serve his country.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that our laws should be more generous toward the women who stood the trials and difficulties and suffered and endured the hardships incident to a time of war.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that those who, in the hour of peril and danger, for the honor and preservation of the Government, leave home and fireside, leave wife and children, father and mother, and all that is dear to them, save the love of country, and endure the hardships of Army life, should ever have the care of Government and be the recipients of its most generous bounty. [Applause.]

To such as have not enough of this world's goods to keep them from want and suffering, or are laboring under injuries received in service, or disease, the result of service, and to those over whom old age and decay are creeping, the most liberal and generous policy should be pursued, and I am ready and willing at all times, Mr. Speaker, to aid in passing such laws that this result may be reached. [Applause.]

The North Carolina Suffrage Amendment.

SPEECH

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 3, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11212) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes—

Mr. KITCHIN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Much has been said during this Congress against the election laws of North Carolina and the proposed suffrage amendment to her constitution which, if unanswered, may injure her good name with those who know not her people. As one of her Representatives, realizing that all patriots are sympathizing with her effort to solve the problem confronting her good people, I propose to speak in her behalf, and trust that her enemies, if such there be, wherever they are may be silenced by a plain recital of her conditions and a candid explanation of her honest attempt to improve them.

In North Carolina we have at present about 340,000 electors, and it is usually estimated that 120,000 of them, or about one-third, are negroes, the vast majority of whom live in the eastern part of the State.

Mr. Lincoln said at Charlestown, Ill., on September 18, 1858:

I will say that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races—that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with white people; and I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And inasmuch as they can not so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I, as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race. (1 Complete Works, 369.)

In ten years thereafter the ignorant negro, without conception of the principles of government, was intrusted with the ballot and constituted the bulk of the State Republican party. He filled offices which the best men in the State had filled. He was sheriff, deputy sheriff, justice of the peace, legislator, constable, county commissioner, etc.

Mr. Chairman, I remember when four out of the five commissioners of Halifax County were negroes, and one of them the chairman of the board. It was an era of extravagance and corruption. The great body of the white people came together, men of the west uniting with their brethren of the east, and hurled the Republican party from power and instituted good government, which continued to bless our State under Democratic rule for twenty years.

During those twenty years in the black counties there was an occasional negro register of deeds or member of the legislature, and even district solicitor and member of Congress, but the counties, towns, and cities were under absolute white control, and almost without exception under excellent government.

So excellent was the Democratic administration of State, county, and municipal affairs, that when the Populist party was making its first campaign its orators, without exception, proclaimed that they had no complaint against the State Democracy, but that their fight was solely on national affairs. Senator BUTLER'S paper, the Populist organ, the Caucasian, said on July 14, 1892:

Whatever differences may exist among North Carolinians over questions of national policy, there should be none in the State where Anglo-Saxon rule and good government is the paramount issue.

During these twenty years Democratic speakers throughout the State charged that if the Republicans ever regained control of the State they would again give over many of the eastern counties to negro control, and inflict upon the white people hundreds of negro officials. This charge many Democrats doubted; Republicans denounced it as false, and Populist orators said there was nothing in it. Their followers believed them, and thought we were erecting a scarecrow.

But, sirs, our prophecies came true, and the results of Republican success disappointed the white Republicans of the west and the Populists of the east. The large majority of them were and are honestly opposed to negro domination in any part of the State. Many of their leaders even had been disappointed. Of course, here and there are degraded white men who rejoice at negro domination, but they are few and usually without respect of their party fellows.

OPPOSITION TO NEGRO RULE.

I need not undertake to explain the opposition that white men have to negroes holding office over them. That opposition exists without contradiction; it is not hostility to the individual negro. White men respect negroes of intelligence and character; white men befriend negroes at all times. Here and there are negroes of education and character whom white men respect, but under whose official authority they will not consent to be. No white man of character and influence in North Carolina has ever publicly announced his approval of the vast number of negro officials that existed two years ago in North Carolina. White republicans of the west, when their party won with fusion with the Populists, in the legislature met the influence of the negroes in the east, and political demands exacted from them the laws which permitted the election of large numbers of negro officials.

Political parties rule, and when the Republicans are in control it is no wonder that the negroes, constituting the vast majority of the Republican voting element, require legislation that will enable them to control where their numbers prevail.

For years the negroes have had complete control of Republican organizations in many counties. They have even controlled district organizations, there being to-day, as I am informed, negro chairmen of the Congressional district committees in three districts. In many Republican district conventions negro delegates predominate. This is true of the second, third, and sixth districts. Even in my district in 1898 there were as many negro delegate as white delegates in the Republican Congressional convention which met in Burlington.

The great body of the people never objected to negroes controlling the Republican machinery, but they do object when they control cities, towns, and counties, which they have done when their party was in control of State affairs. If the Republican party should again control North Carolina, under present suffrage laws, the history of its conduct points unmistakably to another era of negro officials. This their leaders may in vain deny, as they denied such charges 15, 10, and 5 years ago.

MEANING OF NEGRO DOMINATION.

But, Mr. Chairman, we frequently hear denials of the existence of negro domination. What is it? Ask the taxpayers who have felt its evils. Ask the white men who have been arrested by negro officers. Go to Craven County and ask the white lady who has had to respond to the warrant of a negro justice of the peace. Go to New Hanover and ask its chamber of commerce whose business was paralyzed. Ask the ladies who for months dared not alone walk the streets of Wilmington at midday.

But I will give you a few facts showing negro domination two and three years ago. Negro domination does not mean that the government in every part of the entire State is under control of negro influences—few negroes live in the western part of our State. Counties and towns in eastern Carolina were under negro domination, which intelligent honesty can not deny. We say New York is under Tammany domination, or a certain community is under German domination. We understand that. When the great controlling element is the negro vote, and when that vote and its influences name the officials and dictate the policy of a town, city, or county, then it is dominant. When it elects negro officials of a town or county, there is negro domination.

When the voice and will of nineteen-twentieths of the white people, constituting more than that proportion of the virtue and intelligence of a town or county, is overwhelmed and defeated by the negroes, there is negro domination. Yet men are so partisan that, with apparent sincerity, they look such facts in the face and still declare, in order to mislead men in the west, that there was not in North Carolina anywhere in 1897 and 1898 any negro domination, and seemingly expect people to believe them.

FACTS.

But to facts. The Fusionists controlled our legislatures of 1895 and 1897. Behold their fruits!

In every case cited of justices of the peace, some good, honest white man, without wealth, had been by the Republicans or Fusionists replaced by a negro. Yet they pretend to be the white man's friend! New Hanover County had 40 negro justices of the peace, Edgecombe 31, Bertie 16, and Craven 27. I shall append their names to my remarks. Halifax County had 29 negro justices of the peace, Vance 15, Granville 17, Caswell 7, and many other counties had them, there being about 300 in the State. The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, under our law, in civil actions extends to $200, in torts to $50, and in criminal matters to all cases where the punishment can not exceed $50 fine or thirty days in jail.

It has been with grossest misrepresentation asserted by opponents of the amendment that negro justices of the peace did not exercise jurisdiction in cases where white men or their property were involved. Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, Mr. BELLAMY, who lives in Wilmington, and Mr. THOMAS, who lives in Newbern, both eminent lawyers, have appeared for white defendants in the courts of these negro justices of the peace; for however unpleasant it may have been, a client of theirs never suffered from their personal feelings.

In those two cities scores of cases have been tried before negro justices of the peace in which white men and their property have been involved. Why, even in my district, in the county of Granville, away up in the middle of the State, on the Virginia line, often have negro magistrates issued their process against white men. I have here a certified copy of the papers in a case in which three separate negro justices of the peace performed services in a criminal case against an innocent white man, together with an explanatory affidavit of Hon. A. A. Hicks, now a distinguished member of our State senate, who represented the defendant and tried in vain to have the case removed before a white magistrate. It was removed twice, but both times it was sent to a negro justice of the peace. I shall append it to my remarks.

Halifax, Caswell, Vance, Granville, Edgecombe, Warren, Bertie, Northampton, and other counties had numerous negro officials, including county commissioners, registers of deeds, coroners, deputies (sheriffs, clerks, and registers), constables, notaries public, jailors, school committeemen over both white and colored schools, members of boards of education, etc.

Twenty-seven counties endured negro officialism. A negro was on the board of directors for the white deaf, dumb, and blind asylum. The National Administration emphasized the conditions by appointing many negro postmasters, several of whom became embezzlers; by giving Wilmington a negro collector of customs, and by appointing negroes as storekeepers and an internal-revenue deputy collector.

In 1898 there were about 1,000 negroes holding office in my State.

The Republicans in the last campaign ran negroes for the legislature in Edgecombe, Halifax, Granville, Vance, Pasquotank, Northampton, Craven, and Warren counties, electing their candidates in the two counties last named.

CRAVEN COUNTY.

The Fusion legislature put the towns of Greenville, Newbern, and Wilmington under the domination of the negro and those whom his vote controlled, and who drew their political sustenance from him. In the county of Craven, in which Newbern is, I understand that, while there are 2,000 negro Republicans, there are only 47 white Republicans; and I understand that in each of several other counties the number of white Republicans is less than 25. Craven in 1898 had 65 negro officials, among them the register of deeds, 3 negro deputy sheriffs, a negro coroner, a negro county commissioner, and many magistrates and school officials, and this county furnished a negro candidate for solicitor of the Second judicial district. Newbern had negro policemen and aldermen. Tell me, was that white domination?

The Republicans in that county ran as their regularly nominated candidates in the last election a negro, I. H. Smith, for the legislature; a negro, C. C. Roach, for county treasurer; a negro, John Willis, for register of deeds; a negro, Dr. Lassiter, for coroner; a negro, Robert Moseley, for county commissioner; a negro, Judge Stanley, for constable of Newbern Township; and a white man, J. L. Hahn, for sheriff; and a white man, E. W. Carpenter, for clerk, both of whom, as I am informed, were pledged to appoint negro deputies. All these negroes were elected. Stanley, Moseley, and Smith qualified and became officers; the others either failed to present bonds or presented such bonds as were held insufficient.

NEW HANOVER COUNTY.

New Hanover County had 86 negro officials; but as to Wilmington and that county, I take the following from the evidence in the Dockery-Bellamy contest case—it is from the sworn testimony of my colleague, Hon. JOHN D. BELLAMY:

Q. Did you read the deposition of one Secrest, a witness for Oliver H. Dockery, the contestant in this case, taken at Monroe, Union County, in the present case?—A. Yes; I did read it.

Q. Will you state, in substance, what that testimony was?—A. Although I hardly think it is necessary to contradict the statement of Mr. Secrest, as his character has been shown by a number of witnesses to be very bad, I will do so. He stated that he was present at a political speaking where I addressed the assemblage, at a schoolhouse in Union County, and that I stated that the people of Wilmington were armed with Winchester rifles and were going to carry the election if it was necessary to shoot down the negroes. I say in reply to that, that statement of Mr. Secrest is absolutely false. What I did say, and what has been testified to by other witnesses who heard me, was this: After I had discussed the policy and principles of the Democratic party and its position upon national questions, I came down to the question of the bad government of North Carolina under Fusion rule in State affairs, and then finally in local matters. I stated to the assemblage as a reason why the Fusionists should be hurled from power and control in North Carolina was that they had subjected the citizens of Wilmington, Newbern, and Greenville to the horrors of misgovernment and negro domination and all that that implied; and after briefly stating how the town of Greenville had been gerrymandered and put under negro control, and how the city of Newbern had been likewise treated, I then came to the city of Wilmington, where I resided and was familiar with the state of affairs. I stated that as the result of fusion legislation the city had been put under negro control substantially; that although the white people owned about 97 per cent of the property and paid that much of the taxes of the city, that we had a board of aldermen, with a white man for mayor who didn't own a foot of land in the county, and paid comparatively little or no taxes; that three or four of the board of aldermen were negroes; that forty of the magistrates were negroes; that from fourteen to seventeen of the thirty on the police force were negroes; that nearly all of the deputy sheriffs of the county were negroes; that the register of deeds of the county was a negro; that every health officer of the city, a very important position, was held by negroes; that one of the three county commissioners was a negro; and the result of it was that a horrible state of misgovernment had been brought about; that night after night burglaries and robberies took place in town, without any detection; that within about 800 feet of the city hall six burglaries had been committed within ten days without a detection; that one burglar had been arrested in a lady's residence, a negro burglar, was captured and held by the ladies until a police officer arrived; and that, although the offense was punishable by death and not bailable, he was taken to the city hall and there let off on his own recognizance or a straw bond, I have forgotten now which, and the negro escaped; that murders and crimes of all characters were of constant occurrence; that within about a year six murders had taken place in the county; that the negroes showed an utter disrespect for and defiance of the law; that the city authorities, in the exercise of their discretion upon sanitary matters, had located a hospital for infectious diseases on the outskirts of the town, and the negroes, several hundred in number, a complete mob, armed with guns, pistols, and other weapons, went out, attacked, shot into, and burned it down, and the mayor and policemen, although remonstrating, were powerless to resist it, and none of the said negroes were ever arrested or tried for the offense; that in the trial of causes in the court-house it was impossible to convict a negro of crime where a question of credibility arose between white witnesses and negro witnesses; that the juries, composed partially of whites and partially of blacks, would retire, and a hung jury was the result, the negroes always voting solidly in the jury box in favor of the acquittal of the negro, if a negro was on trial. I recollect especially reciting an instance of my own experience, where I told them that I prosecuted for Mr. Hamme, a very gallant and reputable citizen, a hat merchant of this city, who was assaulted in broad daylight in his store by Richard Holmes, a negro policeman, and struck between the eyes with a pair of brass knuckles and felled senseless to the floor; and that on three trials, although the defendant himself, Holmes, did not take the stand, that the jury, although the evidence was uncontradicted, failed to agree a single one of the three times, standing the first time nine whites for conviction and three negroes for acquittal; the second trial taking place at the next term of the court all the white men on the jury stood for conviction and the negroes on the jury for acquittal; on the third trial, which took place at a subsequent term, it likewise stood eight or nine, I have forgotten the number, whites for conviction and three or four negroes for acquittal, according to the number of negroes on the jury; and that finally the Fusion solicitor, although I myself was associated in the prosecution, nol prossed the case without even consulting me; that day after day white ladies walked the streets of the city and were insulted, and in one instance a reputable young lady, going to the cemetery, was shoved from the sidewalk by a negro woman and struck over the head with an umbrella; that the daughter of one of the ablest divines of the city was brusquely hurled up against the fence and bruised by a negro on the streets in the broad daytime; that indecent remarks were made to ladies walking the streets by negroes, and complaint after complaint being made to the city authorities, which were the ones I have before related to you, they found themselves unable to repress it; that property, life, and good order were not safe in the town; that the city authorities were totally inefficient to secure it; that the chamber of commerce, a representative business body of the city, presided over by a Republican, passed resolutions stating the city authorities were unable to secure law and order substantially, and calling upon our people, as a matter of business and self-preservation, without regard to politics, to change the existing order of affairs. That in consequence of this demoralization that I had been informed that the white people of the city had ordered several thousand Winchester rifles to protect the lives, the property, and the welfare of the people, and that I deplored any conflict, and that I hoped none would come, but if it did come and a race riot ensued, that a fatal result would come to the negroes. I did not state in that speech or in any speech made in the campaign that the whites were going to carry the election by force or fraud or any illegal means, and if I had thought so, I say most positively that I would not have countenanced it, and I would have advised against it, and I say further that as far as my knowledge, information, and belief extend, there was no such purpose on the part of the Democratic party, or the white people, to carry the election by force or fraud; but there was a determination by every legal and peaceable and energetic means, such as argument and the like would prompt, as a matter of self-preservation to our people, to hurl from power the Fusionists then in control and restore peace, law, order, and good government to our distracted State. I will state, further, that having made those statements in that speech and substantially the same thing in many others that I delivered during the campaign, I now again affirm that the statements made are a statement of the true condition of affairs as they existed in Wilmington, and if I have failed in the statement, it was in not stating other and greater wrongs which actually occurred and which I forgot to mention, among them being the publication in a negro newspaper published in the city of a vile and slanderous attack upon the virtue and reputation of the white women of our State.

Such was the fruit of incompetence and corruption of fusion success in my beloved State! Tell me, was that white domination? It was not. Yet, so reckless is Republican leadership that it sullenly and blindly says there has been no negro domination, and that there is no danger of it. Do they approve the above-recited conditions?

Let them meet facts plainly and speak out like men. They have not condemned them. They have had the opportunity in their conventions. Do they favor a remedy? Do they offer one? No; but they have declared hostility to the only remedy in sight, and emphasized it by selecting as their standard bearer in the present campaign the only man mentioned for their gubernatorial nomination who had spent years as the Republican leader in a county the majority of whose voters are negroes, and who had been nominated by the same conventions that nominated negroes for the legislature, and elected on the same ticket with them.

MANLY'S SLANDER.

During the campaign of 1898, in the city of Wilmington, a negro editor of a negro newspaper, in an editorial, published the following vile slander upon the virtue of white women:

Poor white men are careless in the matter of protecting their women, especially on farms. They are careless of their conduct toward them, and our experience among poor white people in the country teaches us that the women of that race are not any more particular in the matter of clandestine meetings with colored men than are the white men with colored women. Meetings of this kind go on for some time, until the woman's infatuation or the man's boldness bring attention to them and the man is lynched for rape. Every negro lynched is called a "big, burley, black brute," when in fact many of those who have thus been dealt with had white men for their fathers, and were not only not "black" and "burley," but were sufficiently attractive for white girls of culture and refinement to fall in love with them, as is well known to all.

Is it any wonder that the great white pulse of the State beat strong and fast in the last campaign? Is it any wonder that the noble white men of the hill country and the mountains, when they heard the cries of distress and saw the danger signals in the east, sprang to their relief at the ballot box, and with unsurpassed zeal and determination defeated the cohorts of fusion, which had inflicted those curses upon their kinsmen in the lowlands? Is it any wonder that the Fusionists, who had given the State an administration marked by incompetence and scandal in many of its branches, should have been overwhelmingly defeated?

When that campaign was over and the State had shown her revulsion to such a state of affairs, the best wisdom of the State, I may say of all parties, began to consider the situation in great seriousness, and there came an almost universal desire to provide against a return to those horrible conditions which had damaged industry, excited fear, prejudice, and violence, and endangered the peace of men and the safety of women. Those conditions arose from a mass of voters who, as a constant menace to good government, after thirty years of experience, were too ignorant to understand the issues, too irresponsible to consider them, and too prejudiced to appreciate them. After the election, prominent Populists, among them their present candidate for governor, if he has been quoted correctly, said the people would expect the Democracy to establish permanent safeguards against such return.

The Democracy has undertaken this great task. It knew the cause—the great, impersonal mass of ignorance and prejudice considering the ballot as a means of opposition to the white race—and it proposed a remedy.

OUR ELECTION LAW.

Before I discuss that remedy, I hear a complaint that our election laws are partisan. On this floor my colleague, Mr. LINNEY, in discussing lynchings, criticised our election law. He argued that lynchings happened in a State in proportion to the number of men who did not vote, having stated that where they can vote they do vote. I think the following extract from his speech shows his views as well as those common to most white men of the South as expressed by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BURKE:

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me one more suggestion?
Mr. LINNEY. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURKE of Texas. I do not defend lynching. I am as much opposed to it as any man in the United States, and my people are opposed to it.
Mr. LINNEY. I believe that.
Mr. BURKE of Texas. But in justice to this House should not the gentleman state the fact that in almost every instance the lynching occurs in consequence of the assaults of colored men upon the virtue of white women? And if such things occurred in the North the same justice would be meted out to the offenders.
Mr. WHITE. Since my race is assailed, please allow me to answer.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY] yield? He has the floor.
Mr. LINNEY. Yes. I yield for that purpose.
Mr. WHITE. I have examined that question and I am prepared to state that not more than 15 per cent of the lynchings are traceable to that crime, and there are many more outrages against colored women by white men than there are by colored men against white women.
Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is this: The suggestion of my friend from Texas is a good one, and I thank him for it. He has not these lynchings in his State, thank God, and we have them not in ours. Why? Because in his State they have a pure ballot, as we did have in ours up to the vicious election laws of 1899.

That my colleague was absolutely wrong in his reasoning is apparent from the statistics he used, if we will only compare Massachusetts with North Carolina, for in the last election there were cast in North Carolina an average of 37,000 votes in each Congressional district, while in each Massachusetts district the average was only 24,000. From his argument you would expect several lynchings in Massachusetts in that election year, and yet the statistics he used showed no lynchings in that State and four in North Carolina.

The gentleman also argued that our election law is unconstitutional because it authorizes the registrar to require the applicant for registration to prove his age, identity, and residence by at least two electors, and relied upon the case of Van Bokkelen v.

Canaday (73 N. C. Reports, 198), a case which construed the law under which an election in Wilmington was held. The gentleman entirely misconceived the principle in that case. Our present law does not conflict with it. The court held the old Wilmington law unconstitutional because it required the witnesses as to one's age, etc., to be personally known to the registrar. Judge Reade, in delivering the court's opinion, said:

It will be noted that any bystander may challenge the voter without proving anything against him, and the voter is not allowed to swear to his qualifications, but he must prove them by the oaths of others, and then they must be known to the registrar, and the registrar must be satisfied. Now, how is it possible for persons who move into Wilmington from other counties in the State to get witnesses from a distance, known to the registrars in Wilmington, to prove their age and residence? It is impossible. It is a practical denial of the right to register and vote.

Judge Rodman in concurring used this language:

I also agree with the majority of the court in its view of that part of the act which requires voters before being registered, and also if challenged before voting, to prove their qualifications by witnesses personally known to the registrars and pollholders.

* * * * * * *

The requirement that the witnesses to the qualification of a voter shall be personally known to the registrar is a new and most unreasonable addition to the qualifications for voters which the constitution prescribes, and in my opinion is clearly beyond the power of the legislature.

There is nothing similar to that in our election law. So without doubt the gentleman was wrong in his contention. He has been elected under a law which authorized the requirement of evidence by "one or more electors," which is very like "by at least two electors" in the present law. I submit that it is not only reasonable but obligatory in morals for the legislature to authorize the registrar to require proof when he, as an honest official, deems proper, of the age, identity, and residence of a voter, in order to prevent wrongful registration, otherwise the books might soon be encumbered with names of those not entitled under the law to vote. Under our law every qualified elector can register and vote. Many of its provisions are intended to prevent dishonest and illegal registration.

The fusion election laws gave the fusionists throughout North Carolina two members of the registration board, and the Democrats one, and the fusionists two judges of election and the Democrats one, thus giving the fusionists a complete majority, or two-thirds of the election officers. Under the present law we can have two-thirds, but the fusionists must have one-third. We have one registrar, and two judges of election who must be of different political parties. Under their law these election officials were appointed by the county election board, consisting of the clerk of the superior court, the register of deeds, and the chairman of the board of commissioners, who are nearly always strong partisans, and the majority of whom were, in 1898, fusionists in a great majority of the counties of North Carolina. Now we have a State board of elections, named by the legislature, of seven members, two of whom are fusionists.

They elect the county boards consisting of three discreet electors, who appoint the registrars and judges of election. In doing this the Democracy has not been more partisan than the majority of this House is in election cases and in the appointment of its election committees. It is less partisan than this Administration was in the census appointments of North Carolina under a law intended to be nonpartisan. There is not a Democratic census supervisor in all North Carolina, and few, if any, Democratic enumerators, and yet the fusionists who are responsible for this absence of Democrats in the census business in North Carolina talk of Democratic partisanship in election laws!

HAWAIIAN ELECTION LAWS.

The Hawaiian act continued by express terms the sections of the Hawaiian election laws with amendments, giving the governor the power to appoint the boards of registration, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, requiring the examination under oath of everyone who applies for registration as to every qualification, making a false answer in such examination perjury, giving any lawful voter the right to challenge one claiming registration and to cross-examine him, and denying registration until the board is satisfied that the claimant possesses the requisite qualifications. In case of such denial, claimant's only remedy is to appeal to the Supreme Court. These laws also require the tax assessor to furnish, by March 15, the board with a list of the males who have paid their taxes prior to January 1. These laws also give the governor the power to appoint three inspectors of election at each precinct, as far as practicable of opposing parties—which I interpret to mean two of one party and one of the other. These inspectors are empowered to set apart sufficient space around the voting place to prevent interference with the election. Such laws have this Congress and the President approved. They are very like ours—yet Republicans will praise them and denounce ours! Great consistency for statesmen!

SUBMISSION OF THE AMENDMENT.

But to the amendment, which I shall also append to my remarks in full, that the country may understand it.

Its opponents say it should not be submitted because a Democratic handbook issued in the last campaign promised that nothing of the sort would be submitted to the people by the Democratic party. Only its opponents say that. No man, in my opinion, who voted the Democratic ticket in order to redeem the State from the evils of fusion rule has yet said it. Where is the man who voted the successful State ticket on account of such promise that opposes the amendment? Those who put forth that handbook acted honestly. They then did not expect such amendment. At that time thousands of white men in the west did not appreciate the conditions in the east. As the campaign neared its end the truth began to be established throughout the State, and defeated the Fusionists. A few days after the election the revolution in Wilmington took place.

A conflict of the races occurred, resulting in great loss of life. After that no one doubted the seriousness of eastern conditions. Upon all good citizens was impressed the necessity of the legislature taking some steps to insure good government for the future, and to exclude the possibility of a return to such conditions as Wilmington, Newbern, and other communities had suffered. The legislature assembled in January. It then became their duty under their oaths to propose any and all legislation that to them seemed best for the State. No promise by others could compel them to violate their oaths or plain duty. An almost universal demand was made upon them to deal with the suffrage question in a manly, straightforward manner. They acted with great deliberation. Many able men put their heads together and formulated an act. Their proposition is submitted to the people.

No Populist should object, as it is in strict accord with one of his chief demands—the referendum. Who can, who should, who will object to leaving this or any other matter to the people? When men are afraid to submit a question to the people, the seeds of tyranny are being sown. When one fears to trust the people, the people should fear to trust him. Let them thoroughly understand it. Let them decide it. The people readily understand that criticism of its submission is intended to distract attention from its merits. We are acting under the Constitution. We have the right to discuss this amendment, to appeal to the people in its behalf, to explain its provisions, to impress its necessity, and to foretell its practical results.

PROMINENT REPUBLICANS FAVOR IT.

The Republican party, containing tens of thousands of ignorant negroes, may fret and fume over it, but can not force the individual judgments and consciences of all of its strong men against it. The people—not Democrats alone—but the people have the right to adopt it, and the world knows that its support comes from those who are charged with the civilization of the State.

Many prominent and influential Republicans favor the amendment, among them Hon. Thomas Settle, Member of this House in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses; Hon. H. R. Starbuck, present superior-court judge; ex-Governor Curtis H. Brogden, Messrs. Valloy Pace and J. M. Allen, of the Ninth district; Hon. J. B. Mason, Hon. E. V. Cox, Hon. A. W. Shaffer, Hon. T. P. Devereux, Messrs. R. P. Williams, Joseph Perry, and others. If the Democracy advocates it, and so many Republicans advocate it, surely it must be worthy of consideration. Thus, understanding conditions in my State, I think a thorough comprehension of the amendment will convince the impartial critic of its propriety, fairness, and constitutionality.

SECTIONS 4 AND 5.

Other sections of the amendment prescribe qualifications pertaining to sex, age, citizenship, residence, registration, and freedom from conviction or confession of a felony. The fourth and fifth sections are as follows:

SEC. 4. Every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language; and before he shall be entitled to vote he shall have paid, on or before the 1st day of March of the year in which he proposes to vote, his poll tax, as prescribed by law, for the previous year. Poll taxes shall be a lien only on assessed property, and no process shall issue to enforce the collection of the same, except against assessed property.

SEC. 5. No male person who was on January 1, 1867, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under the laws of any State in the United States wherein he then resided, and no lineal descendant of any such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote at any election in this State by reason of his failure to possess the educational qualification prescribed in section 4 of this article: Provided, He shall have registered in accordance with the terms of this section prior to December 1, 1908. The general assembly shall provide for a permanent record of all persons who register under this section on or before November 1, 1908, and all such persons shall be entitled to register and vote in all elections by the people of this State, unless disqualified under section 2 of this article: Provided, Such persons shall have paid their poll tax, as required by law.

Its purpose is not to injure, humiliate, or impede any class of our citizens. It will stimulate education, insure peace, and remove many obstructions from discussions of economic questions. We seek not strife and oppression, but safety and good government. The equal protection of our laws will continue to bless those who do not vote as well as those who do.

MANY NEGROES WILL VOTE.

Under it thousands of negroes will vote, some of them among the best and most influential of their race. Some will register under section 5, as in most of the thirteen original States free negroes could once vote. They voted in North Carolina prior to 1835, and in Massachusetts and other States in 1866.

There were 21,000 free negroes in North Carolina in 1835, 4,000 of whom were entitled then to vote. There are probably 10,000 negroes in the State who can register under section 5.

There are several thousand white men in the State of foreign birth, none of whom can register under section 5, though many of them can register under section 4. Unlettered white men, except those of foreign extraction, can vote under the amendment, provided they comply with the first three sections, are guiltless of felony, and pay their poll tax. The right of suffrage is limited to those who can read and write, and yet is not on that account denied to those, if otherwise qualified, who represent generations of electors, and on whom is the imprint of centuries of heroic and patriotic performance in public affairs.

Every citizen of every race, who has the reasonable qualifications required, will be a voter. The fifth section denies the right of no one to vote, and does no wrong in extending suffrage. Those who may register under it are conclusively presumed to have that sufficient intelligence which in others must be shown by ability to read and write. Common sense and observation teach that those whose ancestors have taken part in government and who have from their fathers and grandfathers learned the rights and glories of free institutions, receiving by tradition and inheritance a capacity and aptitude for independent thought and conduct, are, though unlettered, as intelligent—and frequently more intelligent—than educated persons who have not inherited that capacity, and who have had the advantage of no such traditions.

The object of the educational test is to insure sufficient intelligence, but ability to read and write is not the only evidence of intelligence.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I understood my friend to say that the object of the educational test was to insure intelligence, but that if the ancestors of the illiterates had been participating in the Government, then the illiterates were to be admitted to suffrage. Now it looks to me as if the only people who are to be shut out under such a provision as that are the illiterate blacks; and I heard my friend the other day pay such a glowing tribute to the beauty and blessedness of the Constitution of the United States that I would like to hear him justify such a statute or constitutional provision as indirectly excludes people from the right to vote on account of their color.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will listen to what I have to say he will understand my position, and I will show him that we exclude no one on account of color. I repeat that the reason an educational test is adopted in any constitution is that it is an evidence of intelligence. But we take this further ground, that the ability to read and write is not the only evidence of intelligence. When I see a white man, American, English, German, or other, whose race has made the civilization of the world what it is, who has carried independence and liberty wherever independence and liberty have gone, with a great history back of him, when I see him built like my friend, with his physical characteristics, whether he can read and write or not, I see the evidences of intelligence, and you need not require education to show it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The census of the United States shows that the deficiency in the matter of reading and writing is quite as much a characteristic, or nearly so, of the white people of North Carolina as it is of the black people.

Mr. KITCHIN. I say nothing of that, but the gentleman certainly understood me to say that white illiterates are endowed with more intelligence (and the intelligent people in my country know it) than the illiterate blacks. That is the point I make.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Why does not your proposed constitution say distinctly that colored people who can not read and write are to be excluded from the right of voting?

Mr. KITCHIN. Because our constitution does not mean that. There are some negroes who cannot read and write and yet who will vote. There are other people, of foreign birth, unable to read and write who will not vote.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How can the gentleman have studied the Constitution of the United States as a Representative on this floor, and then come here with a subterfuge of that character?

Mr. KITCHIN. I say we stand by the Constitution of the United States; I say plainly that we have not violated it and do not intend to violate it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly you have dodged it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not, and the gentleman knows I have not. I do not like any such insinuation.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What I mean is that this instrument which you call the new constitution of North Carolina is certainly intended to dodge the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, if the gentleman will listen to me, if I have time I will state my views on that, and in my opinion they do not conflict with the Constitution. The gentleman is in error if he thinks the Constitution guarantees the right to vote to the blacks.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It certainly says that no State shall exclude people from the right to vote on account of their race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it says the right of suffrage shall not be denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It says that and no more. Now, I say this, that when this amendment has been passed in North Carolina, there will be probably from thirty to fifty thousand colored men who will continue to vote. Not one of those could vote if his right to vote was denied on account of his race or color.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Why don't you go ahead and apply that test of illiteracy to the white people as well?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If my colleague will allow me, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, who thinks that it applies to black men alone, I would suggest that it will apply to Indians, to men of foreign birth, and all others of whatever color who or whose ancestors could not vote in 1867 or prior thereto, and is therefore not a discrimination against the negro as a race.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is not a very great exception in North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. In further answer, I say we think in North Carolina the illiterate whites, as a class, have sufficient intelligence. The educational test does not deny a negro's right to vote because he is a negro. Massachusetts has the educational test. Would you say the ignorant negro in Massachusetts is denied the right to vote on account of his color?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Massachusetts has made a very fair appropriation of money to teach people within that State to read and write, for one thing.

Mr. KITCHIN. North Carolina is doing that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Why don't you put it as frankly as the Senator from South Carolina did about a similar constitution as to that State when he said that having tried to shoot and defraud the negro out of the right to vote they proposed to do it by the constitution.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is in error. He was speaking of the time before that constitution was adopted.

Mr. KITCHIN. South Carolina had a right to deal with the matter by constitutional amendment and so have we. And I will state that we do not deny the right of any man to vote on account of his color or race. Every negro, every Indian, and every Chinaman can vote if he has the very reasonable qualifications laid down in this amendment.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is a great concession to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the Constitution of the United States and deny that we contradict it in any respect. I will ask my friend, How could any black man vote if we denied him the right to vote on account of his color? I will further ask the gentleman, How could any former slave vote under our amendment if we denied him the right to vote on account of a previous condition of servitude? And yet there will be hundreds of ex-slaves that will continue to vote in North Carolina under this amendment. Not one of them could vote if we violated the Constitution of the United States and denied to them the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition. We do not do it; but when we come to the point of intelligence and require sufficient intelligence, then we say the intelligence of a man is to be determined in two ways: First, by being able to read and write.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Second, by inheritance.

Mr. KITCHIN. Second, by the man or his ancestors having voted prior to 1867.

Senator SHELBY M. CULLOM, a distinguished Republican, chairman of the Hawaiian Commission, in his report on the Hawaiian Islands on pages 2 and 3 of Senate Document No. 16, third session Fifty-fifth Congress, uses this language:

> An important subject of our investigation was that of the adaptability of the several races of the people who inhabit the islands for American citizenship, and their ability to sustain the obligations which attach to the right of suffrage. The American idea of universal suffrage presupposes that the body of citizens who are to exercise it in a free and independent manner have, by inheritance or education, such knowledge and appreciation of the responsibilities of free suffrage and of a full participation in the sovereignty of the country as to be able to maintain a republican government.

This is strong authority upon a great truth; that is, that intelligence, the capacity to grasp and understand situations and issues, is inheritable. Why, if you take one hundred illiterate white men such as live in my friend's district, perhaps——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Few live there.

Mr. KITCHIN. If you take 100 of them and stand them up in line, and then take 100 of the African race, who, at best, are only three hundred years removed from barbarism and only a generation from slavery, and stand them by the side of the 100 illiterate white men, everybody knows that those 100 illiterate white men are superior to those 100 illiterate colored men in general information, in intelligence, and in everything that goes to qualify a man for the proper exercise of suffrage; and no one can deny it. I respect the colored man who in the last thirty or forty years has come out of slavery and risen in the esteem of his fellows and in the esteem of the white race. We have them scattered through North Carolina. We have nothing against them. We say they are an honor to the race and they show what that race can do, but when we say that the unlettered white man is superior in intelligence to the unlettered colored man we insult nobody, but only state a fact that every man knows. You recognize that wherever you go. You recognized it here in voting for the Hawaiian bill. I thought that was——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think my friend denied it by voting in favor of universal suffrage, did he not?

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I noticed my friend accused us some days ago of having denied some people in Porto Rico the benefits and blessings of our Constitution——

Mr. KITCHIN. I am in favor of the Constitution going everywhere our jurisdiction goes, and the gentleman again fails to perceive——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would be delighted to see it applied somewhat at home.

Mr. KITCHIN. It has been applied in my State, and no man who is acquainted with the conditions there can deny it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would like to say this. I have a great deal of sympathy with my friend's argument, but I do not like to sit here and listen to tirades upon the Declaration of Independence, liberty, and the Democratic party, to be followed by such an argument as my friend's. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman may not like it, and I do not care whether he likes it or not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. If my friend will drop the Constitution and drop the Declaration of Independence and keep away from Kansas City, I will take more stock in his arguments.

Mr. KITCHIN. I shall neither drop the Constitution nor abandon the Declaration of Independence to obtain the gentleman's approval. Mr. Chairman, I shall now further proceed to demonstrate the constitutionality of this amendment as I intended when first interrupted.

FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Political motives, when the best men of the South were not heard in undertaking to elevate the negro to the political position to which white men had struggled through ages, did not insure his right to vote, but merely enacted that it should not be denied on account of three particular things. The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States says:

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

RIGHT TO RESTRICT SUFFRAGE.

With that limitation, the State has the absolute right to say who shall and who shall not vote. It legally denies the right to vote to citizens under 21 years of age, and to those who have not resided in the State a specified time. The fourteenth amendment, guaranteeing the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States and the equal protection of its laws to every person within the jurisdiction of a State, does not confer suffrage. If it did, women and children would vote, for they are persons and citizens.

The State still has the sovereign right to prescribe the qualifications for its voters. These vary in different States. The fifteenth amendment means that if a citizen of the United States has the qualifications required by a State to vote, then his right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of his race, color, etc.

Suppose Pennsylvania, which possibly has more foreign-born white men than negroes unable to write our language, should adopt our amendment, would any one question its constitutionality? If constitutional for Pennsylvania it is constitutional for us. It is sometimes urged that it will disqualify more negroes than whites. The constitution does not forbid that. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Williams v. Mississippi, has expressly sustained the Mississippi suffrage provisions which disqualify more negroes than whites, this being their admitted purpose. Larceny throughout the South disqualifies vastly more negroes than whites. The number disqualified does not affect its constitutionality. A State can not deny one man the right to vote on account of his color, race, or previous condition of servitude, but it can deny a thousand the right to vote for other causes.

TO ELIMINATE THE UNFIT VOTER.

A reading of the amendment discloses no reference to race, color, or servitude. Those who adopt it and those who construe it will know that it says what it means, neither more nor less. Its enemies often ignore what all must concede, that in the essential requisites of the best and safest suffrage one race is, and inevitably so, from its traditions and history, its environment, its nature and condition, superior to another, and that under any reasonable rule intended to separate the fit from the unfit voter a larger proportion of the inferior race will necessarily be eliminated than of the superior race. A State has the right to adopt any reasonable rule, qualification, or expedient to separate the fit from the unfit voter not violative of the fifteenth amendment.

For this purpose Republican Massachusetts has an educational qualification, Republican Rhode Island a property qualification, Republican Pennsylvania a tax-paying qualification, and this Republican Congress passed the Hawaiian bill with an educational qualification for the people who wish to vote in those islands, and under which 30 per cent of the men can not vote. No rule will be perfect. No law will admit every fit voter and reject none, and reject every unfit voter and admit none. I submit, however, that the proposed amendment, under present conditions in North Carolina, is as nearly a perfect rule as wisdom is apt to devise. Its extension of suffrage to more whites than negroes is natural and necessary in distinguishing the fit from the unfit voter.

A voter should be patriotic, desiring his country's welfare; conscientious, loving right above all things; intelligent, fairly understanding the general principles of government and the ordinary matters presented for his suffrage, and fearless, acting upon his best judgment. He should vote honestly, without fear, favor, or corruption.

The ordinary unlettered negro is not prepared for the duties and responsibilities of suffrage. He usually knows nothing of and cares nothing for public issues. Appeals by bad leaders to his fears, passions, and ignorance usually control him. He has little pride in the glorious history of his country. He dares not vote openly contrary to the mass of negroes.

SUPERIOR TO UNLETTERED NEGROES.

The unlettered white man, on the contrary, has the courage of his convictions. He is intelligent. At his father's feet he learned the lessons of government and the duties and rights of citizens. He is superior to the unlettered negro in information and intellectual grasp. He has for generations attended the courts and habitually heard legal and political discussions. He understands American fundamental principles. He is a patriot. He fought at Kings Mountain, at Guilford, and Trenton. He was with Washington at Yorktown, with Jackson at New Orleans, with Lee and Grant at Appomattox. His moral faculty and firmness of purpose exceed those of the unlettered negro. He has claimed and exercised political rights for hundreds of years. Seven centuries ago he wrung the great charter from tyrant King John. He made Luther's reformation successful. He shouldered his rifle, builded his cabin on the frontier, and laid the foundations of the country's greatness. Is he not better qualified to exercise a patriotic, intelligent, incorruptible ballot than an uneducated man whose race and ancestry have never approached him in liberty, in government, in progress, in mind? It can not be surprising that more of his race than of any other will vote under any reasonable system of suffrage.

The white man conceived the railroad, steamboat, printing press, telegraph, and other inventions that bless—art, science, medicine are his. He organized our Government, created our educational and developed our religious systems. He has come in contact with the brown man, and his superiority appeared; he has met the yellow man, and the yellow man gave him the way; he has faced the red man, and the red man is disappearing from the earth; he has touched the black man in his native home, and the black man yielded to him.

EVILS OF IGNORANCE AND PREJUDICE.

The people of North Carolina, considering well their task, have undertaken to remove from the ballot the evils of ignorance and prejudice. Believing in the larger capacity, better intelligence, steadier character, and more constant patriotism of the race most greatly blessed by God, they will not deny the right to vote to unlettered men who cherish an ancient heritage of political rights and duties. We give all educated the same rights, but we refuse to place on the steady, intelligent, unlettered patriot responsibility for the defects of the shiftless, prejudiced, and uninformed. We draw a line of separation and appeal to enlightened judgment and conscience for justification.

STAND OR FALL AS A WHOLE.

The entire amendment will stand or fall as a whole. It is thus submitted to the popular vote. No one can vote for one section and reject another. All sections pertain to suffrage. Each section is material to the whole amendment. Its opponents can cite no authority in which an amendment or statute of similar nature and integrity has been sustained at all when declared unconstitutional in a material part. In support of the proposition I have stated there are numerous authorities, only one of which I will cite, as it is of universal fame. It is the case which shocked the American public and limited the Government's taxing power, compelling it to resort to stamp taxes in time of need. It was strong enough to invalidate all sections of the income-tax schedule of the Wilson bill, on the ground that some of the taxes levied were unconstitutional, though many of them, standing alone, were admittedly constitutional.

The last paragraph of the court's opinion, after referring to those held unconstitutional, concludes that "all those sections constituting one entire scheme of taxation are necessarily invalid." Republicans usually approve that decision. No man who approves it can consistently say that one section of our proposed amendment can be declared unconstitutional and the others stand intact. I quote the following bearing on this proposition from the opinion of the court in that (the income tax) case (158 U. S., 636):

INCOME-TAX DECISION.

We think the rule laid down by Chief Justice Shaw in Warren vs. Charlestown (2 Gray, 84) is applicable, that if the different parts "are so intimately connected with and dependent upon each other as conditions, considerations, or compensations for each other as to warrant a belief that the legislature intended them as a whole, and that if all could not be carried into effect the legislature would not pass the residue independently, and some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional, or connected must fall with them." Or, as the point is put by Mr. Justice Matthews in Poindexter v. Greenhow (114 U. S., 270, 304): "It is undoubtedly true that there may be cases where one part of a statute may be enforced as constitutional and another be declared inoperative and void, because unconstitutional; but these are cases where the parts are so distinctly separable that each can stand alone, and where the court is able to see and to declare that the intention of the legislature was that the part pronounced valid should be enforceable even though the other parts should fail. To hold otherwise would be to substitute for the law intended by the legislature one they may never have been willing by itself to enact."

The court then cites Spraigue vs. Thompson (118 U. S., 90, 95) to the same effect. A constitutional amendment will be treated, if possible, with greater consideration, in order to ascertain the people's intentions, than an ordinary legislative act. I predict that no honorable man will ever assert that either the legislature or the people would have approved our amendment with the fifth section omitted.

I have referred to the above authority in order to cogently refute the main arguments generally made in North Carolina against it, when its enemies, abandoning other ground, appeal to the fears of the people after first saying that (which we controvert) the fifth section is unconstitutional, by declaring that the other sections will stand without it.

It is, however, now fully understood that the legislature in June will add another section to the amendment, declaring that if for any reason any part of the amendment shall fail, then the whole amendment shall be void. This will remove the fears of the most timid and unbelieving, and convince him that unlettered men who, or whose ancestors, could vote prior to 1867 will continue to vote. The intent of the legislature will then be plain. The amendment will remain as a whole or fail altogether.

Often when one attacks section 5 he wants no negroes disqualified, but if negroes are disqualified he wants whites also disqualified. The unlettered white man has no worse enemy than he who on the one hand labors to prevent the disqualification of incompetent negroes by opposing the amendment, and on the other hand strives to disqualify unlettered white men, after its adoption, by insisting that section 5 is unconstitutional and shall not stand, and that the other sections shall stand, thus demanding at every turn that unlettered whites with greatly superior natural and acquired qualifications shall be forever chained to equality with unlettered negroes.

NOT AN ABRIDGING SECTION.

No one questions the constitutionality of the first four sections. Section 5, instead of denying or abridging the right to vote, expressly says the right to vote shall not be denied to certain ones on account of the lack of educational qualification. This section is an enlarging, not an abridging section, and its reasonable extension of suffrage to certain ones is because of the actual intelligence and fitness for suffrage universally known to be usually possessed by them.

Consider the effect of the amendment as a whole. It is admitted that after its adoption thousands of negroes will vote; not one could vote if the right to vote were denied on account of his race. Thousands of living testimonials will contradict the assertion that it denies the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

An unlettered white man, 30 years of age, born of parents who came to our country after the civil war, will not be benefited by section 5, but his right to vote is not denied on account of his race or color. No one can say, "You require me to read and write before voting. I can not read and write, therefore you deny my right to vote on account of my color."

In Massachusetts, in order for a negro to vote he must be able to read and write. If he has this reasonable educational qualification he votes, otherwise he does not vote. Yet his color does not prevent his suffrage. It is his lack of education. Exactly the same will be his case under our amendment. Under it every negro can vote in North Carolina who could vote in Massachusetts, and also an additional class, those whose ancestors in any State could vote at any time prior to 1867. He may be coal black, of the humblest race, and may have been a slave, yet if he has the reasonable qualifications prescribed, without effort at denial he will vote. If the amendment denied the right to vote on account of race, color, or servitude, then a former negro slave could not vote, though he might be the wisest and most highly educated man in the S tate.

VAST DIFFERENCE IN FITNESS.

Between the great mass of unlettered ones, who, or whose ancestors, could vote prior to 1867, and the great mass of the unlettered ones who or whose ancestors could not then vote, there is a real and vast difference in capacity, in fitness, in intellectual and moral force, in information, in love of home and country, in aspiration, in all that makes competence for good suffrage. It is a deep, time-proven, unmistakable, unchangeable, God-created difference, known to all men.

The position of those who oppose the amendment assumes that there is no difference in fitness for suffrage between the unlettered whites as a class who will vote under it and the unlettered negroes as a class who will not vote under it, and that the only difference between them is race and color. Those who will may contend that the unlettered negro is the unlettered white man's equal in this respect, but the advocates of this amendment stand for the white man's superiority. The Constitution does not forbid our position. Present conditions demand it, and its results will vindicate it.

POPULIST PLATFORM.

That the Populist organization admitted the existence of negro domination in the past and the danger of it for the future is conclusively shown, it matters not what their speakers may say, by the deliberate insertion of a plank in their present State platform favoring an amendment to disqualify any and all negroes, and persons of negro descent to the third generation, from ever holding office. The fact is, every man who favors that ought to favor our amendment, and I believe he does; and I further believe that that plank was adopted for the mere purpose, on the part of Populist leaders, to divide the votes of white men who oppose negro rule in any part of North Carolina.

If the educated negro of character is unfit in Populist eyes to hold office, is the ignorant negro competent to dictate who shall hold office? The Populist plank is the most ungrateful proposition ever adopted by a convention, for it can not be denied that the leaders who had that plank inserted owed their political positions to a large extent to negroes. When the great majority of ignorant negroes no longer vote, the evils which all white men dread will be avoided. The tool of ignorance can no longer be wielded by politicians contrary to the best interests of humanity.

The uneducated white man has never yet brought ruin and disaster by his ballot. He has stood as a patriot in every storm of political strife.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

The Declaration says "all men are created equal." It has been ably maintained that the signers of the Declaration had in mind men of European descent—white men. This was the view of the great Stephen A. Douglas. The Supreme Court, in the Dred Scott case, said it "was too clear for dispute that the enslaved African race was not intended to be included" in those words. It is, however, true that all men, women, and children, of every race, are equal and will remain equal, under the law, in the rights of person, and property, in the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Voting is not necessary to that equality, for women, boys, and insane people have it. For the good of the public one man's life is taken by law and another is imprisoned. For the good of the public suffrage is limited. All men are created equal in a state of nature. When they organize society and establish government they surrender to that government—to their constitution—a portion of their rights. That constitution, or the sovereign power under it, then has the inherent right to say what class of persons shall constitute the electorate. Our organized society exists under two separate constitutions—the Federal and the State. Under them the people of the State can at any time change their laws or their State constitution in any respect not in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

THE 1908 CLAUSE AND THE POLL TAX.

It will be noted that everyone who registers for the first time after 1908 must be able to read and write. This is a great stimulus to education, and the white boy now 13 years old will learn to read and write, thus demonstrating the great characteristic of his race—the determination to qualify himself for governmental affairs, and showing his superiority over the negro, who will have the opportunity of similar public schools. It is derogatory to the intelligence of the white youth of our State to think they will not learn to read and write in the next eight years. It will be further noted that every illiterate white man who registers before 1908 will always thereafter enjoy the privilege of voting without regard to education in any manner. How can any man object to this? Certainly no friend of the uneducated white man can object to it—his enemies alone can oppose it.

Another feature is the poll-tax qualification. It is provided that those liable to a poll tax must pay that tax for the previous year on or before March 1 of the year in which he offers to vote, it being his last year's poll tax. This is a very wise provision. No man should take part in an election who willfully refuses to pay his poll tax, which goes to education and the poor. Our old men are, by the constitution, exempt from poll taxes, and our county commissioners are authorized to and do exempt all others from the poll tax who are in their opinion for any cause entitled to exemption. This prevents any hardship. It merely tells the able-bodied young and middle-aged men that they must pay something to support governmental objects, if they want to help elect the officers. Here again will the white race meet its duty and exhibit its superiority.

CONCLUSION.

Having studied this amendment with all side lights available, I am thoroughly satisfied that it is just, wise, necessary, and constitutional. Of course neither myself nor any other man can say how any judge or court will hold if its validity should ever be questioned in the courts. The utmost we can do is to give the reasons for the faith within us, and trust that the courts will consider the whole matter, if it ever reaches them, in a spirit of fairness and freedom from partisanship, confidently believing that when such a spirit shall guide them they can never find a word in the Constitution or a principle of fundamental law which our amendment contravenes.

Mississippi and South Carolina years ago limited the suffrage in a manner which separates the fit from the unfit voter, allowing the whites with superior intelligence to vote, and yet disqualifying the ignorant negroes. The qualifications in those States stand unchallenged. Louisiana has provisions very similar to our amendment. They stand to-day, and I am informed that no one has brought its validity into question in the courts. Her ablest lawyers and her entire delegation on this floor have entire confidence in its constitutionality, and express gratification that the race problem in their State is solved.

Many of you have doubtless been surprised at the novelty of our amendment, but on due consideration you will find no valid objection to its adoption by our people. Hold your hands off and let us deal with the problem. If you are interested on account of the negro, we say that we think more of the negro than you do and treat him better. He has not been shot down in my State because he wanted to work, as he was in Illinois. We have forgiven him for the evils he has inflicted on our State, for he knows not what he does; but we desire to forestall for the future the blighting effects of his ignorance and incapacity.

We believe that through causes which mankind could not control one race excels the other, and while those of the inferior race of sufficient intelligence will be among the States electors, we insist that we have the right to make an honest constitutional effort to place the intelligent unlettered white patriot on higher ground than the ignorant, careless negro. We are engaged in the white man's cause, the cause of better government and higher civilization, and upon white men we rely for success.

A. A. Hicks, being first duly sworn, says that he is an attorney at law, and has been practicing law in Oxford, Granville County, N. C., since the 4th day of October, 1887; that Harvey Hobgood, the defendant referred to in the foregoing affidavit and warrant, is a white man and has been his client for at least ten years; that after the removal of the trial from L. P. Wortham, esq., before William Royster, esq., of Oxford, N. C., he was employed by Harvey Hobgood to appear and defend him in said action; that he did appear before the said William Royster, J. P., and objected to the trial of the said Hobgood before him for the legal reason that the same had been removed from the township where the prosecution originated, and the same was sent by the said William Royster or L. P. Wortham, or both, before T. J. Mitchner, a justice of the peace for Fishing Creek Township; that affiant appeared with his client at the house of T. J. Mitchner and defended said action for the said Hobgood; that he has known L. P. Wortham, William Royster, and T. J. Mitchner for several years; that they are all negroes; that William Royster, to whom the said warrant was first sent, is a coal-black negro, a partisan Republican, and was the warm friend of the said Henry P. Harris, the prosecutor in said action, and had recently succeeded in procuring the governor of North Carolina, Hon. D. L. Russell, to pardon the said Henry P. Harris from a two years' term in the penitentiary, said Harris having been convicted of a secret assault upon a white man; that affiant used every means in his power to get the said negro justices to return Hobgood's case before a white magistrate, of whom there were one or two in the township, but his efforts were in vain.

Civil Code for Alaska.

SPEECH
OF
HON. W. S. COWHERD,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 3119) to provide a civil code for Alaska—

Mr. COWHERD said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I take advantage of the rule permitting general debate in order to make a few remarks in regard to the Nicaragua Canal bill, which lately passed the House. The Representatives from the State of Missouri on this side of the Chamber—at least, all who were present on that occasion—voted against the passage of that measure. Several Republican papers since that time have taken occasion to criticise our vote, and the State convention of the Republican party, which assembled last week in Kansas City, inserted in their platform a denunciation of the Democratic members of Congress from that State because of their vote on this measure. As a matter of fact, every member of the Missouri delegation was and is now favorable to an isthmian canal, and I believe the same might be said almost without exception of every man who cast his vote against the measure that passed the House.

The question, however, on which we voted was not whether the Isthmian Canal should be built, but was the passage at that time of the particular bill then before the House. It probably has escaped the memory of some people that the Fifty-fifth Congress passed a bill providing for the appointment of a commission by the President and appropriating a million dollars to be used in making a full survey and investigation of all the different routes across the Isthmus and to report to Congress in regard to the same, and I believe the measure was broad enough and intended to cover the obtaining of options from the Government controlling the territory through which the canal would be built.

It is a fact not generally known to the public that there are four routes across the Isthmus now under consideration and investigation by the Walker commission. First, the Nicaraguan route, which is about 169 miles long, traversing territory of both Nicaragua and Costa Rica. This route will require 6 locks, the lake level being at an elevation of 100 feet. On the Atlantic side the harbor is bad, owing to the dirt and filth brought down by the San Juan River. It is probable a good harbor can be built above the mouth of the river, but this will involve very considerable expense. Much work will also have to be done on the Pacific harbor. The estimates of the cost of the work are so far apart no accurate idea of the cost can be given. The Panama route is 47 miles long, and will probably require 4 locks, the upper level being about 80 feet above the level of the sea. It presents no engineering feat that may not be overcome; it lies entirely within the jurisdiction of Colombia. A French company has completed probably about 40 per cent of the work, has built a railroad along the entire line across the Isthmus.

The objection to the route is the fact that it is complicated by a concession made to a French company, and our Government can afford to touch it only in case the French company would sell out their entire interest in all the property and the Colombian Government would give us a new concession or grant upon proper terms. There are still two routes left about which little is known. San Blas is one, 22 miles long, and this is about all that is definitely known of the route, as it has never been surveyed, and in fact it is said that no white man's foot has ever crossed the Isthmus at that point. The Darien route is 23 miles long. It ends both on the Atlantic and Pacific side in an excellent natural harbor. Neither the Darien nor the San Blas route is complicated by any concessions heretofore granted; and while they are on Colombian territory, the country is really owned and controlled by a native Indian tribe that has never been conquered, and one that never permitted a surveying party to cross its territory until the present commission negotiated a treaty with them. The present commission is making a full and complete survey of all these routes, collecting information as to all concessions that have been granted, and will be able by the next session of Congress to give a complete and exhaustive report as to the conditions affecting all four of these routes. There are on the commission a half dozen engineers among the most skillful and learned men in their profession in the world. When they have reported the facts, Congress will be in a position to act intelligently upon this question and not until then, especially when one remembers that two of the routes across the Isthmus have never heretofore been fully surveyed or even inspected, except near the shores, by white men.

So much for the general features of the question. Now, as to the particular bill upon which we were called to vote: It was objected to, first, because it selected a special route, when neither Congress nor anyone outside of it was possessed of sufficient information at the time to say whether it was the best; second, it provided that the President should proceed to procure from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica a concession giving us control over the right of way and authorizing us to build a canal, thus selecting a route before any agreement was made with the government that owned it. This put us absolutely at the mercy of these two South American Governments. Once before, when Mr. Frelinghuysen was Secretary of State, we attempted to secure this right of way, and a treaty which was never ratified was negotiated with Nicaragua, by the terms of which we agreed to lend them $4,000,000 in cash to pay individuals for the land taken and to give the Nicaraguan Government one-third of the net earnings forever.

Had Costa Rica held out for similar terms, the right of way would have cost us $8,000,000 and two-thirds of the earnings of the canal in perpetuity. How much would they demand, if the present bill should become a law, when we come to negotiate for a concession, after Congress has already decided we must have it and nothing is left for them to do but to fix the price? In addition to this there are already two concessionaires claiming the right of way—the old Maritime Canal Company, who insist their concession has not expired, and what is known as the Cragin Company, who claim to have obtained a concession but a short time ago. Confronted with these conditions, was it good business policy to tie the Government up with a single route and instruct the President to buy the right of way?

But this was not the only objection to the bill as it stood when put upon its passage. The people of the country have heard much of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was designed to take the place of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, and which aside from the formal parts is as follows:

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost, or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations, or through subscription to or purchase of stock or shares, and that, subject to the provisions of the present convention, the said Government shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

ARTICLE II.

The high contracting parties, desiring to preserve and maintain the "general principle" of neutralization established in Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer Convention, adopt as the basis of such neutralization, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention between Great Britain and certain other powers, signed at Constantinople, October 22, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Maritime Canal, that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open, in time of war as in time of peace, to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

3. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not revictual nor take any stores in the canal except so far as may be strictly necessary; and the transit of such vessels through the canal shall be effected with the least possible delay, in accordance with the regulations in force, and with only such intermission as may result from the necessities of the service.

Prizes shall be in all respects subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerents.

4. No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war or warlike materials in the canal except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

5. The provisions of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal, within three marine miles of either end. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than twenty-four hours at any one time except in case of distress, and in such case shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within twenty-four hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

6. The plant, establishments, buildings, and all works necessary to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal shall be deemed to be part thereof, for the purposes of this convention, and in time of war as in time of peace shall enjoy complete immunity from attack or injury by belligerents and from acts calculated to impair their usefulness as part of the canal.

7. No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

ARTICLE III.

The high contracting parties will, immediately upon the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, bring it to the notice of the other powers and invite them to adhere to it.

ARTICLE IV.

The present convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Her Britannic Majesty; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or at London within six months from the date hereof, or earlier if possible.

In faith whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this convention and thereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington the 5th day of February, in the year of Lord 1900.

JOHN HAY.
PAUNCEFOTE.

For one I believe that the isthmian canal should be built by the United States; should be owned and controlled by the United States, protected and defended by the United States; should be open to the passage of all vessels in times of peace and, when this Government is at war, should be a part of the defenses of the country, and to that end should be fortified and garrisoned. I do not believe we should put one hundred and fifty to two hundred millions of the people's money in that great enterprise and leave it to become the property in time of war of the first battle ship that can reach its mouth. It is contended that our Navy will be sufficient protection for the canal in time of war. Against this contention stands the admitted fact that one gun well placed on land is the equal, according to experts, of from three to six upon an attacking ship. Should the approaches to the canal be seized by a hostile force and fortified, we would be compelled to bring from three to six times the opposing force in order to retake the property.

Would it not be better at the outset to build and man fortifications sufficient to protect this great investment and hold this important post in the defense of our coasts? It is contended, however, that we should follow the plan England has adopted in neutralizing the Suez Canal. In comparing these two projects it must be remembered that we have held now for nearly a century the indisputable domination of the Western Hemisphere, a claim no government has made good in regard to European or Asiatic lands or waters. It must also be remembered that while England has not fortified the Suez Canal, yet, with her forts at Gibraltar and Malta, the Mediterranean is absolutely dominated by her guns, and she can in time of war or necessity close the canal at will. It is well at this point to call attention to the fact that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty submitted by the President on February 5 to the Senate is still pending before that body, and the time for ratification has but lately been extended until after the next meeting of Congress.

It is also well to remember that under the terms of that treaty the canal is to be kept free and open in times of war as well as in times of peace to the vessels of both war and commerce of all nations on terms of entire equality, giving to our enemies the same right to use our property for the purpose of attacking us that we would have for the purpose of preparing for defense; and should we attempt to prevent an attacking fleet from passing through the canal, we might, if this treaty is ratified, at once involve our country in trouble with Great Britain. The treaty further provides that the canal can not be blockaded in time of war, that our own vessels can not revictual or take stores therein, that we shall not embark or disembark troops or munitions of war in the canal or within 3 marine miles of either end, that our own vessels of war shall not remain within 3 miles of said canal in time of war for a term longer than twenty-four hours, and that no fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the adjacent waters.

It can not be possible that the people of the United States are willing on such terms to enter upon this great work; yet in harmony with the provisions of that proposed treaty the Nicaraguan Canal bill was amended in the House of Representatives in order that there might be no conflict with it. The clause providing that the Secretary of War should construct and fortify for defense was changed by striking out the word "fortification" and inserting the word "provisions." An amendment providing that "the Secretary should fortify, garrison, and protect" was voted down. An amendment providing "that the location should not be fixed and determined until the Isthmian Canal Commission, now engaged in surveying the various routes, had reported" was voted down, and the motion to recommit with instructions to the committee to report the bill providing that "the President is authorized to acquire control of such territory as is necessary for the building and maintaining of a canal across the Isthmus, and authorizing the Secretary of War to excavate and to construct such canal and take such steps as may be necessary to preserve the interests of the United States therein," was voted down.

Such were the measures the House refused to pass, and proceeded upon the passage of a bill tying the hands of the President and committing the country to a particular route before the commission then engaged in examining the different routes had reported, and in face of the fact that Admiral Walker, chairman of that commission, had stated that they were not prepared even to say that the Nicaraguan route was preferable; putting the country at the mercy of two South American governments to demand any sum they pleased for right of way; providing for the expenditure of $140,000,000 of the people's money upon such terms as the United States was to bear all the burden and England reap the profits, and refusing to permit a single American gun or American soldier to come within 3 miles of the canal for defense in times of war. Against this monstrous proposition the Democratic members of the Missouri delegation recorded their votes and are willing to abide by the decision of the people they represent.

Military Academy Bill.

The most vicious legislation in the history of this Government would be the passage of the proposed subsidy bill now pending, which means taking from the Treasury the taxes of the many and applying them to the favored few.

OF

HON. ALBERT S. BERRY,

OF KENTUCKY.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 15, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy—

Mr. BERRY said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: This bill comes from a committee which has had serious trouble during the present session in the consideration of the Cœur d'Alene mining troubles in the State of Idaho, commonly known as the "Bull-pen outrage." I am not aware of how much time has been spent in the consideration of the bill now presented. In general terms I am for anything that shall improve the condition of the Military Academy at West Point, which has done so much through its graduates for the martial glory of our country. However, it has become a custom of this body, when in Committee of the Whole, for members to address themselves to any subject of national import, whether or no connected immediately with the subject under discussion.

I shall at this time direct a few remarks to the bill now threatening this body, and which has done so for the last twenty-five years. It only reached the acute stage during the Fifty-sixth Congress, to wit, the question of a subsidy to build up a merchant marine which I think the Republican party has destroyed in the last forty years by high protective tariff, and its indisposition to allow the American people to buy ships where they pleased and where they could procure them at the most advantageous prices, refusing to all foreign-built ships American registry. Let us for a few moments review our maritime history.

The measure now under consideration is not a new one. It represents that dominant idea of the great nations of the world, to control as large a share as possible of the trade and commerce of the high seas. History informs us that the people in ancient times who engaged in seafaring found it their greatest source of profit. In early times such traffic was in small craft—largely a coasting trade—but it has increased from one century to another, until now there are no seas unexplored, unless it be those locked in the arms of the polar ice and snow.

The history of our own country, beginning with the early settlements along the Atlantic seaboard—an endless, dangerous forest behind, the sea before—led the early comers to a life of fishing and general seafaring. Through many years this naturally engendered in the American colonists a genius for the management and construction of wooden sailing vessels. It is this same principle that makes England the greatest maritime power now, in spite of the large subsidies which other foreign nations give their shipping in an effort to compete with her. It is her natural position—a small, densely populated island, depending largely on the great world beyond her even for food, that makes it a necessity for Britannia to rule the wave.

Long before the Revolutionary war the colonies had done so much toward becoming one of the maritime nations of the world that the mother country began to look upon them as formidable rivals. Of course the success in this particular line was due in great measure to the unbounded supply of timber of which vessels were then made. After the Declaration of Independence, when America began her career as a separate nation, her shipping increased rapidly. Having the best seamen, expert workmen, and the best material, she rapidly forged to the front and became the leading shipbuilder of the world. She supplied many nations, and even England became one of her largest customers during the reign of the wooden ship.

This supremacy continued, until about 1855-56 it was at its zenith. It was at this time, when the tonnage of the world divided among the different nations gave approximately one-third to the United States, one-third to Great Britain, and the remaining third distributed among the other nations of the earth, that England repealed all restrictive navigation laws and with the new idea of free ships went into the markets of the world and bought where she could buy cheapest.

Now let us turn to the sad spectacle which presents itself of our gradual decadence from our proud position as one of the first maritime nations of the earth. The first reason which confronts us was that in the progress of civilization iron and the steam engine came to be substituted for the wooden sailing ship. As before stated, the early training of our people had made the building and management of wooden sailing craft a specialty in which they had excelled. England, seeing the possibilities of the use of iron, rapidly applied herself to developments along this line. America, with her adoptive spirit, kept pace, and in 1851 the steam tonnage of the two countries was about equal. (Wells, Our Mer. Mar., p. 49.)

At this time had America been allowed the same privileges as her competitors; had she not been hampered by all sorts of restrictive legislation, she could have kept pace with her rival in the development of a merchant marine. But the facilities of Great Britain made it possible for her to produce cheaper and better steam engines, and we, by the aforementioned restrictive laws, were prohibited from taking advantage of British skilled labor when it was the only thing that would have enabled us to keep our place among the maritime nations.

During the civil war 800,000 tons of American shipping was removed to foreign registry and our laws prohibited that such vessels should return to the American flag afterwards. This and the high tariff placed after the war on many articles entering into the construction of vessels went far toward diverting the attention of our merchants from shipbuilding and owning. Those who had until then engaged in the clipper trade around the Horn with California and elsewhere on the high seas now gave their efforts to the building of the great transcontinental railroads, and the adventurous spirit of Young America was turned from the old life on the deep to the prairie schooner, and the untold wealth of mines and wheat fields there being opened to them. At a time when cities were the mushroom growth of a night and Greater New Yorks were platted where the railroads crossed the prairie and the primeval forests, the inevitable result was the diversion of capital from shipbuilding interests, and the decadence of the merchant marine followed as the night the day.

With a view of restoring our depreciated tonnage we have before us a bill which proposes to subsidize both ships and men. This means taking from the public treasury money gathered by taxation of the many and bestowing it upon a favored few. The bill provides that there shall be paid upon the tonnage of every ship plying between a port of the United States and any foreign port a given amount, said amount being increased as the speed and capacity of the vessel varies.

This is ostensibly to build up the shipyards of the United States, presuming that foreign nations can now build cheaper and better vessels than we can. Is this a correct hypothesis? At a recent hearing before the subcommittee of labor of the Senate Mr. Cramp said (p. 20, Sen. Doc. 318, 55th Cong.,): "We secured the building of vessels for the Russian Government in competition with France, Germany, and England because we could build them at a little less than they could and in a shorter time." * * * "We also secured the construction of Japanese vessels because we were 20 per cent lower than English or German builders." Such a statement from so eminent an authority ought to convince the most incredulous that the proposed subsidy is not needed to encourage shipbuilding in this country.

Those who are urging the enactment of this bill tell us that each year we pay a sum variously estimated from $195,000,000 to $300,000,000 for freight and passage traffic carried under foreign flags. If this amount could be saved to us the wisdom of the measure might not be questioned, and the large sum to be paid in subsidies might be warranted. But is this the best way to accomplish the end in view? Would not a repeal of the existing restrictive laws and allowing American capital to invest in the best and cheapest market at once remove the need of this questionable legislation?

It seems from the preamble of the bill that one of the chief purposes of those who designed it is to take advantage of the apprehension of the American people growing out of the late war, and to secure to us auxiliary cruisers and seamen in case of war coming suddenly. The probabilities are that America has had her lesson, as the English had in the Crimean, and the French in the Franco-Prussian war, and that no future enemy will find her so unprepared.

A subsidy paid to a limited number of vessels constructed under the supervision of naval officers with a view to their rapid transformation into auxiliary cruisers in case of war might justify the taking of money from the public Treasury, but the extension of such subsidy to every class of vessel that sails under the American flag should not be countenanced by Congress.

Great Britain, with colonies scattered around the world, requires rapid communication with them and the rest of the world, and she has given liberal compensation to vessels carrying her mails. It is said by the supporters of this bill that these mail contracts are equivalent to subsidies, yet last year England awarded the carrying of mail between Southampton and New York to the North German Lloyd instead of the Cunard Steamship Company, her own line, because it saved to her $125,000.

If Great Britain, the nation now carrying the largest portion of the commerce of the world, only subsidizes 3 per cent of her vessels, as statistics show (and that by mail contracts) would this not be a wise policy for our Government to adopt, with a view of having rapid communication with our newly acquired territories and encouraging the merchant marine at the same time? This would involve no such expenditure as is contemplated in the present bill.

Another argument urged by the majority is that the wages of officers and men in the American service greatly exceed those paid by any other maritime nation, and that it is the duty of the Government to offset such difference. This may be true in a measure, but it is fully compensated for by the fact that the greater efficiency makes smaller crews possible and the overshadowing items of cheaper fuel, cheaper food, and cheaper lubricating oil to be had in the United States.

One of the most important points toward the rehabilitation of the merchant marine is the improvement of the condition of the sailor aboard ship. To accomplish this there should be better laws to protect him against poor food and abuse, so that the young men of the country would come to look upon the life of a sailor as one to be sought after, as it was in the early part of the century. It is a well-known fact that the contract which a sailor makes under existing conditions is as if he sold himself into slavery, and the high character of the American young man revolts at the thought of a seafaring life under these conditions.

We hold that the present tariff, prohibiting as it does the natural exchange of commodities, is one of the most potent factors in the decadence of the merchant marine. It is the great principle of trade that there must be reciprocity underlying it. We can not expect the people of other nations to purchase our surplus unless we buy from them something in return.

For instance, a vessel taking a cargo of farming implements, cotton goods, etc., from New York to the Argentine Republic can not profitably return in ballast. To make the trade with that country a paying enterprise to any merchant marine our import duties must be such that said vessel can bring in return to this country the products of Argentina, such as raw hides, wool, etc. Under existing laws our tariff on such articles is practically prohibitory.

On the Western seaboard the illustration of this point is even more striking. The carrying trade there is largely done by tramp steamers, usually under the English flag. Few regular lines between San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and the Far East can be profitably operated. We ship to them food stuffs, ties for the Siberian railroad, etc. The articles to be had in return, such as silk, matting, tea, and curios, are taxed at such a rate that the greater number of vessels must either return in ballast or go in search of other cargo, sometimes even as far as Australia for coal. To remedy this, why not reduce the tariff and "subsidize" our merchant marine by enabling them to return to our shores fully laden with first-class freight?

The stimulus given to the owning and building of ships, should this measure become a law, would, we think, be temporary in character, and when the aid was withdrawn, which it would be after ten years, and the market surfeited with ships, there would be a disastrous reaction.

This remarkable bill came to us in the first place sandwitched between numerous "whereases" in the way of argument, and the brief of its distinguished attorney, Ex-Senator Edmunds, at its conclusion. Those pressing this scheme upon our consideration are the shipowners and shipyards, the coastwise and lake trade included, all of whom were to be benefited directly or indirectly.

Mr. Griscom, who is president of the International Navigation Company, and about forty others, met January 17, 1897, at Atlantic City to perfect the method of securing the passage of this bill. He kindly gives us in his hearing before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries the composition of this assemblage, to wit:

William P. Clyde, of New York, who is the head of the firm of William P. Clyde & Co. That firm is largely engaged in the West India and coastwise trade. Gen. Thomas W. Hyde, of Maine, president of the Bath Iron Works; Alexander R. Smith, secretary of the commerce commission of the State of New York; Charles H. Cramp, president of the Cramp Ship Building Company, of Philadelphia, known to you all; Senator George C. Perkins, of of San Francisco, Cal.; Collis P. Huntington, who is of national reputation; Samuel S. Sewall of the firm of Arthur Sewall & Co., of Bath, Me., shipbuilders and owners; H. P. Booth, president of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company, known popularly as the Ward Line, a large steamship service between New York, Cuba, and Mexico; Aaron Vanderbilt, of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation; Frank J. Firth, chairman of the Lake Carriers' Association; Senator Frye; Charles H. Kelp, secretary of the Lake Carriers' Association, and Harvey D. Goulder its attorney; Senator Hanna; Theodore C. Search, president of the Associated Manufacturers of the United States; Hon. Sereno E. Payne, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of this House; Senator Elkins; D. D. G. Mink, who is president of the Coastwise Association; Thomas Clyde, of William P. Clyde & Co., Joseph P. Grace, partner of William R. Grace & Co., who are in the South American trade, with others, made up this distinguished company who assembled at the time and place aforementioned.

Do you suppose that this gallant little band of patriots, poor but honest, including Senators and Representatives, had in view the origination of something for the benefit of the people of these United States, or would you rather say that they were prompted by the desire of gain to themselves, most of whom were shipbuilders or shipowners who would be the beneficiaries of the nine millions per annum provided for in said bill?

Mr. Griscom informs us that this bill was not prepared in the interest of any section or set of men, but in the interest of the whole country. He further says this committee took two years of very constant work, sitting more than monthly for conference, and in the intervals a very industrious and patient subcommittee labored with ex-Senator Edmunds to perfect what is now submitted to you. Do you suppose they were working "pro bono publico," or did the ex-Senator require a handsome retainer, with a more substantial fee if successful in extracting from the Treasury the enormous amount proposed? Of this let an intelligent public determine.

This session is nearing its conclusion. A great political contest is just before us, and for prudential reasons it may not be pressed at this time. Should the Republican party be again successful in November, by liberal contributions from the moneyed corporations and individuals, they will press it with renewed zeal and energy, demanding its passage for services rendered when we meet in December. It is the most pernicious form of protective tariff. Can it be possible that we, proud of our nationality and position among the nations of the earth, find it necessary to pay somebody to carry our flag upon the high seas?

Suppose I should go to Kentucky and tell the good people that I represent that the company owning the Paris and St. Louis would draw out of the Treasury, if this measure passes, for every trip they made across the Atlantic $25,800, what would they say? Every year each such vessel would receive more than $400,000 in a bonus from general taxation, provided they built a like vessel in our home shipyards costing, by reason of the protective tariff, 20 per cent more than they would in foreign shipyards. And here is where Mr. Cramp and other shipbuilders would get their pay for promoting this scheme of looting the Treasury.

If we can build war vessels as we do for other nations cheaper than they can be built elsewhere, why not the merchant vessel as well? We sell pig iron to many foreign nations. We build locomotives for England and Russia, send farming implements, etc., to all parts of the world. Our exports of manufactured goods will amount to four hundred millions this year.

During the forty years the Republicans have controlled the Government they have destroyed our merchant marine, entailing a loss at a low estimate of two hundred millions per annum, or in the four decades since 1860 of eight billion dollars, and now, instead of repealing the vicious legislation standing upon our statute books, they propose robbing the public by subsidizing a merchant marine.

We spend many millions in improving the rivers leading to the seaboard. Many more in improving harbors to be utilized only by vessels sailing under the flag of some foreign country. Take the tariff off the goods of general consumption, except for necessary revenue, thus relieving those who earn their living in the sweat of their brows. The revenue thus lessened supplement by an income tax, forcing the rich to contribute according to their ability to pay.

Let Americans buy ships where they can procure them for the least money, give them American registry, and we will not need the protecting hand of our Government to restore our equality, if not our supremacy, upon the high seas. (Applause)

In conclusion, this bill sails under the flag of the Administration. The President commends such an expenditure in his message. Secretary Gage indorses it in his report. The Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Chamberlain, is so enthusiastically for it that I have been in some doubt as to whether he wrote ex-Senator Edmunds's argument or Senator Edmunds wrote his report—there is such a marked similarity. The constant presence of the head of the Bureau of Navigation before the committee, furnishing the arguments promptly adopted in the report of the majority, demonstrates beyond question that the whole power of the Republican party is pressing this measure upon Congress. The beneficiaries are the shipyards and shipowners who will monopolize this bounty of nine millions a year. They will return to coming Congresses pleading this precedent and demanding still larger subsidies. The principle is vicious and unfair, founded upon paternalism of the most pronounced type, and in justice to a tax-ridden people should be defeated. [Loud applause.]

Deficiency Appropriation Bill.

OF

HON FRANCIS M. GRIFFITH,

OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 14, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11537) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes—

Mr. GRIFFITH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: This is one of the numerous deficiency bills presented for our attention. I feel that I am somewhat familiar with deficiencies. In fact the greater part of my life has been a conflict with deficiencies. A strange spectacle is presented in the fact that deficiencies are growing larger and larger day after day in all the Departments, and at the same time the surplus in the Treasury is growing larger. Congress appropriates a specific sum to carry on each Department of the Government each year, but the heads of the Departments, contrary to law, expend sums largely exceeding the appropriation fixed by Congress, and for the payment of the liabilities of the Government in such cases these deficiency bills are presented.

I am not usually in favor of criticising too closely the items presented by the different Departments of Government as necessary to be paid in the ordinary course of business. Any new and unusual expenditures ought to be examined into very carefully in order to avoid the addition of new lines of expenditure which are not necessary in the efficient and economical administration of government. As a rule, I am not much in favor of deficiency bills.

I think that the heads of Departments and the committees of Congress ought to endeavor, as far as possible, to provide for all ordinary expenditures of Government; and when an appropriation bill is presented, it ought to include all that is needed, in order that we may keep track of any increase of expenditure in any of the various Departments and the reasons for such expenditure in case it is a necessary one. For many years now the expenditures of the Government have increased more rapidly than has the population.

I am not opposed to an increase in expenditure where that increase is made necessary by an increased efficiency of government. But a careless or negligent increase in expenditure without a corresponding increase in governmental benefits can not be indorsed. In looking over this appropriation bill, it is noticeable that some items amounting to less than a dollar are carefully explained, while other items running up into thousands of dollars are lumped as "contingent."

I know that the appropriation committees are very busy, and, without in any way criticising either the intention of the members of those committees or their ability, I would respectfully suggest that they should be as careful in itemizing the amounts where they run into thousands of dollars as where they are only a few cents. A lump sum appropriated for contingent expenses gives no idea whatever as to whether or not the American people are going to obtain value received for their money. It may be that if these items were fairly presented, no fault could be found with them. But if you should ask an American citizen, if he wanted to buy a "contingency" for $20,000, he would be apt to want to know what was meant by a "contingency."

We find in looking over the statements of disbursements for the past two years that a new and unusual column has been included, which is that of "Unusual and extraordinary expenditures." Under this heading are found lump sums of several million dollars. I do not charge that this money has been improperly expended, for I know nothing about what the expenditures mean. I complain only that this kind of a statement does not seem to be in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Constitution of the United States, which provides:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

A lump appropriation and a general charge of expenditures to "general defense account" conveys no information whatever of the purposes for which money was appropriated or expended, and is consequently not within the spirit of this clause of the Constitution. The framers of the Constitution intended that the people should know the purposes for which the public money was expended, and Congress has no right to violate this clause of the Constitution, even in spirit, by withholding this information from the people. The total expenditures of the United States for the year ending July 1, 1896, were $434,678,654.

The total expenditures for the year ending July 1, 1899, were $700,093,564, an increase of $265,414,910. Of this increase $49,166,620 were outside of the War and Navy Departments, and can not be explained by the war with Spain or the Philippines. This increase during three years' time is totally out of proportion to the increase in either population or wealth of the United States. We have become reckless in our expenditures. And there seems to be a reason for this recklessness which is unworthy of us. It looks as though an effort was made to increase the expenditures as much as possible in order to avoid a decrease in taxation and to prevent a greater surplus than now exists from accumulating in the Treasury.

Notwithstanding the tremendous increase in population and wealth of the United States since 1892, the imports have fallen off from $716,213,948 to $685,441,892. The duties collected have fallen off in the same period from $216,138,916 to $202,072,050. The amount of duties collected for 1898 was only $145,000,000, or less than in any year since 1870. With a tremendous increase in governmental expenditures, we have provided by the present tariff for a tremendous decrease in Government revenues.

This decrease must be made up in some way or else the expenditures must be brought back to the basis of twenty years ago. The Republicans embraced the opportunity, when the Spanish war came up, to pass an internal-revenue tax bill, which taxed everybody except the banks and corporations, and they did it so successfully that notwithstanding the failure of the tariff law as a revenue producer and the increase of the reserve fund from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000, there is still a surplus in the United States Treasury, gathered from the people by unnecessary taxation and for which the Government has no use, the sum of $142,424,420.52.

The American people realize the fact that the United States Treasury has no use whatever for a surplus. The Republican party remembers very well that it was beaten at the polls in 1884 by reason of the fact that it had taxed the people unnecessarily and had accumulated a surplus. They are now using their utmost endeavors to dispose of this surplus by expending it upon anything that they can explain on the stump. They tried to dispose of $180,000,000 as gratuities to successful steamship lines already established, but they could not get it done.

Some disposition has to be made of this vast sum of money, and any item of expenditure which can be explained to the people by the most ingenious sophistry is gladly welcomed as tending to decrease the surplus. This would seem to be the reason that lump appropriations are made, and items of millions appear without explanation in the published statements of expenditures. The Democrats want to relieve the people of these unnecessary and burdensome taxes. They want to raise enough money to provide for the expenditures of the Government efficiently but economically administered, and they do not want any more.

Every time the sun rises and sets $2,000,000 are paid by the taxpayers to carry on the Government. Every day from the beginning to the end of the year $2,000,000 is exacted from the people—over $700,000,000 annually—a sum so large as to stagger the human mind. The daily reports from the Treasury Department show that a great surplus is accumulating, and day by day is growing larger—in short, that the people are each day compelled to pay into the Treasury more money than is required to carry on the Government even after the payment of many illegal and extravagant claims. Why should this continue? What honest excuse can be given for a failure to reduce taxation? Why should we force the people to pay more than is necessary?

Two months ago or more I had the honor to introduce a bill in the House to reduce taxation by repealing so much of the war-revenue bill as required stamps to be placed on notes, mortgages, deeds, leases, checks, receipts, bills of lading, drugs, proprietary medicines. Many bills of similar character and to reach the same result have been introduced. Petitions from nearly every county in the Union have asked Congress to give relief by reducing taxation. I will venture the statement that there is not a single member of the House, whether he be a Democrat, Republican, or Populist, that has not received numerous petitions on this subject. There is a general demand for a reduction of taxation. Why not give the relief now?

The Republican majority have turned deaf ears to the petition, and it has already been officially stated that no bill for a reduction of taxation will be allowed to come to a vote during this session. When the war-revenue bill was being considered all agreed that it was but a temporary measure and that so soon as the war with Spain ended the war-revenue tax should cease. Such leaders of the majority as the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and our late colleague from Maine, Mr. Dingley, each in substance stated that just as soon as the war with Spain ended the war-revenue tax would be repealed. This was the promise made, and although the war with Spain has long since ended, the war taxes, like death, are still present.

The Republicans have their system of taxation, and they propose that it shall be continued even though the money has to be given away in order to prevent its accumulating in the Treasury. The Republican orators claim that the people have been taxed into prosperity, and they present some most excellent reports which, upon their face, seem to prove their position. There are some very satisfactory conditions to be gleaned from the reports of the various departments of the Government.

Our exports have greatly increased; money, as a rule, has been better distributed, and there has been more of it. A great many people have more money than they had four years ago, and there is consequently an increase in individual deposits in the banks. These are very gratifying conditions, and Democrats as well as Republicans will congratulate the people most heartily upon those conditions; but the Democratic orators, unlike their Republican brethren, will explain why these conditions came about and why they are already being changed into conditions which are by no means so satisfactory.

The present Administration, when it came into power, was widely advertised as the advance agent of prosperity. Immediately before the nominations in the spring of 1896 the panic which had unfortunately afflicted this country, as well as the countries of Europe, for three years had begun to break. It continued to break. By the 1st of January, two months before the inauguration of President McKinley, normal conditions had become very nearly restored. Under these happy circumstances the Administration came into power. There was a flurry which looked as though prosperity was after all going to be postponed. Then came the war with Spain. The Government at once required the assistance of 200,000 men. The expenditures of the Government were increased over $200,000,000 a year.

The diminution of the number of wage-earners and the sudden great increase of products needed for Government use started up the mills, renewed the confidence of the people, and the result was a boom of prosperity. That prosperity, it was thought, would continue as long as the Government was expending hundreds of millions of dollars and as long as these thousands of men were withdrawn from competition in labor circles. But it was not so much of a fight as it was supposed to be. Victory perched upon the Stars and Stripes too soon for the capital which had been invested in manufacturing supplies for the Government to be remunerative.

If the Army was disbanded and the soldiers returned to their homes and the Government was no longer a buyer, it was realized upon all hands that instead of prosperity we were facing the worst industrial panic this country had seen for many years. The result was that while the peace commission was in conference at Paris many millions of dollars were lost in the decline of industrial stocks. Something had to be done. The result was that we paid $20,000,000 for a new war in order to keep our soldiers in the field and keep the Government buying materials. It was thought that in this way the prosperity could be kept up until after the coming Presidential election. Ever since that time the Republicans have been telling the people that the Philippine war was ended while they have been demanding more troops in order to satisfy the fears of the manufacturers.

The war with the Philippines may be ended, as our generals have said, but the troops will not come home, nor will the Government quit buying supplies until after the Presidential election.

During the past year the War Department has expended over $200,000,000. One hundred thousand able-bodied men are provided for who would otherwise be competing in the labor market. To stop this expenditure and turn these men loose upon the community would be to end the prosperity.

Notwithstanding this tremendous impetus given to trade by the Philippine war and by the war in South Africa and the failure of crops abroad, the remarkable business of last year is not continuing.

Dun's Review has been quoted at length by Republicans on this floor, and I do not know a more reliable Republican document than Dun's Review. I will quote from it. On May 19, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

Business is not what it was a year ago, but men do not agree in defining the difference. The working force, then increasing fast, is now decreasing. Works are stopping to relieve excessive output in manufactures of paper, cotton, wool, leather, and some forms of steel, while prices are suddenly reduced for the same purpose in lead, wire, and nails. What seems to some "merely spring dullness" others think "the beginning of reaction." The remedy for one difficulty does not fit the other, and there is more need than usual for close attention to the meaning of events.

On May 12, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

Production stimulated by high prices rises above consumption retarded by them. The weekly output of pig iron May 1 was 293,850 tons against 280,462 April 1, while unsold stocks not held by the great steel makers increased 44,645 tons. This would indicate a daily consumption of 40,641 tons against 41,642 in January, hitherto the largest, but for the fact that considerable stocks have also accumulated in the hands of consuming concerns, of which enough to use much more than 1,000 daily are now idle. Bessemer pig at Philadelphia and Lehigh Valley No. 1 here are quoted at $22 per ton, and market wire has been reduced, in correspondence with barbed and plain. Considerable increase of business is reported, resulting from recent reductions, but demands for higher wages and also for closing of some iron works two months in the year, whether there is business or not, cause some hesitation regarding future contracts.

The Smelting and Refining Company has reduced lead $9 per ton to 4¼ cents per pound, and copper has declined an eighth to 16¾ cents for Lake, while tin is also lower at 29 cents. * * *

Shipments of boots and shoes from the East for the first week of May were smaller than in the corresponding week of every year save one since 1894. The decline in hides, which has affected nearly all country quotations at Chicago this week, and some further decline in upper leather, have not brought concessions in boots and shoes, but have strengthened the purpose of dealers to keep back orders. Accounts indicate that dealers' stocks throughout the country are unusually large, and many shops are closed, while many more have but little work ahead. Prices asked are practically as high as they were January 1, though leather averages 4 per cent lower, and hides about 10 per cent lower.

On May 5, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

Stocks have been weak largely because of industrials, which have continued to decline, losing $1.30 per share for the week. The railroad stocks also declined over $1 per share, but would have fallen more had not earning been remarkably encouraging.

On April 28, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

Four months of the new year have passed, and business does not so expand as to need the large increase of circulation which the new monetary bill has permitted, nor enough to sustain all the extraordinary advance in prices last year. The abundance of gold and of currency and the large disbursements by the Treasury in exchange of bonds have rendered rates for money unusually low for the season here, while rare industrial and speculative activity in Europe, with the war in South Africa, have tended to make money dearer abroad. So new gold from Alaska answers the loss of supply from the Transvaal, and America builds up in credits abroad a breastwork against prostration in future here, as in the past, caused by troubles in Europe.

The reaction in prices comes where it was expected least, in the industry more fully organized than any other to check competition, and in the branch which, through contracts covering rod-making and other machinery and through patents, seemed more fully controlled than any other. Reduction of $3 per ton in wire nails, barbed wire, and galvanized fence, and $18 in smooth wire showed that no control can afford to hold prices so high as to check consumption. In a week the prices of iron products have declined 5.86 per cent, and since February 7, 10.3 per cent. As the wire and nail prices have been relatively the highest, others in the iron and steel industry can not be expected to fall in like measure. But pig iron is weaker, No. 1 local coke at Chicago $23.50, and Southern pig is also lower.

Plates and bars can be obtained for about 1.8 cents in good contracts both at the East and at Pittsburg, the proposed advance in sheets to 3.40 cents has not been attempted, and the cut-nail mills, which have gained much by selling at 70 cents per keg below wire nails, will now lower prices also. The stoppage of a dozen wire and nail mills, besides rod mills at Joliet, and another of the National Steel Company, indicates some change in the actual demand. In the minor metals the only change has been in tin, which declined rather sharply to 29¼ in sympathy with lower London quotations. * * *

Shipments of boots and shoes from the East in four weeks have been 306,323 cases, against 339,498 last year, 304,061 in 1898, and less in any other year. New business bears no proportion to the present output, and the number of works which are closed or running part time is increasing. Manufacturers realize that this is a result of prices asked and of slow retail distribution and large stocks remaining on hand, but claim that lower prices can not be made without loss.

On April 21, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

Formal reduction of $5 per ton in prices of plates and bars and closing of mills by the American Steel and Wire Company to avoid reduction in prices have filled the week with surprises. In the stock market and in the market for steel and iron products changes have begun, the end of which can not well be foreseen.

The depression in stocks extended to railroad issues because efforts to bring about reaction, doubtless aided by the shifting of loans made necessary by the disposition of many bankers regarding industrial securities. Confidence based on the heavy business of the country and the large earnings of railroads gave good support to their stocks, which declined for the week an average of 64 cents per share. But the sensational losses of $7 per share or more in a day on some industrial stocks depressed that entire list to a point only about $2 per share above the lowest average last year, that of December 22. The decline for the most active averaged $4.52 per share, of which 82 cents was afterwards recovered. The street and gas stocks also averaged a decline of $4.43 per share.

Apart from the disturbance in speculation there has been produced a measure of distrust regarding prices that are maintained by the great combinations which may for the present tend to deter buying.

On March 31, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

During the first quarter of 1900 all failures of the kinds formerly included have exceeded in amount of liabilities $93,000,000. With steam railroads evidently street roads, like the Third Avenue, must be separately reported, and with banks and other financial corporations should be separately reported industrial companies, like the United States Flour Milling Company, which control many distinct works. The banking failures were 13, with $857,482 liabilities. A receiver was appointed for the Appleton publishing house, not to wind up bankrupt business, but to give it larger life and value. But setting apart these, the commercial failures remaining were much larger than last year, liabilities amounting to about $91,985,308, according to reports thus far received.

On March 10, 1900, Dun's Review said editorially:

A certain hesitation in business, with shrinkage in its volume, is not unusual or unnatural at this season. It is not necessarily disheartening, therefore, if business is no longer as large in volume as ever, but falls behind that of February or January or of the corresponding week last year. If obstacles in the way are soon removed, and if prices are so adjusted as to encourage and not to prevent transactions, the measure of prosperity realized may again surpass all records.

The obstacles are considerable. Strikes in building trades or of machinists and others at Chicago affect many industries and the wages of 50,000 hands. The remarkable rise in cotton has apparently met the expected reaction which tends for the time to repress business. A few great corporations are striving to hold prices without regard to present demand, hoping that needs of consumers may prevent reaction and renew the rise of last year. Wide differences of opinion also exist regarding the effects of monetary action by Congress.

On March 3, 1900, Dun's Review said, editorially:

Besides the 861 commercial failures for $9,931,048 which we report to-day, there were in February six banking failures for $620,121, and receivers were appointed for the United States Flour Milling Company, with $25,000,000 of stock and $15,000,000 of bonds authorized at its organization last April, and for the Third Avenue Railroad Company after liens for several millions had been placed upon the property.

This epoch of prosperity is marked by the closing of mills, the failure of small banks, the congestion of money in large banks because the avenues of safe and profitable investment are closed, forced idleness of workingmen, the stoppage of production, and the falling of prices. These indications of prosperity if much longer continued will, by next winter, call for public soup houses in every town in the United States.

The farmer may receive an increase for some articles produced by him; but when he buys barbed or smooth wire, tin or iron roofing, binding twine, or the necessaries of life that enter into his home for the support of his family, he finds that the increase of expenses far exceed the increase in his receipts.

Prosperity to the farmer, then, is an empty bubble.

When the President of the United States added to his dignity by becoming the dictator of Cuba, the emperor of Porto Rico and Luzon, and assistant sultan of the Sulu Archipelago it was generally believed that a sufficient amount of profit could be derived from these different possessions to maintain prosperity at least for a time. The result has been rather unpleasant. While it has been found possible to expend more money in the government of of Cuba and Porto Rico than was ever before expended upon similar governments, yet there are unpleasant features connected with it.

Some of the officials have helped themselves more liberally from the Treasury than was intended and have thus destroyed the right of contribution in their fellow-officials. This has brought about publicity and scandal. In fact, the Administration has been peculiarly unfortunate in the matter of scandal. The United States has not emerged from the shadows of one scandal before it has been deeply immersed in the gloom of some succeeding scandal. I do not desire to make any charges whatever against the Chief Executive, and am willing to accept the statements of the Republican papers that he is not responsible for the scandals which have been so prominent a feature of his Administration. I do not believe that the people of the United States are so much concerned about the responsibility of the President as they are about his irresponsibility.

We came into the occupancy of Cuba upon the loftiest plane of patriotism. We said to them "We will help you to stand alone; we will help you to create and maintain a free and stable form of government, of which honor, liberty, and good morals shall be the corner stones." With these lofty professions upon our lips, it was our duty to send officials there whose official life, at least, should have been above suspicion. It was our duty to have sent officials there whose example could have been followed, and who could have taught them the first lessons in free and honest government. Unfortunately the officers selected to give Cuba primary lessons in pure, faithful, and honest government began a plan of systematic looting from the first.

Cuba complained that Spain had robbed her, yet, I regret to say, some of our officials followed in the steps of Spain without interruption, and plunged shoulder deep into the Cuban treasury and took the money collected from the poverty-stricken people of that island. It was not only a crime against a helpless people, but it was a crime against the United States, for it smirched our proud professions of humanity and honesty in the eyes of all the world. All this comes from the exercise of unbridled authority; from arbitrary control; from military rule. Better by far cast aside this dream of colonial expansion, which must mean the same corruption to us that it has meant to every other nation. Get rid of the accursed thing before American honor becomes a laughing stock.

If the unfortunate, deplorable dishonesty, private and public plunder, shown by some of our officials in Cuba at our very doors, what may we expect in the far-distant Philippines?

PORTO RICO.

In the government of Porto Rico the government officials could find no law for its administration except as a Territory of the United States, but after they had officially announced that fact they received inspiration from some source which caused them to act in the directly opposite direction from that in which they had stated law and duty had compelled them to act. This has brought with it some very peculiar and distressing problems.

If the Constitution of the United States does not apply to these outlying possessions, then they are all right, as no inquiries can be made into their method of conducting the government of Porto Rico and the Philippines; but if they are within the Constitution, then the awful prospect is presented of the Government having to refund to those who paid them the millions of dollars of illegal taxes.

The question has never yet been decided directly, but every court that has decided a question at all connected with this subject has decided against the position of the Administration, and Judge Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, in an address on imperialism before the Liberal Club, of Buffalo, seems to indicate that when the question comes before the United States Supreme Court there will be nothing left for the Administration to do except to repeal the Porto Rican law, pass a constitutional one, and refund all of the taxes that have been paid since the present unconstitutional government was established. Judge Brewer said:

It is said that the Anglo-Saxon race has manifested a capacity to govern well; that we are of that race and that therefore we could well govern the Philippine Islands as colonies. I do not question the capacity of the race well and wisely to govern others. I object to the Philippine policy because it antagonizes the principles upon which this Government was founded, which have controlled its life up to the present time, and the perfection of which has been the hope and aspiration of every true American.

Very few nations, very few individuals, live up to their high ideals, but surely the Declaration of Independence has been the ideal of our life, and we have striven to make it more and more real. Now, government by force is the very antipodes of this, and to introduce government by force over any portion of the nation is to start the second quarter of the second century of our life upon principles which are the exact opposite of those upon which we have hitherto lived. It is one thing to fail of reaching your ideal; it is an entirely different thing to deliberately turn your back upon it.

The test of government is not in the outward mechanical display of order, but in the capacity to develop the best men, and we have lived in the faith that government by the consent of the governed develops the best men. We have not let the wise rule the ignorant, the learned the unlearned, the rich the poor, but we have appealed always to "the plain people" as the ones on whose judgment to rely and upon whose shoulders should rest the burden of government.

Ideas are after all the eternal force. Human life and destiny are controlled by them. They may seem to-day of little significance, but around them gather material interests, and to-morrow their power is disclosed.

Government by consent and government by force, no matter how well the government may be administered, are two essentially antagonistic principles. Doubtless no immediate conflict will follow. We may see a large measure of prosperity; but are we not sowing the seeds which in the days to come will grow up into a harvest of trouble for our children and our children's children?

A necessity of colonial possessions is an increase in our Regular Army, and the first increase proposed is from 30,000 to 100,000 men. It is a strange commentary that at the close of the nineteenth century the head of the most arbitrary government in the civilized world, the Czar of the Russias, is inviting the nations of the world to a decrease in their arms, while this, the freest land, is proposing an increase in its. Yet such seems to be the imperative need, if we enter upon the system of colonial expansion.

Now, the great economic problem in this country is not how can a few men make more money and pile up larger fortunes, but how can the great body of the people make a fair and comfortable living? The right to work is again and again insisted upon as more important than the right to vote, and the cry of the right to work is supplemented by the cry that the state furnish work to all who can not obtain it elsewhere.

Are we likely to aid in solving this problem by bringing into our national life 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 of unskilled Malay laborers? We have shut the doors against the Chinese. Are they any worse than the Malay? Shall we introduce in this nation more cheap labor? I do not wonder at the action of the Federation of Labor in protesting against a new competition of cheap labor as well as an increase of the Army, with its consequent increase of burden and taxation on the employed laborer.

But there is money in it. After all, this is really the most potent factor in the proposed reaching out after the islands of the Orient. The wealth of Ormus and of Ind is to-day, as in the days of Milton, the expectation and the dream of many. Possession of the Orient, with its accumulated wealth of centuries, dazzles the imagination and confuses the judgment. The haze of mystery hangs over that vast domain. Wealth untold is believed to be there ready to be appropriated by any dominant power. All the nations and tribes come within Lord Salisbury's definition of dying nations, and must soon be divided between and appropriated by the living and growing nations. China is held out as a dying nation, filled with inexhaustible wealth, and why should we not share in its appropropriation? What a picture this is! The eagle of liberty standing like a buzzard to grow fat over an expected corpse.

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

The Cæsars saw the spears of their victorious legions flash in the sunlight of every known land, and in their triumphant return they brought with them the accumulated wealth of all the nations they had subdued. The splendor of Imperial Rome outshone the world, but the wealth thus obtained without value given undermined the Empire, and the glory of Rome is simply a memory. Napoleon beheld the shining star of destiny; and then? Does human nature change through the centuries? We stand to-day facing the temptation which comes from the possibility of rapidly accumulated wealth. What right have we to anticipate that the same result will not follow if we pursue the same course of taking what we have not fully earned?

The problem we have sought to work out in this nation is that of government of and by and for the people. A great nation under that principle seems possible only under a Federal system, a system which relegates all matter of local interest to the several States and exercises through the National Government only those powers and functions which make for the general welfare. We have wonderfully prospered in administering such system in a compact, continental territory, each part of which has been possessed and controlled by a race capable of self-government.

This is no trifling question, and is not answered by any gush about duty and destiny. We are not the victims, but the masters of fate, and to attempt to unload upon the Almighty responsibility for that which we chose to do is not only an insult to Him, but to ordinary human intelligence.

We are told that we have become so great and powerful that the world needs us; but what the world most needs is not the touch of our power, but the blessings of our example. It needs the bright example of a free people not disturbed by any illusions of territorial acquisition, of pecuniary gain, or military glory, but content with their possessions and striving through all the abilities, activities, and industries of their wisest and most earnest to make the life of each individual citizen happier, better, and more content.

Two visions rise before me:

One of a nation growing in population, riches, and strength; reaching out the strong hand to bring within its dominion weaker and distant races; holding them by force for the rapid wealth they may bring—with perhaps the occasional glory, success, and sacrifice of war; a wondrously luxurious life into which the fortunate few shall enter; an accumulation of magnificence which for a term will charm and dazzle, and then the shadow of the awful question whether human nature has changed, and the old law that history repeats itself has lost its force, whether the ascending splendor of imperial power is to be followed by the descending gloom of luxury, decay, and ruin.

The other of a nation where the spirit of the Pilgrim and the Huguenot remains the living and controlling force, affirming that the Declaration of Independence, the Farewell Address of the Father of His Country, and the Monroe doctrine shall ever pass into innocuous desuetude, devoting its energies to the development of the inexhaustible resources of its great continental territory; solving the problem of universal personal and political liberty, of a government by the consent of the governed, where no king, no class, and no race rules, but each individual has equal voice and power in the control of all; where wealth comes only as the compensation for honest toil of hand or brain; where public service is private duty; a nation whose supreme value to the world lies not in its power, but in its unfailing loyalty to the high ideals of its youth, its forever lifting its strong hand, not to govern, but only to protect the weak; and thus the bright shining which brightens more and more in the fadeless eternal day.

A government under a republican constitution and an imperial flag can only last until the courts are given an opportunity to bring the flag back to the Constitution. When this is done, and it will undoubtedly be done, the Porto Rican complications will be exceeding interesting. We have provided a government in Porto Rico with unlimited powers of taxation and expenditure, accountable to no one, and we have installed that government with great pomp and ceremony, with a tremendous display which was greeted by the Porto Ricans with silence and sorrow. When it is discovered that the law is unconstitutional, the taxes must be refunded, and the contracts made by the government are without binding force, then we will be the laughingstock of the civilized world. This is the condition in which we have been placed by an Administration which has tried to govern a republic on the continent and several petty empires in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

This game of imperialism has already cost a vast sum of money, and will continue to cost vast sums until the game is stopped by the courts. There will then be a deficiency bill which will run into the millions, and the surplus will be largely reduced. We will be called upon to pass a deficiency bill for Porto Rico, a deficiency bill for Cuba, and a deficiency bill for the Philippines.

I believe in the exercise of a proper charity, and it should begin at home.

We voted recently one sum of $2,000,000 for the "storm-swept, poverty-stricken" Porto Ricans. But if charity requires the expenditure of $2,000,000 in one island, what will it also require in the twelve hundred or more unnumbered islands of the Philippines? Verily we have an elephant on our hands.

England once had a South Sea bubble, and the bursting of that bubble will never be forgotten in English history. The United States now has a South Sea bubble, and the South Sea bubble shows signs of collapse. With it will collapse the entire fabric which has been built up during this Administration. The first thing the Administration did was to secure the passage of a tariff law which would protect the trusts and only the trusts. Every protected article was then made the basis for a trust.

This concentrated the industrial and commercial interests of the country and gave complete control of these great interests to a favored few. They then passed a financial bill which concentrated the finances of the country in the hands of the favored few who controlled the industries and the commerce. They then passed the Porto Rican bill, which concentrated all governmental interests in the new possession of the United States into the hands of those same men who controlled the finances and the industries of the country. It looked then as though the governmental aristocracy sought by the Republicans ever since the days of Alexander Hamilton was an accomplished fact. But in their greed to be rich the trusts overreached themselves, and disintegration has already set in along commercial and industrial lines.

The bankers overreached themselves, and money is a drug in the banks, because no man deems it safe to invest. They overreached themselves in the new possessions, and by reason of premature larceny upon a large scale, the control of those possessions is no longer the source of profit that it was, and there is no doubt that the favored few will lose their control of the government in the islands. The aristocracy which was built up is already beginning to topple. The entire governmental fabric designed and carried out by the Republicans bids fair to be torn down.

The people are awakening to the fact that these trusts have destroyed individual competition, and the people no longer accept them as legitimate business enterprises. The Republican party can not arrest the progress of the events which are destined to destroy the trusts. And with the trusts destroyed, the system of an aristocratic, imperialistic government will be impossible.

The Travelers' Protective Association recently had this subject under consideration. The report of the legislative committee was devoted largely to trusts and their evil effect upon trade. Concerning trusts, the report, which was unanimously adopted, says, in part:

The dark clouds of monopolies and trusts still hover over us, and since our last convention many commercial travelers have lost their positions. And, to use the language of an authorized agent of trusts, 350,000 commercial travelers have been thrown out of employment by the concentration of mercantile and commercial industries in the trust. Three million dollars daily are thus saved to the trusts by the consequent withholding of advertising patronage from country newspapers; in other words, the trusts, in these two items alone, save to themselves $6,000,000 daily.

All legislation now seems to be in the interest of the few. By the passage of the bill making gold alone the standard of value, and by which all contracts are specifically made payable in gold, and also by which the volume of our currency is absolutely under the control of the national banks, it is apparent that the settled policy of the Republican party will be subserviency to the money powers.

The policy of that party is also committed to the creation of a large standing army, and so long as power remains in the hands of that party there will be militarism.

That party is committed to the policy of reaching out for new possessions out of which to create colonies or empires to be controlled and governed by military law and subjugated by military rule, thus making the worst form of imperialism.

In mitigation for their offense they say that trade follows the flag and that we will open the door and obtain the trade of China, Japan, of the Orient. We have expended $100,000,000, to say nothing of the loss of life and of suffering, in order to secure trade amounting to less than $5,000,000 annually.

The people can not be deceived by protestations of prosperity or by figures which show vast investments in watered stocks and increases in exports of farm products to famine-stricken countries. The people will not close their eyes much longer to the vast increase in governmental expenditures without any corresponding increase in governmental benefits. The American people are patriotic. In times of necessity they object to no burden, however great. They did not object to the raising of sufficient revenue to carry on the war with Spain. They were proud of the American soldiers and sailors during the progress of that war.

But when that war ended and victory had perched upon our banners, they believed, and they had a right to believe, that the excessive expenditures would cease and the burdensome taxes would be removed. But those expenditures have increased and not diminished, those taxes still continue and are more onerous than they were before, because one by one the corporations have discovered methods by which they can escape all taxation and throw the entire burdens upon those who are least able to bear them.

The appropriation bills already passed by this Congress have been very large and give evidence that the expenditures of Government are to be still further increased, and now comes a bill which shows that these former bills, large though they were, will not appropriate sufficient funds to satisfy the purposes of the Government officials. [Applause.]

Nicaragua Canal.

SPEECH

OF

HON. DORSEY W. SHACKLEFORD,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 1, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. SHACKLEFORD said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I have listened attentively to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I always listen to him with attention. His ability, his lucidity of statement, his earnestness and directness command attention. I have heard him discuss this subject before, in committee as well as in private conversation, and everywhere his utterances have given evidence of far-seeing statesmanship, lofty patriotism, and ardent devotion to the fundamental principle of American independence. Even now, as I love my country, I wish he were Secretary of State. Then we would have assurance that "God Save the Queen" should have to give place to "The Star-Spangled Banner" as our national song. But the gentleman's strong Americanism is not in accord with the sentiment of those who control his party, and I fear that he is too credulous when he accepts the amendments proposed by the majority of the committee. I am apprehensive that these amendments are made for the purpose of reconciling the bill to a policy of joint British and American control.

I am as much in favor of the construction of the canal as is the gentleman from Iowa. I believe that such a canal, owned and controlled by us, would be a great stimulus to our trade and shipping—that it would open up to us new markets. I also believe that such a canal would be a powerful adjunct to our Navy should misfortune ever involve us in war with any of the great maritime powers. Lake Nicaragua would afford us a land-locked harbor impregnable to attack by any navy in the world.

I am in favor of the route named in this bill—not that some other might not be as good or even better, but because competent engineers have declared this feasible, and any feasible route is better than none. It can never be known that any route is the best. All that can be required is that any proposed route shall be practicable. We have the highest scientific testimony in favor of the practicability of this, and it should be adopted without waiting to make further examinations.

But, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the great necessity for the consummation of this enterprise—notwithstanding the immense stimulus it would give to American commerce—there is one subject that lies still closer to the American heart than the construction of this or any other canal—that is the perpetuity of this Republic, which can be secured only by a firm adherence to the Monroe doctrine. Some seem to look upon the Monroe doctrine as a mere catchpenny to be inserted in political platforms with which to allure voters at the ensuing election. Others regard it as some vague principle of morals which we propose in behalf of our sister republics, but too indefinite and unimportant for us to seek to enforce. These are misconceptions. There is to us no principle more definite or more important than the Monroe doctrine. When a proposition to assert it was submitted by President Monroe to Mr. Jefferson for his advice, he said:

> The question presented is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation; this sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us.

While this cardinal American principle is called the "Monroe doctrine," its conception is probably due to John Quincy Adams and its definite statement to Mr. Jefferson. Mr. Adams took the initiative. His position was that our safety, not our desire to enforce morals, not our disposition to lend a helping hand to neighboring republics, but our safety required that the management of the affairs of the American Continent should be left to American hands. His words were:

> It is not imaginable that in the present condition of the world any European nation should entertain the project of settling a colony on the northwest coast of America. That the United States should form establishments there with views of absolute territorial right and inland communication is not only to be expected but is pointed out by the finger of nature, and has been for years a subject of serious deliberation in Congress. A plan has for several sessions been before them for establishing a Territorial government on the borders of the Columbia River. It will undoubtedly be resumed at their next session, and even if then again postponed there can not be a doubt that in the course of a very few years it must be carried into effect.
> The application of colonial principles of exclusion, therefore, can not be admitted by the United States as lawful on any part of the northwest coast of America, or as belonging to any European nation. Their own (the United States) settlements there, when organized as Territorial governments, will be adapted to the freedom of their own institutions, and, as constituent parts of the Union, be subject to the principles and provisions of their own Constitution.

Mr. TERRY. That sounds very much like the "Constitution following the flag."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes, sir; very much like it, though I was citing the paragraph to show Mr. Adams's view of the Monroe doctrine.

It remained, however, for the masterful genius of Mr. Jefferson to give to the Monroe doctrine its most perfect statement, which he did in a letter to Mr. Monroe in the following graphic language:

> Our first and fundamental maxim should be, never to entangle ourselves in the broils of Europe. Our second, never to suffer Europe to intermeddle with cis-Atlantic affairs. America, North and South, has a set of interests distinct from those of Europe, and peculiarly her own. She should, therefore, have a system of her own, separate and apart from that of Europe.

This, then, is the Monroe doctrine as formulated and enforced by the fathers of the Republic to secure the perpetuity of our independence, and no considerations of whatever weight should be sufficient to swerve us from its most rigid enforcement. It is the only policy which can save us from European encroachment.

But since our war with Spain the party in power has abandoned the Monroe doctrine. Republicans tell us that we must join the sisterhood of nations if we expect our share of the world's trade; that if we would enter the race for the world's commerce, we must take part in the affairs and intrigues of the world—that we must become a world power.

Mr. Chairman, we were already a world power long before the war with Spain. We became a world power when our Revolutionary fathers threw off the British yoke, and long before Dewey sailed his gallant fleet into Manila Bay we had become the strongest and most glorious world power under the sun. We attained to that high distinction by adhering to the Monroe doctrine. Diplomacy and international intrigue have no place in the affairs of a republic. We are told that we should not have won in our late struggle with that little tenth-rate power, Spain, but for the moral support given us by Great Britain. At the very moment our guns began battering against the iron sides of the Spanish navy English diplomats began to "jolly" us with the idea that we should become one of the imperial powers of the world; that we should lay aside our Monroe doctrine and engage at common purposes with "our cousins," the English, in extending our commerce by enslaving the weak people of the earth.

Lord Beresford was taken out of the British navy and sent through this country on a lecturing tour to cultivate our people into the belief that our future prosperity depended on our joining England to control the Orient. Though deceptive, it was illusory, and the idea found lodgment with many. The Administration and its coadjutors entered a coalition with the British ministry on the basis that each country was to have the moral support of the other, and that while the United States enslaved the Filipino Great Britain should subjugate the South African Republics. Our Republican friends tell us that our obligations to Great Britain for assisting us to conquer Spain entitle her to the everlasting gratitude of the American people. I dare say, Mr. Chairman, that any assistance which England may have given us in our contest with Spain has been far outweighed by our assistance in the way of moral support given her in her war against the Boers. It matters not at which end of the Capitol a resolution of sympathy for the South African Dutch is introduced, the Republican majority sends it to a committee, where it will be pigeonholed and never reported. The Republican majority will not allow us to express our sympathy for these Republics in their struggle against our monarchical ally. It will be a great diplomatic victory for Great Britain if she shall succeed in tempting us out of our isolation into the intrigues and broils of Europe.

Mr. Chairman, the traditional competitor and foe of the United States is Great Britain. From the day we gained our independence down to this hour, without one moment's intermission, she has been our relentless antagonist. No sooner had we consummated the Louisiana purchase than she began to encroach on our northwest boundary. She asserted her claim to all territory lying north of California. A long diplomatic contest ensued in which, as usual, she was successful, and we lost all that territory lying between the mouth of the Columbia River and Alaska—a vast empire in itself—and to-day at the mouth of the Columbia River England testifies her love for her American cousins by a frowning fortress, from which every gun points toward us.

Having thus gotten more than half our Oregon territory by a diplomatic steal, she moved down onto our southern boundary and commenced to appropriate to herself American territory. She seized Bay Islands, part of Honduras, and the Mosquito coast in Central America. We were not at that time in a position to offer resistance, although the seizing of this territory was a violation of the Monroe doctrine, so we resorted again to diplomacy, and the result was the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. By the terms of this treaty Great Britain was bound not to exercise sovereignty over any part of Central America, yet she steadily extended her sovereignty and built up subject colonies in clear violation of the terms of that compact, and on that very territory over which she agreed not to exercise sovereignty she keeps shotted cannon to maintain the cordial relations existing between the "Anglo-Saxon cousins."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A sort of jug-handle business.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; it is always a jug-handle business between us and Great Britain. England is our arch enemy and always has been. At this moment she is as hostile to us as she is toward the Boers. She never asserted sovereignty over that country till opportunity ripened and gave her power to carry into effect that which she had all the time intended. The Spanish-American war made it possible. Our moral support was sufficient to keep other countries neutral. She is now destroying those little Republics, and if opportunity offered, she would even more eagerly destroy ours. She has her eyes upon this continent, and her thirst for empire here is as burning as for it elsewhere. When we were in the throes of the civil war and the bonds of this glorious Union were threatened, Great Britain was first to give recognition to the Southern Confederacy. It was Great Britain that tried to steal part of our Alaskan territory. It was Great Britain that violated the Monroe doctrine in an attempt to steal part of the territory of Venezuela. The first assertion of the Monroe doctrine was against Russia, and the Muscovite heeded it. From that day to this she has never offered to violate it. We asserted it against France, Italy, and Austria. They acquiesced and have respected it ever since.

Now that we would build this great canal, what nation interferes? Russia, France, Germany—all the world refrains from meddling save our "English-speaking cousin," the Briton. He of all the world is the only one who interferes with this great enterprise which is so involved with our interests. England demands that we shall not build the canal unless she shall have joint interest with us. She demands that the canal shall not be fortified. What does that mean? It means that Great Britain knows that her superior naval strength would enable her to take possession of an unfortified canal whenever it should be to her interest to do it. So, if we should enact this bill in its present form, we should present the sorry spectacle of spending $150,000,000 to construct a canal which would be a great aid to the military operations of a nation which has always shown a hostile disposition toward us.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will you allow me to ask you a question for information?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does it happen that this bill was changed by striking out the words "defend" and "fortification?"

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It is an attempt to reconcile the language of this bill with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, pending for ratification in the other end of the Capitol. "Defend" is one of those expressive terms which means the application of force against aggression. They have stricken out "fortification" and inserted "provisions for protection." What provisions? Reliance on our good cousin Victoria to defend it for us? It might be protected by a treaty of neutrality. The changes in the bill are attempts to enable diplomats to say that it was intended to conform to the Clayton-Bulwer and Hay-Pauncefote treaties.

We are told there is no need to fortify the canal, that Great Britain is our friend and that we may trust her to live up to neutrality treaties.

Mr. Chairman, we may trust Russia, we may trust France, we may trust Germany, we may trust any nation on earth to live up to its treaties except that old robber nation, Great Britain. What has there been in her past conduct to warrant any to trust her? It has been the boast of Queen Victoria and her glorifiers that prior to the struggle with the Boers she had not in all her long reign signed a declaration of war. True, she may not have signed any declaration of war, but where is the continent or island in the sea that has not been drenched with blood during her unholy reign in attempts of that old plunderer to despoil some other country of its possessions. No better analysis of the character of our enemy—for such she is—Great Britain, can be given than the lines of her own son, Henry Labouchere:

WHERE IS THE FLAG OF ENGLAND?

And the winds of the world made answer,
North, South, and East and West;
Wherever there's wealth to covet,
Or land that can be possessed,
Wherever there are savage races
To cozen, coerce, and scare,
You shall find the vaunted ensign,
For the English flag is there.

Aye, it waves o'er the blazing hovels
Whence African victims fly,
To be shot by explosive bullets,
Or to wretchedly starve and die!
And where the beachcomer harries
The isles of the Southern sea,
At the peak of his hellish vessel
'Tis the English flag flies free.

The Maori full oft hath cursed it,
With his bitterest dying breath;
And the Arab hath hissed his hatred
As he spits at its folds in death.
The hapless fellah has feared it
On Tel-el-Kebir's parched plain,
And the Zulu's blood hath stained it
With a deep indelible stain.

It has floated o'er scenes of pillage,
It has flaunted o'er deeds of shame,
It has waved o'er the fell marauder
As he ravished with sword and flame;
It has looked upon ruthless slaughter,
And massacred dire and grim;
It has heard the shrieks of the victims
Drown even the jingo hymn.

Where is the flag of England?
Seek the land where the natives rot,
Where decay and assured extinction
Must soon be the people's lot.
Go, search for the once glad islands,
Where disease and death are rife,
And the greed of a callous commerce
Now fattens on human life!

Where is the flag of England?
Go, sail where rich galleons come
With shoddy and loaded cottons
And beer and bibles and rum.
Go, too, where brute force has triumphed
And hypocrisy makes its lair,
And your question will find its answer,
For the flag of England is there.

That is the true character of the merciless old marauder. She never made a treaty which she kept, nor encountered a people whose rights she respected. Men have been born into the world, lived to ripe old age, died, and gone to judgment since we commenced the agitation of the proposition to construct this canal, and it is now no nearer completion than at the beginning. Why? Simply because England has obstructed us. No country has interfered, save only that which Mr. McKinley calls our friend—our cousin, our Anglo-Saxon kinsman—the British Empire.

For one, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to call a halt. Let us throw aside diplomacy, which is but another name for lying, and state our policy in such plain and emphatic language that all the world will understand our position—that the governments of Europe will not be permitted to intermeddle with American affairs. I am in favor of doing this, too, Mr. Chairman, by and through the representatives of the people, not through professional diplomats, not through Secretaries of State who have been feasted and flattered in the diplomatic circles of the British Government, but through the direct representatives of the people on the floor of this House. England is aggressive, tireless, persistent, and we never have been able to hold our own with her in a diplomatic contest; but, Mr. Chairman, we have beaten her on every battlefield. Then, as true Americans, let us assert the American doctrine that we will not become entangled in any European alliance, and that under no circumstances and under no pretense, no matter what its demands or desires may be, will we allow any European country to intermeddle with American affairs. [Applause.]

Election of Senators by the People.

OF

HON. JOHN H. SMALL,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 12, 1900.

The House having under consideration House joint resolution No. 28, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States—

Mr. SMALL said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The present mode of electing Senators of the United States was the result of a compromise and not entirely satisfactory to anyone at the time of its adoption. It had no friends, and its apologizers only supported it on the ground that it was the best that could be done. It was opposed by the stronger States and by those who favored an aristocratic form of government, while the weaker States and those who opposed the aristocratic form of government wanted the Senators elected by the people. There were two propositions seriously debated by the aristocrats and clung to with considerable tenacity. The one was that the Senate should be the larger body, should be appointed by the President, and the Senators should hold office for life. The other was that the Senate itself should fill the vacancies in that body from a list of names to be presented to the Senate by the House of Representatives or the State legislatures.

Mr. Pinckney, in his draft of a constitution, wanted the House of Representatives to apportion the number of Senators based upon the membership of the different States in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Randolph wanted the Senators elected by the people and the Members of the House by the Senators from persons nominated by the State legislatures.

This precipitated a very warm debate. Mr. Sherman opposed the election by the people, insisting that it ought to be by the State legislatures. The people, he said, should have as little to do with the Government as possible. The people, he said, are ignorant and constantly liable to be misled.

Mr. Gerry also strongly opposed the election by the people, saying: "The evils we experience flow from the excess of democracy. The people do not want virtue, but are the dupes of pretended patriots."

Mr. Madison thought the fabric to be raised would be more stable and durable if it should rest on the solid foundation of the people themselves than if it should stand merely on the pillars of the legislatures. Upon this preliminary vote election by the people carried by a vote of 5 to 2, with 2 States divided. The matter was reconsidered, and Mr. Spaight moved that the Senators should be chosen by the legislatures. Mr. Butler feared taking too much power from the States. Mr. Wilson wanted the Senate elected by the people.

Mr. Reed opposed the election by the legislatures or by the people, wanting the Senators appointed by the President. He said:

Too much attachment is betrayed to State governments. We must look beyond their continuance. A national government must soon, of necessity, swallow them all up.

Mr. Butler made a motion to strike out of the proposed constitution all provision as to State governments, which motion, however, was not voted upon.

The question of electing Senators by legislatures was then defeated by a vote of 8 to 3. The election by the House of Representatives was defeated by a vote of 7 to 3.

After an extended committee conference, where there was a stormy debate, which has never been printed, Mr. Pinckney moved to reconsider the vote upon the question of electing the Senators by the State legislatures. Mr. Dickinson favored the proposition because he wanted the United States Senate to bear as strong a likeness as possible to the English House of Lords. He wanted the Senators chosen by reason of their wealth and rank in life, and believed the legislatures would be more apt to choose men of great wealth and aristocracy than the people would.

Mr. Wilson made a strong argument in favor of the election of the Senators by the people. Mr. Reed offered an amendment that the Senators be appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. Gerry insisted that the commercial and moneyed interests would be more secure in the hands of the State legislature than of the people at large.

Colonel Mason thought the State legislatures ought to have some means of defending themselves against encroachments of the National Government. This was the prevailing argument, and for the purpose of protecting the States against the Federal Government the amendment requiring the Senators to be elected by the State legislatures was carried unanimously. It therefore appeared in the first report and later in the report of the committee on detail.

In the final debate Colonel Mason stated that under the section the Senate did not represent the people, but the States in their political character.

Mr. Sherman wanted the Senators to vote by States, saying:

> If they vote by States, and each State has an equal vote, there must always be a majority of States as well as a majority of the people on the side of public measures, and the Government will have decision and efficacy.

Gouverneur Morris disapproved of the plan. He said:

> What is to be the check in the Senate? None, unless it be to keep the majority of the people from injuring particular States. But particular States ought to be injured for the sake of a majority of the people in case their conduct should deserve it.

Dr. Franklin made a motion for equal representation in the United States Senate of the States. Gouverneur Morris objected to equal representation upon the ground that the Western Territory would eventually be divided up into States and that unless absolute provision were placed in the Constitution requiring the control of the Senate to remain in the Atlantic States, those States would lose the control. He was opposed to any Senate that would not be controlled forever by the Atlantic coast States.

The question of equal representation of States in the House of Representatives was defeated, but equal representation of the States in the Senate was carried.

The question then came up as to the payment of United States Senators, and the argument was made that as they were the representatives of the States they should be paid by the States. The answer to this was not that they were representatives of the Federal Government, but being given powers to control to some extent the action of the Executive they ought to be paid by the Federal Government because such a plan would be more equal and just.

A careful analysis of the belief of those men who favored the election of Senators by the legislature and the others who favored the election of Senators by the people shows that the men who wanted the bill of rights placed in the Constitution wanted Senators elected by the people, while those who were victorious in shutting the bill of rights out of the original Constitution gained a partial victory in having the Senators elected by the legislatures, but sustained a signal defeat in the equal representation of the States in the upper branch of Congress. When the question was debated in the several States, the objection was raised that the Senators ought to be elected by the people, but when the necessity for a compromise was explained to the State conventions they finally ratified the Constitution as it now reads.

It was asserted and believed that the Federal Government would assert more influence in an election by the people than in an election by a State legislature. The members of the United States Senate were to be removed as far as possible from the influence of the Federal Government. They were representatives of the States, and by States is meant the States in their political character. They were given revision of the Executive appointments upon the theory that the States as well as the people were interested. They were given power to reject treaties with foreign countries upon exactly the same principle. The States, therefore, retained control of foreign affairs by having all treaties submitted to the representatives of the States. And in their representative capacity one State was upon exactly the same footing as another State.

A single vacancy in the United States Senate destroys the fundamental principle upon which the Senate was formed. So far as the constitutional organization of the Senate is concerned, a single vacancy is just as potent in destroying the Senate as a vacancy of half the membership of that body. The suggestion was never made in any of the debates, either in the national convention or the State conventions, that there was any possibility of a legislature which had met failing to elect a United States Senator, and provision was made for vacancies which occurred when legislatures were not in session.

It never occurred to the framers of the Constitution that a vacancy was even a possibility under the provisions of the National Charter. But while there has never been a vacancy in the House of Representatives elected by the people which has not been provided for, vacancies are of frequent occurrence in the Senate. There may be disputes in the House, and frequently are, as to who had been elected; but in such cases there is always a Congressman de facto until the question of who is Congressman de jure is settled. This is not the case in the Senate.

If a legislature fails to elect, as it frequently does, the State is without equal representation in the upper branch of the National Legislature. It is a curious fact that for a number of years past there has not been a Senate which answered the requirements of the United States Constitution in having an equal representation of votes from each of the States.

This is a contingency which was not dreamed of at the time of the adoption of the Constitution; and had it been thought possible, the vote by which the Senators were to be elected by the people when the first vote was taken would have remained unchanged.

Another question which now plays a very prominent part in the choice of United States Senators was not thought of when the Constitution was adopted. The present party system of the United States was not known, and no prophet had arisen who could foretell what the future party organization would be. All who favored the election of Senators by the legislatures did so in order to remove those elections from all partisanship and to keep them absolutely free from the influence of the Federal Government. When the matter was debated in the early days of our country's history the objection was always made that to have the election of Senators placed in the hands of the people would be to invite corruption and Federal influences.

At the present time it is generally understood that frauds are rarely practiced in the election of Representatives, while it is rarely the case that Senatorial elections are free from suspicion. A careful review of the records of the United States Senate shows that fraud has very frequently been charged in the election of Senators. It is true that there has never yet been a United States Senator deprived of his seat in that body by the Senate on the ground of fraud or corruption.

One Senator—Caldwell, of Kansas—resigned, and there is at present a committee report against another Senator which has not yet been disposed of. But no Senator has ever been unseated upon the ground of fraud and corruption. There have been contests involving the question as to which of two bodies constituted the lawful legislature, and Senators have been refused seats on gubernatorial credentials, under appointments. In a large percentage of elections of United States Senators the newspapers who oppose the successful candidate openly charge fraud and bribery. This is sometimes charged by resolutions of the legislatures which elected the Senators.

One instance is known where a majority of the members of the legislature supposed to have elected a Senator protested against his retaining his seat. The United States Senate has succeeded in discovering that fraud existed in several cases and that there was corruption, but they have never yet been able to trace any knowledge of these practices to the man who was benefited by them. It has therefore become practically useless to attempt to rectify fraud or corruption in the election of a United States Senator, and it is not attempted.

In the State of Ohio there have been two Senators who have been charged with corruption by members of the legislature, who made affidavit that they had received the money, and who filed the money with the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections as proof that it had been paid. One of these Senators was exonerated, and the last case the legislature endeavored to make so plain that they passed a resolution setting forth the facts of bribery and transmitting the money to the Senate committee. The Senate committee held that there was not enough evidence to justify an investigation, and they have not investigated it. The money is still held for the benefit of anyone who claims to own it. It is therefore impossible, or nearly so, to prove a case of corruption or bribery, no matter how flagrant it may be.

It is a matter of common report that very large sums are necessary in order to secure an election to the United States Senate in a number of the States. There are a few States in which those elections are usually free from fraud and corruption. But the fact, while not susceptible of proof, has become firmly believed by the majority of American people that an absolutely honest election of a United States Senator is the exception and not the rule. I do not claim this to be true; but I do claim that this public impression does exist, and while it exists there can not be that respect for the Senate of the United States which is absolutely necessary to the perpetuation of our State and Federal systems in harmony with each other.

Another fact of common notoriety which can be proved is that the election of Senators is not now ever free from Federal influences when the legislature of the State which elects the Senator is controlled by the same party which controls the Federal Administration.

I have in mind a recent election of a Republican United States Senator in a near-by State. There is in that State a Republican judge who has long been a sort of an idol to the people of his party. The legislators when they came to the State capitol were unanimously for this man. When they arrived there a Federal officeholder was the opposing candidate.

He was armed with letters from other Federal officeholders, and telegrams from Washington poured in to all of the legislators. The Federal officeholder was nominated after a hard fight in the caucus, and since that time nearly every one of the Republican legislators has been given a Federal office. The will of the people and the choice of the legislators was frustrated by direct Federal influences. The man whom the people wanted had never been accused of anything which would place a blemish upon his name, and the warmest friend of the man who was elected would not hesitate to acknowledge that the defeated candidate was far the superior of the two men.

It has been demonstrated in many States that the people when they go to the polls vote against fraud and corruption and for the best men for party nominees. A striking illustration of this was furnished lately in a Senatorial contest held at the primaries in a Southern State. One man, backed by wealth and by great political power, with home and foreign corporations doing their utmost to bring about his election, was opposed by a man who had nothing but faithful service and great mental ability to commend him. He had no wealthy friends to put up the money with which to meet financially the fight made against him, and he was poor himself. He thought that his duties required his presence in Washington, and he did not even go to his State in order to repair the fences which the combined wealth of his section was seeking to destroy. If there was a county in that State in which the poor but honest man did not gain a victory that county never has sent and never will send in its returns.

It is not surprising that when the Constitution was adopted the liberty of the people should have been feared. The men of wealth, and they were in those days nearly the only men of education, could not foresee what capacity the people would develop for self-government. Such men as Hamilton, Morris, and Gerry had no confidence in the integrity or ability of the masses. They shut the Bill of Rights out of the original Constitution. If it had not been for Thomas Jefferson, himself one of the landed aristocracy, this country would never have been a Republic in the true sense of that term. The States were afraid and jealous of each other, the Federalists were afraid of the States, and the States themselves were afraid of the Federalists. It was only the strong fear by the States of the Federalists which finally induced them to join together upon terms of equality in adopting the Federal Constitution.

After the Constitution was adopted Thomas Jefferson succeeded in forcing the Bill of Rights into that instrument. It was fortunate that instead of Hamilton, Gerry, and Butler the judiciary was controlled by such men as Madison and Jay, who listened with willing ears to Jefferson. Hamilton had a dream of a strong Senate, a weak House of Representatives, a President who should hold office for life, and eventually the accomplishment of what Reed wanted in the Constitutional Convention, a total elimination of the State governments.

It was a surprise to even the friends of liberty and republican government that the people did so well in the choice of their representatives. The debates in the Constitutional Convention showed a general belief that the States would at times try to encroach upon each other's rights, but no such attempt has ever been made. The State governments have worked in perfect harmony, and the people of the States have shown themselves as capable of self-government as have their representatives in the Federal Government shown themselves to take care of the interests of the nation.

Traveling from one State to another, little if any difference can be discovered in the practical workings of a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Only those men who believed that the people were incapable of self-government favored the election of United States Senators by the State legislatures. In the light of history there can certainly exist no doubt in the mind of any man that the people of the United States are capable of self-government, and that they can vote as intelligently for a Senator of the United States as can a member of a State legislature.

Up to 1892, according to an official list published by the United States Senate, 138 Senators had been appointed by governors. Several such appointments have been made since that time. During the present session California, Utah, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Delaware have had but one Senator. Nebraska has during the session filled its vacancy by appointment and California by calling together an extra session of the legislature. Pennsylvania had a claimant for a seat, whose claim has been denied, but Utah and Delaware have but one Senator each and no prospects of these seats being filled until the legislatures of those States shall meet again.

I have searched in vain for any instance of an office to be filled by election by the people being vacant. There may be a contest, but in such event there is no interregnum, or should not be under the Constitution. One or the other will and should hold until the question of legality shall be determined.

The people for twenty years past have demanded that the Senators be elected by popular vote. There has been no partisanship in this demand. Republican and Democratic legislatures have memorialized Congress, and Republican and Democratic members have introduced resolutions calling for this amendment to the United States Constitution. Several of these resolutions have passed Congress, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, by overwhelming vote. As early as the Forty-eighth Congress, in the first session, there were three resolutions introduced providing for the election of Senators by the people.

In the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress five resolutions were introduced, seven numerously signed petitions were presented as well as a resolution from the New Hampshire legislature in favor of the election of Senators by the people.

In the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress four resolutions were introduced of similar import.

In the first session of the Fiftieth Congress eight resolutions were introduced, ten petitions and resolutions of the legislatures of the States of Oregon and Iowa.

In the second session of the Fiftieth Congress there were three petitions presented.

In the first session of the Fifty-first Congress ten resolutions, twenty petitions, and a petition of the Iowa legislature were presented.

In the second session of the Fifty-first Congress two resolutions, seven petitions and resolutions of the States of Indiana and Idaho were presented.

In the first session of the Fifty-second Congress twenty-five resolutions, fifty petitions and memorials from the Oregon, Wisconsin, and Kentucky legislatures were introduced.

In the second session of the Fifty-second Congress one resolution was presented.

In the first session of the Fifty-third Congress thirteen resolutions and memorials from the Minnesota and Washington legislatures were introduced.

In the second session of the Fifty-third Congress three resolutions and six petitions were presented.

In the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, two resolutions, two petitions, and memorials of the legislatures of Kansas and Minnesota were presented.

In the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress ten resolutions and memorials of the legislatures of Idaho, Ohio, and Wyoming were presented.

In the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress two resolutions were presented.

In the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress six resolutions and memorials of the legislatures of Idaho, Montana, and Utah were presented.

In the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress two resolutions and a memorial of the legislature of Florida were presented.

In the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress three resolutions were presented and memorials from the States of Idaho, Minnesota, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, and Washington were presented.

In 1891 the Illinois legislature took the initiative in attempting to obtain a vote of the States in order to force Congress to pass this amendment. There has not been a resolution or a petition in favor of holding the present plan.

Senator Mitchell, of Wisconsin, placed this question very clearly and tersely when he said:

> Another strong reason in favor of the change is the fact that after much discussion an enlightened public sentiment demands it. This is not a mere passing craze similar to the humors and whims that at times take possession of certain classes. An educated, enlightened public opinion has taken hold upon the subject, and the demand for the change is loud and emphatic. It is pronounced, earnest, imperative, not only among the individual voters, but the public press of the country, representing all political parties, seems to be almost a unit on the subject. The legislatures of no less than ten States, including those of Indiana, Wisconsin, and Ohio, recently memorialized Congress for change. * * * (See Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congress; also RECORD, April 22, 1890.)

In the House of Representatives at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress no less than 17 different resolutions were presented upon the subject; and at that session, January 16, 1893, one of those resolutions, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, passed the House of Representatives by more than a two-thirds vote; while in the Fifty-third Congress 3 similar amendments were presented in the Senate and 12 in the House by as many different members; and on July 21, 1894, one of those passed the House, the vote being—yeas 141, nays 50. At the present session of the Senate, after full discussion, the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections reported favorably a joint resolution proposing this amendment.

It has been urged that the governors of States are not as a rule superior men to members of the United States Senate. It is argued from this that the people would not improve the character of the Senate. But it is not a question of whether or not intellectual men are chosen for the Senate, but of how they are chosen and for what purpose. It is a notorious fact that corruption is more apt to exist in Senatorial than in gubernatorial elections. It might be that the people would elect the same men who are elected now. It would certainly be an advantage if they were elected without corruption than for them to be elected by use of unfair and illegal means.

The question of what they are elected for goes to the very fundamental principle of the existence of the Senate. If they are elected by Federal influences, they can not serve the State as the Constitution intended they should. Experience has shown that the present method brings about elections by means of Federal influences. If the same men who are elected now should be elected by the people, instead of under the present system, the change in the Senate would be wonderful. They would then be representatives of the States as the Constitution intended they should be, while they are now subject at any time to a controlling Federal influence. To elect the Senators by the people would be in a great measure to restore the constitutional duality of government in the United States.

It is time that this duality should be restored. The people who wanted the Senators elected by the legislatures or appointed by the President were right when they said that they wanted the State governments eliminated. They did not succeed in destroying the State governments then, but they did succeed in forcing compromises under which the Federal Government would gradually absorb the State government. About the only protection left to the States against this process lies in the United States Senate as the representative of the equality and sovereignty of the States. By means of the Senate the States have the right to pass upon foreign treaties and Presidential appointments. If this right were exercised for the interest of the States, it would be sufficient to perpetuate the relation which ought to exist and which was intended to exist between the State governments and the Federal Government.

But this right is not so exercised; the United States Senate is not controlled by the States; but when the party whip is cracked with orders from the Executive Mansion, the Senators obey the whip and fall into line. This is caused largely by the fact that in too many instances the Federal power secured their election to the Senate, and they are dependent upon the Federal power for the retention of their seats in that body. If they were dependent upon their States for their tenure of office, they would act for the States and guard the interest of the States.

The encroachment of the Federal Government upon the State governments has been so gradual and insidious that it is difficult to point to any specific act which has caused the change from the relationship the States bore to the nation half a century ago. That there has been a change all thinking men must admit. The States to-day are in some respects possessed of less governmental authority than are the municipal governments brought into existence by the legislation of the States. In the case of Railroad Company vs. Husen the United States Supreme Court held that the statute of the State of Missouri prohibiting the transportation of Cherokee cattle across the State was unconstitutional as a regulation of commerce, although a city ordinance to the same effect has been upheld as a proper exercise of the police power.

In Chylung vs. Freeman the United States Supreme Court held a California statute unconstitutional which prohibited the importation of vicious Chinese. The States have not as wide a police power as have the cities. In no State of the Union can the governor of a State send the State militia to a county without being called upon by the county officials. The Federal Government has asserted its right to send its troops to quell a riot in a State against the protest of the governor who claims that his militia is sufficient. A sheriff of a county has therefore more executive authority over his county than the governor of a State has over his State. Other instances might be given where the State governments have been shorn of their power by the different branches of the Federal Government.

It is not a part of this discussion to consider which of these provisions have been right or what wrong. It must be admitted by everyone that the tendency is toward an increase of power by the Federal Government and a decrease of power in the State government. Even those who favor this tendency, so far as it has gone, must admit that in the last analysis it would destroy the Republic and create an aristocracy. I take it for granted that no member of this House would for one moment consent to this overturning of our governmental system. But it will come so gradually that nothing will occur to sound the note of warning, and almost before we know it the autonomy of the States will be destroyed.

I do not accuse any American of wishing for such a catastrophe. But the one safeguard which can prevent this consummation is tottering. The only check the States have ever had is the United States Senate; and if that becomes a body under Federal control, the States are rendered absolutely powerless. This bill does not ask that the States recover any of their lost ground; it does not place any limitation upon the powers of the Senate. It only asks that the States be allowed to vote upon the question of how the representatives of the States shall be chosen by the States. If the States do not want this change and are satisfied with the present conditions, they will defeat this amendment.

All of the States that have taken action upon the subject say that they do want the change. As it is a change only in the manner of selecting their own representatives, it seems to me that the question should properly be left to the States and that they should be allowed to vote upon the amendment. I can see no reason for opposing the submission of this matter to the votes of the States. If there is no desire upon the part of the Federal Government to usurp the powers of the States, the Federal Government has no interest whatever in the manner the States select for choosing their representatives.

It is to the interest of the Federal Government that good men should be chosen, but as the principal Federal officials are selected by vote of the people, even though through an electoral college, it would be strange if those men should distrust the ability of the people to choose proper representatives. The only logical reason that I can see for the Federal Government opposing this permission to the States of selecting their own method for choosing their own representatives is that it would curtail Federal power and increase State power. If this be true, then the purposes of the Constitution require that the change should be made at once.

The people have spoken from different sections of the country without regard to partisanship. Their voice has been unanimous in favor of the election of United States Senators by the people. Legislatures have memorialized Congress in favor of the change, and the voice of the States so far as heard has been unanimous. Do these States not know the manner in which they wish their Senators elected? Are the people all mistaken upon the same question? Men who represent the States should be selected by the States and in the manner desired by the States.

I am in favor of the substitute rather than the bill reported by the majority of the committee, because I believe that, if the election of Senators is to be restored to the States and exercised through the people of the States, the amendment should be applicable to all the States of the Union. If perchance there should be any one or more States which prefer the present mode of electing their legislatures thereof, then it might well be that this very fact would constitute the strongest reason why the Senators in such States should be elected by the people. In addition it would be incongruous and inconsistent to have Senators elected by one method in part of the States and by another method in other States, and would inevitably lead to confusion and scandal.

As I have heretofore stated, the proposed amendment to the Constitution has passed this House by an overwhelming vote upon several occasions, but it has never yet been adopted by the Senate. What conclusion are we to draw from this situation? It is this: That the House of Representatives is near to the people of the several States, while the Senate is too far removed from the people. This very fact constitutes one of the strongest reasons for the adoption of this amendment. Each of the several States possesses a representative form of government, all of whose powers are derived from the people and exercised by the people.

At present there is scarcely an official in any of the States, who exercises important public functions, who is not elected by a direct vote of the people. As Senators are representatives of the States in Congress, why should not they also be elected by the people of their States? If they were so elected, they would be responsive to public sentiment, and the fact that the majority of the members of that body do not yield to the demands of the people shows that they are indifferent to their wishes.

The fathers of this Republic builded wisely, and while it was not possible for them to foresee every change or anticipate every necessary condition which might arise as they launched the ship of state upon a pathless sea, they did, however, establish the principle that Senators should be representatives of the States in the Federal Congress, and the object of this amendment is to rehabilitate and perpetuate the theory of the framers of the Constitution.

Let us guard the exercise of the franchise; let us educate the children of the Republic for the responsible duty of citizenship, and then let us intrust the people of the States with the responsibility of government and with the election of their Senators to represent such States in the legislative department of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Civil Code for Alaska.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOSHUA S. SALMON,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes—

Mr. SALMON said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In the discussion of this measure there is one portion of it to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and that is that portion which claims to form for the Territory of Alaska a government. I believe that our Territories should all have a Territorial form of government and that as soon as the populations of the Territories are sufficient, they should be formed, organized into, and admitted as States into the Union.

I am stronger of that belief than I have been heretofore because of the sentiment which has been advanced here upon this floor during the present session of Congress—a sentiment that I believe to be too preposterous to be held by any lover of constitutional government. It is that sentiment which holds that this Congress may legislate for the people of the Territories unrestricted and unlimited by the Constitution, and limited only by its own conscience. I do not hold to that view and construction of the Constitution, and I am strongly opposed to that construction.

If you read the discussions which took place during the framing of the Constitution, you will see all through them that it was proposed to legislate not only for the thirteen States that were then organized but for the Territories outside of the limits of those States. In the report of the subcommittee of that convention that presented articles of Constitution for consideration you will find this language:

> New States lawfully constituted or established within the limit of the United States may be admitted by the Legislature into this Government, but to such admission the consent of two-thirds of the members present in each House shall be necessary. If the new States are raised within the limit of the present States, the consent of the legislatures of those States shall be also necessary to its admission. If the admission be consented to, the new State shall be admitted on the same terms with the original States, but the Legislature may make conditions with the new States concerning the public debt which shall then be subsisting.

The words "limit of the United States" and the words "limit of the present States" mark two different boundaries.

This was the language submitted for consideration, and while the language in our Constitution varies a little, it does not take from it the sense in which the term "United States" was used.

The language finally adopted, and which is found in section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution, is as follows:

> New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

This language indicates that the formation or erection of States was to be from other States or parts thereof, but that the admission of States to this Union was to be from territory outside the limits of the organized States. You will see by the very language used here that the term "United States" was intended to take in territory outside of the organized States. From that time on it has always been understood that the term "United States" included the entire domain of this Republic and was not confined to the territorial limits of the organized States.

Not until this Congress advanced the contrary idea was there a different understanding of that name when used to designate our country. And for what purpose was that construction advanced? It was advanced to meet a proposition; it was advanced to meet the conditions that have arisen with reference to the Philippine Islands, not with reference to Porto Rico, as that had no force in the consideration of the question.

The strong discussion on the Porto Rican bill arose partly from the carpetbag form of government which the bill provided for the people of Porto Rico, but principally from the imposition of the tax on products of that island brought to the States and upon products of the States taken to Porto Rico in violation, as is claimed by this side of the House, of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, which says:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

The bill as originally prepared and introduced contained no such obnoxious provision. It was prepared evidently with respect for the provision of the Constitution which I have recited as the same was interpreted by the President when he wrote his message to this Congress, in which he said, in speaking of the laws necessary to be passed for Porto Rico, that "our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets." It was afterwards that the bill was changed and this provision for tariff duties was inserted. The rate first fixed upon was 25 per cent of the Dingley rates, and the bill was afterwards amended, making the rate 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff.

If we consider this provision only with reference to the burden imposed upon the Porto Rican people, the reduction of the rate must be admitted to be the more generous, but the principle remains the same, and it is the principle in this case that is odious rather than the amount of the burden. It was not a necessity that this 15 per cent tariff should be added there. It was only to prepare the way for the legislation that is anticipated for the Philippine Islands. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if we can not control the territory the annexation of which we have in view without violating the Constitution we should not hold that territory. If we must dispense with one or the other, I say hold to the Constitution and dispense with those islands.

It is our Constitution, with its benign obligations and restrictions, that makes us proud of our country. The sun may shine as brightly, the air may be as balmy, and the soil may yield as bountifully in other lands as in our own; but with the immortal Declaration of Independence as the proclaimer of our principles and our Constitution as the Magna Charta of our liberties, there is no land on all of God's earth where brightness is so bright or beauty is so beautiful as in our own America. Destroy these and the gloom of discouragement and decay will settle over our land, the pride of our millions will change to chagrin, and the courage, independence, and progressiveness of our people will be turned to subserviency and indifference.

In the third section of Article IV of the Constitution we find this language:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

It seems that it is upon this clause that the preposterous doctrine I am now combating is based. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the language I have just read, properly construed, does not refer to the people of a Territory, but only to the property of the United States in that Territory; that Congress may make such needful rules and regulations for the disposition of that property as it sees fit and as has been customary to do in all times past. You can not properly construe this language unless you pay due regard to the words "or other property," showing by the words themselves and the connection in which they are used that territory was referred to as property of the United States and not as a community of people to be governed by law. The limitations of the Constitution do not apply to the manner or the quantity or the terms upon which property of the United States, whether territory or other, may be disposed of or regulated.

The limitations and restrictions contained in the Constitution all pertain to the rights or liberties of the people. The power given to Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises affects the rights and liberties of the people and, therefore, the restriction that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform; the power to establish a rule of naturalization and laws of bankruptcy affects the rights of the people; therefore the restriction that they must be uniform.

That word "uniform," so liberally used by the framers of the Constitution, shows that their motto was "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none," a motto so wantonly dragged in the dust in these times of high civilization when selfishness is more indulged and cultivated than any other human trait.

The restrictions found in section 9 of Article I of the Constitution are that—

> The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, etc.;
> No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed;
> No capitation, or other direct, tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken;
> No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State;
> No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another;
> No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States.

All these pertain to the rights or liberties of the people and are restrictions upon the Congress in legislating for the people. There are other restrictions upon the powers of the States to legislate, but the restrictions I have mentioned limit both national and State legislation.

The words "States now existing" in the first clause of section 9, Article I, and the words "territory or other property belonging to the United States" in the second clause of section 3, Article IV of the Constitution, which I have quoted, show clearly that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the existence of territory belonging to the United States and the forming of new States therefrom. Can it be presumed that they overlooked the necessity of some legislation which must be enacted by Congress for the territory until it should be sufficiently populated to be formed into States and admitted into the Union? That would be underestimating the great talent in that convention. The State governments were confined to the territorial limits of their respective State and the National Government was coextensive with the entire country, both States and Territories; and until the territory was formed into States the burden of legislating for it devolved upon Congress.

In the case of American Insurance Company vs. Canter (1 Peters, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 511) Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> Perhaps the power of governing a territory belonging to the United States which has not, by becoming a State, acquired the means of self-government may result necessarily from the facts that it is not within the jurisdiction of any particular State and is within the power and jurisdiction of the United States. The right to govern may be the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory. Whichever may be the source whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestionable.

There is no question as to the right and power of Congress to enact such legislation as may be needed by the people of our Territories until they are prepared to be admitted as States, but Congress must always observe and be limited by the Constitution whether legislating for the people of the States or of the Territories. No proposition is clearer to my mind than this, and to contend otherwise is showing little regard for the Constitution and little love for constitutional government. To contend that Congress can legislate for United States territory or territory belonging to the United States, unlimited and unrestricted by the Constitution, is to favor imperialism indeed. Republican members of this House—not all of them, thank Providence—contend that Congress in legislating for our Territories is limited only by the conscience of its members; that the Constitution has no power over such legislation.

What can be more imperialistic than such a sentiment? We see illustrations of that principle in the mob that drags its pleading and possibly innocent victim to the selected tree and hangs him regardless of his appeals and his rights; we see that principle exhibited in the imprisonment of men in the Cœur d'Alene bull pen in Idaho for no crime other than that they ask to work; it it was in obedience to that principle that England placed burdens upon our forefathers that they could not bear and which gave rise to the sentiment: "Give me liberty or give me death." It was that principle and that alone against which our fathers rebelled, and it was to rid themselves of a government which was limited only by the consciences of the King and Parliament of England.

It is a greater reflection upon our own intelligence than upon theirs to contend that those able men, fresh from the hardships and terrors of a seven years' war, waged for no other cause than that the King and legislative power of England, unlimited and unrestricted, except by their own consciences, imposed upon the people of this country burdens and abuses which they could no longer endure, should inadvertently or intentionally provide for the same diabolical uses to be imposed by Congress upon the people of our Territories. Such a contention, Mr. Chairman, certainly can have but few real adherents.

It must be remembered that there were men in the convention that framed our Constitution who were opposed to the theory of a national government composed of a multiplicity of States, with each State having sovereign authority to govern within its own territorial limits, and who insisted that there should be one general government over the entire country; and this view of government was not ignored in the final construction of the Constitution. Alexander Hamilton, who was undoubtedly as anxious to establish a government that would secure to the people the greatest amount of liberty and equality as any of them, was the most strenuous advocate of the theory of centralized government. In the paper setting forth his propositions for constitutional provisions which he submitted to the convention not one of the limitations or restrictions on the National Legislature which I have mentioned and which are contained in the Constitution is suggested. In Madison's report of the debates which took place in the convention, with reference to Hamilton, he says:

> The extent of the country to be governed discouraged him. The expense of a general government was also formidable, unless there were such a diminution of expense on the side of the State governments as the case would admit. If they were extinguished, he was persuaded that great economy might be obtained by substituting a general government. He did not mean, however, to shock the public opinion by proposing such a measure. * * * This view of the subject almost led him to despair that a republican government could be established over so great an extent. He was sensible at the same time that it would be unwise to propose one of any other form. In his private opinion he had no scruple in declaring, supported as he was by the opinion of so many of the wise and good, that the British Government was the best in the world and that he doubted much whether anything short of it would do in America.

While Hamilton held these views as to a centralized government being better and stronger, he recognized the fact that it was useless to urge the adoption of such a government, taking England as a model, and said he did not mean, however, to shock the public opinion by proposing such a measure.

The people of this country had had enough of government limited and restricted only by the discretion or conscience of the legislative and executive authorities, and they were wholly determined to place upon these agencies of government such limitations and restraints as would best secure to the people equal rights and the greatest freedom.

The Declaration of Independence sets forth the evils and abuses that may be imposed by government unrestricted by constitutional limitations. The people of these colonies had felt the tortures of these abuses and were forming a government where such abuses could not be possible. They had just before declared to the world that they held these truths to be self-evident:

> That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

These were truths never recognized by the British Government and not regarded by that Government to-day. And yet there are men in this Congress who laud that Government, with all its unlimited and tyrannical power exercised in the destruction of free government and the subjugation of independent peoples.

Let others think as they will, I do not believe that any man who holds to such views has any love for constitutional government or a decent regard for the rights of others.

If all men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with the rights to life, liberty, and the pursuits of happiness, then the Porto Ricans, the Filipinos, the Irish, and the Boers are as much entitled to those blessings as ourselves; and our Constitution was framed to secure to all who come under the broad mantle of our Government the equal protection of these sacred rights.

As I have before said, Mr. Chairman, the providing of revenues for Porto Rico was only a pretext for the adoption of this monstrous doctrine that Congress can legislate for territory of the United States outside the limits of the organized States without regard for the limitations or restrictions contained in our Constitution, and limited only by the consciences of its members.

The straits in which we are placed in order to hold the Philippine Islands have given rise to these strange notions of our Constitution. The mercenary incentive to hold and spoliate those islands has driven men to contemn and argue away the Constitution and set up the hypocritical cant that the conscience of the American people, and especially the Anglo-Saxon portion of it, will not permit injustice to be done. In other words, "that the King can do no wrong;" that if we give back to the people a good portion of what we take from them they have no cause to complain. What is liberty? What is freedom? Is it that I may do as I please and you do as I direct? That is the doctrine of the British Government and that seems to be the kind of freedom favored by members of this House.

I have confined myself, Mr. Chairman, to combating the principle that has been expressed and acted upon by this Congress in legislating for our territory, that in enacting such legislation Congress is not governed by the Constitution and need not regard its limitations or restrictions; and if I have failed to show the error of that sentiment, it is because I have been unable to set forth the reasons for the faith that is within me.

I believe we should give to Alaska a Territorial government framed under our Constitution and regardful of every provision, limitation, and restriction therein contained. [Loud applause.]

Bimetallism, and Why the United States Can Establish the Same at the Ratio of 16 to 1.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, March 13, 1900.

The House having under consideration the conference report upon H. R. 1, entitled "A bill to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes"—

Mr. SHAFROTH said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I will not attempt to discuss the details of the bill agreed upon by the conferees, as my objection to it is fundamental.

According to my ideas, the bill is based upon an entirely erroneous theory of finance. It is predicated upon the proposition, that we should diminish the foundation upon which all paper money and credits rest, and increase the superstructure resting upon that foundation. In other words, it diminishes the foundation of gold and silver to gold alone as redemption money, and at the same time, it provides for an increase in the superstructure, by the issuance of credit money, in the shape of bank notes, all of which become redeemable ultimately in gold alone by the Government.

The difficulties of nations, in matters of finance, as with individuals, arise from assuming too many obligations. After credits are extended too much, there must come a day of liquidation.

While they are being extended every industry and business thrives, but when redemptions are demanded the most severe depression and panics occur. Such a system of currency can not be sound or safe. It may work smoothly for a while, and it may even increase prices for a time, but when the day of liquidation comes, the magnitude of the disaster is bound to be in the exact proportion of the credits extended.

A properly drawn financial measure, in my judgment, should be framed upon the reverse of that policy; it should broaden and enlarge the base upon which credits are built. Instead of treating silver as token money, which at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Treasury is redeemable in gold, it should make it basic money in the same way that France to-day makes it basic money. By so doing, the base upon which we build the superstructure of credit is enlarged, and consequently we make a safer system, one which would produce greater certainty of prosperity and less danger of financial panics.

Mr. FOWLER. Would you be in favor of substituting gold and silver for the use of checks?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly not.

Mr. FOWLER. That is your credit money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. Ninety-nine per cent of all credits in the world are in checks, drafts, and bills of exchange.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, that is not true at all, and I can demonstrate it to you in a minute. You take the clearing-house reports of the city of New York, and they show that 95 per cent of the business is done in checks, and the balance, 5 per cent, is settled in cash. That is among institutions that are created for the very purpose of saving cash transactions.

It is true that 5 per cent is all that it takes to settle balances among these institutions; but how much must it take in transactions between customers and retail establishments, and among the people? As to the retail transactions, there has been a report made by Mr. Eckels, Comptroller of the Currency. In 1894 he sent to the national banks of the country notices for them to give the amounts in cash and checks deposited in their banks.

The returns from the banks showed that 42 per cent of the commerce of the retail houses in the United States was done in cash and the rest in checks.

Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOWLER. Just there. You do not mean to say that that was silver and gold?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I mean to say silver, gold, and United States notes. It took 42 per cent in those, and necessarily the balance was in checks and drafts.

Mr. FOWLER. What portion of it was gold and silver? Now, you have just stated to the House that you are in favor of substituting gold and silver, actual coin, for all this credit money.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, the gentleman misunderstands the position I take. I say the ideal monetary system would be gold and silver, if there were enough gold and silver in existence to act as a circulating medium, but there is evidently, as I shall attempt to show, an absolute shortage in the precious metals, and for that reason——

Mr. BELL. When you speak of gold and silver, do you not include silver and gold certificates?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; the certificates are not credit money; they are representative money. Gold and silver coins are lodged in the Treasury covering them, and consequently they can not be considered as credit money. Credit money is that which is based upon the general credit of the Government or based on the credit of some bank. But I wish to return to the line of my argument.

IS THE SILVER QUESTION SETTLED?

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans, by the enactment of this legislation, profess to believe that they have settled the silver question. It is true, they have done their utmost to debase one of the precious metals of the world, and one that is the product of our own country. But, sir, they have not destroyed it, and nothing but its total annihilation as money can prevent the recurring agitation of this question.

As long as there are creditors and debtors in the world; as long as it is a recognized principle of political economy, that the quantity of basic money affects prices of all commodities and property, just so long will the financial question remain a vital issue in American politics.

Sir, there is still in the world nearly $4,000,000,000 of silver acting as basic money, and relieving the strain on gold. The gold standard of value can not be attained until all that money is annihilated. The existence of that silver money as surely affects the value of gold, as the existence of corn affects the value of wheat, and the existence of beef affects the value of pork.

No nation on the face of the globe except the United States by this measure has authorized its Treasury officers in their discretion to redeem its silver money in gold. No nation except Great Britain and its colony Canada has the pure gold standard. Every other nation on earth has a legal-tender silver coin, which acts as its own redeemer.

I recognize that in order to attain the gold standard of value, it will not only be essential to redeem silver money in gold, but it will be necessary to destroy silver as a money metal.

The next financial legislation, therefore, that will be attempted by the capitalistic class will be the total annihilation of silver as money. It again will cause a conflict between the creditor, who desires to remove the cheapening effect upon gold by the existence of silver money, and the debtor, whose interest it is to retain that effect on gold.

When once the policy of redeeming silver coins in gold is thoroughly established, the creditor will then begin the agitation for the destruction of the full legal-tender silver coins throughout the world. Then a battle will ensue, which will likely last as long and be as fierce, as the one which followed the closing of the mints to silver by our legislation in 1873.

It will be contended, that since the silver is redeemable in gold, it has become simply a promise to pay gold; that as a promise to pay can be printed upon paper by the Government for almost nothing, it is foolish for the Government to have $500,000,000 invested in a currency redeemable in gold.

It will be further contended that as silver coins can be made at less than one-half the par value of the same, it is dangerous to have a circulating medium which can be so perfectly and cheaply counterfeited.

With these arguments they will seek to retire every silver dollar, and then dump them upon the markets of the world for sale as bullion.

This movement to annihilate silver as money is started by this bill, in authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem silver dollars in gold, and when consummated it will produce fearful results and frightful disasters.

By destroying silver as money, you make gold bear all the burdens of commerce and credit, which have been borne by gold and silver together. That, of necessity, other things being equal, will greatly increase the burden upon gold.

Increasing the burden upon gold means increasing the value of gold; and that means increasing the purchasing power of gold. As gold is the material out of which you make your standard money, it means the increase in the value of your standard money. As all your credit money and bonds, promissory notes, and other obligations, public and private, become payable ultimately in standard money, it means the increase in the purchasing power of all such obligations.

The increase of the purchasing power of the dollar, means that more can be bought with it, and that means that the seller of products must yield up more in order to get the dollar. That means he must sell at a less price. If the $4,000,000,000 of silver in the world are to be wiped out and the $4,600,000,000 of gold made to do the work of both moneys, then, according to the principle of supply and demand, there must be a great increase in value of gold. It must be borne in mind, that there are two things that affect prices: First, supply of and demand for each commodity; second, the supply of and demand for that thing which measures all commodities, namely, standard money.

ELEVATION OF PRICES DUE TO INCREASED BASIC MONEY.

It is true there has been increased prices in the last three years caused by the increased production of gold, by Spain removing its demands on gold in going to a silver basis, by Russia opening her war chest of gold, by famines in India and Russia, and by the extraordinary demands made upon products by the Spanish-American and South African wars, but the increase has not been as great as many people claim. It has been principally in articles manufactured by trusts and monopolies. The rise in trust articles is detrimental to the masses instead of a benefit. The Sauerbeck tables are the best index as to the rise of prices. They represent 45 of the principal commodities used by man, which constitute 80 per cent of the world's commerce. I ask to insert those tables in my remarks.

Mr. Sauerbeck's index numbers, to which is added the annual average price of silver in London, and to which is added index numbers of the same forty-five commodities, taking as their base the average prices of 1873, and a table showing the increase of the purchasing power of a dollar, taking the average prices of 1873 as the base.

The tables show that in the past four years there has been an increase of 7 points in the price of the world's staple commodities, but it also shows that the average of those prices is still only 61 per cent of the prices of 1873, when the first movement against silver began.

This upward movement is a clear demonstration of the correctness of the principle contended for by the friends of silver in 1896. We contended that in order to have better times, we must have more basic money. That principle is as true now as it was then. Some more basic money has come through the increased production of gold, and the operation of our laws providing for the free coinage of that metal. It demonstrates our contention, that the fall of prices from 1873 to 1897 was the result of an inadequate supply of basic money, which the free coinage of silver would have supplied. To authorize the free coinage of silver now, would be to add still more basic money to that of the world, and restore the prices of commodities and property to those which existed in 1873.

INCREASED GOLD OUTPUT DOES NOT RELIEVE THE NECESSITY FOR SILVER.

The production of gold for the year 1899, it is true, was nearly as much as the production of both gold and silver for the year 1891, but the man who thinks that fact, does away with the necessity for silver money, confuses the annual production of gold with the world's stock of gold. It is the world's stock of basic money that affects prices. According to Ernest Seyd, an eminent statistician of England, and John Sherman, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, the total gold stock in 1876 was $3,500,000,000. According to the last annual report of Mr. Gage, the present Secretary of the Treasury, it is $4,631,700,000, which shows an increase of $1,131,700,000 in twenty-four years, or only $47,000,000 a year, while the production during that period was three times that amount. At that rate it would take nearly seventy-five years to supplant with gold the silver money of the world. According to the Director of the Mint, the total production of gold from 1860 to 1898, inclusive, was $5,082,935,800, yet the total amount of the stock of gold for monetary uses, now in the world is only $4,631,700,000. What, then, has become of the vast amount of gold mined for four thousand years previous to 1860? Unquestionably lost in the arts and in the Orient, and wasted by abrasion. But even if the present great annual yield of gold should continue, it must be remembered that more than half of it goes into the arts or is lost for monetary purposes, which leaves only $157,000,000 for monetary uses. That is only 3 per cent of the entire stock of gold, and that increase is no more than the legitimate demands of commerce require. The amount used in the arts varies with conditions. In prosperous times it increases enormously, amounting often to the entire annual production, and in depressed times it attains the minimum. The average consumption of gold for nonmonetary purposes for long periods is about 70 per cent.

Men of course may guess that the world's supply of gold will increase; but is it safe to found a financial system that affects prices of all commodities and property upon guesses?

The annual production of gold, although it is large, is not likely to continue for a long series of years.

Mr. HILL. Why? It has steadily increased for a hundred years; why should it not steadily increase?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will be pleased to answer that question. There never has been a phenomenal discovery of gold or silver but for periods of time it has increased, and for like periods of time it has decreased. It arises from the existence at intervals of a speculative fever among people to mine. There is something in a gold-mining excitement which produces that effect upon the mind which may properly be termed magical. All of this gold that is produced to-day is not mined at a profit. There are millions and millions of dollars of gold added to the world's stock of that metal, which is produced at a loss. I may have a mine and work it at a loss for years. I do not abandon the mine. I continue to work it. Why? Because I am in hopes that I will reach a lode that will make it pay. That is the reason.

Consequently a large part of this gold that is being placed on the market to-day is the result of losses on the part of the people.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. How much?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is impossible to tell.

Mr. FOWLER. Is nature going to change?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are times when mining is exhilarated and when it is depressed, and such times make a great variation in the production of gold and silver.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit me an interruption?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. Have not you in your own State mines which are being worked to-day, under new processes and methods, that ten or even five years ago would not have been profitable?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no question but there is a tendency to cheapen the process, but that does not produce more than the legitimate demands of commerce require, and notwithstanding that, there are many mines that are not paying to-day.

Mr. HILL. Does not the gentleman think that there will be processes by which they can be worked at a profit?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No one can foretell that. Mines give out. The rich mines are invariably the mines that do not last. I have heard it said by a gentleman, one of the largest smelting men in the United States, that he never knew a rich silver mine to produce for a period longer than five years. Gold mines are the same way—the rich one has a vein that is usually small, or else is worked so low that the difficulties and cost of working it become too great to make it profitable.

VARYING PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

We have simply to look at the history of the world to see that when there has been great activity in mining it has invariably been followed by depression. The production of gold in the United States in 1853 was $65,000,000, which has never yet been equaled, and it declined then until 1883, when it was only $30,000,000. The world produced in 1860 $134,000,000, and then there was almost a steady decline until 1883, when it was $95,000,000. The great discoveries of 1849 in California were followed by great alarm in Europe. People got frightened over it. They said, "This metal, gold, is found in too large quantities; we must not have a standard of any such metal;" and consequently Germany, Holland, and Austria demonetized gold and immediately adopted a single silver standard. What has followed? California to-day does not produce one-third as much gold as it did in the fifties, nothwithstanding the cheap methods of mining. It is not produced because it does not now exist there in the quantities it did. To-day we are getting out of California about fifteen millions a year, when in the fifties she produced between fifty and sixty millions a year.

Now, take Nevada. Some time after the California discoveries the great Comstock lode of Nevada was discovered, the most wonderful discovery of the world up to that time. Silver, it seemed, was to be shoveled out and turned into commerce to be made into money. Men then began to talk about what silver would be worth, and the prediction was made openly, that the Comstock mine alone would produce five hundred millions each year. Has it verified it? Has there been even a shadow of truth in that prediction? Yet, as a result of the Comstock discovery, the movement to demonetize silver was begun, and most of the European countries, as well as our own, in which the product was found, closed their mints to the free coinage of that metal. We find upon examination that the production of Nevada is not more than one-twentieth part of what it produced in the year 1873.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we cannot expect but that the same results will follow. In every instance it has done so in the past, and it is likely to do so in the future. The general tendency, for a very long series of years, is toward increased production, but that is absolutely necessary to keep pace with commerce, and is totally inadequate to supplant the existing world's stock of silver, or prevent the disastrous results of decreasing production for years, at intervals.

BIMETALLISM.

In my judgement the only safe monetary system is that which has stood the experience of centuries, namely, bimetallism. While the production of gold increases and decreases, and silver does the same, yet silver generally increases when gold decreases, and vice versa. Hence the two together have a very steady production, and they increase no more than the legitimate demands of trade require.

Bimetallism is the equal treatment of gold and silver. It can only be established by open mints, which cause the coinage to automatically respond to the demands of commerce. The bimetallic value of commodities and property, is that which is attained by the use, as redemption money, of both the gold and silver of the world, instead of the gold alone.

A BIMETALLIC STANDARD OF VALUE NOT A BIMETALLIC CURRENCY IN EACH NATION.

There is great confusion in the minds of many people between a bimetallic standard of value, and a bimetallic circulating medium. Many people think, that you can not have a bimetallic standard of value, unless in each country gold and silver circulate side by side. It is quite immaterial and unimportant, as far as measuring values is concerned, whether gold and silver circulate in each nation.

You can have a bimetallic standard of value, without silver circulating in a gold-standard country, or gold circulating in a silver-standard country. If one-half of the nations of the world in commercial importance were to adopt the single gold standard, and not permit silver coin to circulate in those countries, and if the other half of the nations in commercial importance were to adopt a single silver standard, and not permit gold coin to circulate in those countries, the world, nevertheless, would have the bimetallic standard of value, and the parity between the metals would be established, because, there would be an equal demand, created upon an equal quantity of metals, which would produce an equal price. You can readily see that though the silver did not circulate in the gold countries, it would be doing service in another part of the world as primary money, and consequently would be relieving the strain upon gold, just as much as if it circulated side by side with the gold, in that gold-standard country.

A great many people believe in bimetallism, but do not believe that the United States can establish it alone at 16 to 1.

Did you ever look into the statistics relative to the wealth, productive power, and commerce of this nation? If you have, I do not see how you can doubt the ability of this Republic to establish bimetallism.

I wish now to discuss the proposition that the United States has the power to establish bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1.

In the discussion of this proposition I wish to examine—

First. As to the relative production of silver and gold.

Second. As to the supply of silver in the world available for coinage.

Third. As to the demands which the United States, as a Government, can make upon silver.

Fourth. As to the power of the people of the United States contrasted with that of the people of the balance of the world.

Fifth. As to the demands for silver which the people of this country must make under free coinage.

Sixth. As to the pivotal position this nation occupies among the gold and silver standard nations of the world.

I. RELATIVE PRODUCTION OF SILVER AND GOLD.

Mr. Speaker, the coinage ratio between silver and gold is fixed at 16 to 1, because that is the proportion, as near as can be ascertained, in which these metals are found in the earth. It is therefore the ratio of nature.

Although the production of one metal will exceed that of the other for a number of years, yet in a long series of years, it will be found, that almost exactly sixteen times as much silver in weight is produced as gold; hence 16 ounces of silver ought to have the same value as 1 ounce of gold.

The total production of silver from 1701 to 1898, inclusive, amounted to 6,555,295,581 ounces. The total production of gold for the same period was 406,367,495 ounces. Divide the silver by the gold, and it will be found that there has been mined in that period of two hundred years for every ounce of gold 16¼ ounces of silver.

Mr. Speaker, it is easier to-day for the United States to establish the parity in value of the metals, at the ratio of 16 to 1, than it has been at any time since the closing of the India mints in 1893.

The gain in production of gold over silver, in recent years, makes it easier now to establish bimetallism, than when the output of silver was greater than gold.

In 1893 the world produced 165,472,621 ounces of silver and 7,618,811 ounces of gold, or twenty-one and seven-tenths times as many ounces of silver as gold. The tendency of such a production was, therefore, to make it more difficult to establish the parity in value of 16 ounces of silver to 1 of gold.

The gold-standard advocates at that time claimed we could never establish bimetallism, because the relative production of silver was much greater than gold. In 1898 there was produced only 11.9 ounces of silver to each ounce of gold. In 1899, according to the preliminary estimate of the Director of the Mint, the world produced 165,295,000 ounces of silver and 15,239,477 ounces of gold, or only ten and eight-tenths times as much silver as gold. The tendency of such production, according to the principle of relative supply, is unquestionably to make it much easier to establish the parity of these metals at 16 to 1, than when the production existed as in 1893.

II. SUPPLY OF SILVER IN THE WORLD AVAILABLE FOR COINAGE.

Mr. Speaker, in order to show what great influence a powerful nation can exert, in establishing the equal value of the metals at the ratio of 16 to 1, an important fact to be borne in mind is that there is now, and always has been, a shortage in the precious metals. This is demonstrated by the fact, that governments, either through their treasury departments, or their banking institutions, have been compelled, by reason of the lack of gold and silver currency, and consequently of fully covered paper money, to issue a substitute therefor, in the form of uncovered paper currency, called credit money. No nation would undertake the issuing of money based upon the general credit of the government, or permit banking institutions to issue such money, if there were not an imperative necessity for a greater circulating medium. The necessity for that greater circulating medium is admitted in this bill, as it authorizes a large increase in bank currency.

Consequently, the total amount of such uncovered or credit money in the world, indicates the existing shortage of metallic money. We know that there is in existence in the world at the present time, according to the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, $2,836,300,000 of such uncovered or credit money. With such an enormous shortage in the precious metals, you can readily see, that a powerful nation would have much greater influence in establishing their parity of value, than if there was an abundance or an oversupply of the same.

It is conceded on all sides, that if the United States can make a greater demand upon silver, than there is silver available for coinage in the world, the parity of value between the metals will be established. In other words, if we can make a greater demand at the mint rate than there is silver to supply that demand, then the mint rate will be established. The question, then, must be determined by the greatness of the demand which the United States can create for that metal. Let us, then, analyze that power.

The gold-standard men tell us that if a law is passed opening our mints to the free coinage of silver, immediately gold will go to a premium, and that if it goes to a premium of even 1 per cent, under the Gresham law it will leave the country. I do not believe that any such thing will occur, for the reason that speculation will foresee the enormous demand that this Government can make upon silver, and therefore gold will not go to a premium. But I want to assume, for the purpose of this argument, that gold will leave the country upon the enactment of a free-coinage law, because by such supposition we can more clearly estimate the enormous demands this Government can make upon silver, and the consequent increase in the value of silver, and more clearly estimate the increase of the supply of gold to gold-standard countries, and the consequent decrease in the value of gold. If we are to test the strength of this Government as to these demands, we must assume the conditions for the making of the same.

Mr. Speaker, it is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, in his statement of March 1, 1900, that there exists in the United States $1,025,825,162 of gold coin—an enormous amount. What effect would the withdrawal of that gold coin from the United States produce? There would be instantly created thereby a demand for $1,025,000,000 of silver coin or silver certificates to take its place. From where would the supply of silver come to satisfy such an enormous demand? You must remember, what is conceded, that if the demand which the Government can make is greater than the supply, it will establish the parity of the metals in value.

There are but four sources from which it is possible that any silver can come.

1. The first source is from silver bullion.

We know that there is no large quantity of silver bullion in existence in the world. The reason we know it is that no man can point to where any considerable quantity is located. We know to the fraction of a dollar the quantity of gold coin and silver coin, that are in all the banks in the world, and also of the gold bullion that exists in the form of bars; and if there were any considerable amount of silver bullion in the shape of bars, it could not be concealed. The sharp eyes of the reporters of the gold-standard newspapers would soon bring it to light as a great sensation.

The challenge has been made in the United States Senate, time and again, to show where there is more than $25,000,000 of silver bullion in existence in the world, outside of the United States Treasury, and no gold-standard man has ever attempted to point out where even such a quantity of silver bullion exists.

The reason there is no great quantity of silver bullion in existence, is because it has not been profitable to keep silver in the form of bullion. Silver has been going down in price year after year ever since 1873, and consequently the man who has attempted to hoard or store silver bullion has lost not only by the lower price of silver itself, but also the interest on the amount he invested in the bullion. The truth is that as soon as silver bullion leaves the smelter, it goes almost immediately into subsidiary coinage and into the arts. Therefore, we could not expect this predicted supply of silver to come from silver bullion now in existence. In fact, we could not expect more than $25,000,000 to come from such a source, and that of course is a mere "drop in the bucket" compared to the enormous demand for $1,025,000,000, which would be created by the displacement of gold.

2. The second source from which it is said we must expect a large supply of silver is from the arts. But the man who makes such a statement ignores one fact, which will absolutely prevent any silver coming from the arts. He ignores the fact, that the cost of skilled workmanship upon the silver articles, adds such value to the articles, as makes them worth more than the coinage value of the silver contained therein. It must be remembered that the cost of workmanship in the proportioning of the metals, in the molding, the polishing, the gilding, the carving, and other ornamentation of the article, must be very great, and the man would be an idiot who would coin into dollars, something that is worth more in the shape of a work of art. As man is guided by self-interest, it seems clear that not any of this pretended supply of silver would come from the arts. Not even any considerable part of the worn silver articles would be coined, because of the sentimental associations connected therewith.

3. The third source from which it is said we will have the flood of silver is from the countries of Europe. There is a great quantity of silver in the form of coins existing in Europe. It is said that they are of the value in our money of $1,500,000,000, but the man who says that these coins will come to this country, in the event that we open our mints to the free coinage of silver, is either ignorant of or ignores one important fact—that is, that the coins of Europe are in circulation upon a gold valuation, just like our silver dollars in this country are now in circulation upon a gold valuation. What would you think of the man, who would take a United States silver dollar to our mint as soon as it was opened to free coinage, and have it coined into another dollar? The dollar he has now is upon a gold valuation, and by minting it again he could not make it any more valuable. So the holder of European coins that are circulating upon a gold valuation could gain nothing by having them stamped at our mints. In fact, he would lose enormously by the transaction.

The ratio at which coins are in circulation in Europe, is 15½ to 1, which makes the coinage value of silver in Europe $1.33 an ounce, whereas in this country the ratio is 16 to 1, which makes the coinage value of silver $1.29 an ounce. The man holding European coins would lose not only the freight and insurance in bringing those coins to this country, but also would lose 4 cents on each ounce of silver coins that he brings. Those Europeans may not be so intelligent and bright as are the Americans, but they know enough not to lose 4 cents on each ounce of coins they import to us. Thus it is clear that silver coins in circulation in Europe would not be brought to our mints.

4. The fourth source from which they say we must expect a flood of silver is from the silver-standard countries. They are China, Mexico, Siam, Straits Settlements, Central and some South American States, Persia, Tripoli, Spain, Japan, and India, constituting at least one-fourth of the nations of the world in commercial importance. Japan has adopted a gold standard, but upon the silver valuation, and is therefore still on a silver basis. India has the gold standard in name, but its circulation is silver. In those countries silver circulates at its commercial value, namely, about 50 cents on the dollar, except in India, where it circulates at the value of about 63 cents on the dollar. Consequently at first thought, one might believe that silver would come from those countries to our mints. In order to determine whether any silver would come from those nations, it is important that their condition and need of a circulating medium should be understood.

CONDITION OF GOLD AND SILVER COUNTRIES UPON CLOSING OF THE INDIA MINTS.

Mr. Speaker, if I knew but one fact—namely, the condition of gold and silver standard countries of the world for the five years following the panic of 1893—I would know that the cause of the depression in the United States for that period was due to the gold standard; that it was due to the greatly increased demands made upon gold in 1892 and 1893; by the closing of the India mints to the free coinage of silver and the attempt to establish the gold standard in that country; by the large purchases of gold for the war chest of Russia; by the effort of Austria to resume specie payments in gold, and by the offer of our Government to redeem in gold all the Treasury notes issued in payment of silver bullion under the Sherman Act. Every gold-standard country in the world, whether situate on this continent or the other, whether in the Northern Hemisphere or the Southern Hemisphere, upon the closing of the India mints was in the throes of a financial panic, having the same trend of falling prices that prevailed in this country, and that fact existed irrespective as to whether in those countries there was a high tariff or a low tariff.

On the other hand, every silver-standard country in the world, whether situated upon this side of the waters or the other, whether north or south of the equator, and whether it has a high or a low tariff, is to-day, and has been for the past seven years, compared to its former condition, enjoying a marvelous degree of prosperity.

By this statement I am not saying that the Mexican is equal to the American, and I must say that the man who uses the statement "Do you want to Mexicanize America?" does not know the meaning or import of an argument. We could with equal propriety say, "Do you want to Turkeyize America?" for Turkey has the gold standard, and I am willing to contrast the civilization of Mexico at any time with that of Turkey; and I am willing, further, to contrast the wages paid in Mexico with not only those paid in Turkey, but also those paid in any European nation. I might further say, "Do you want to Egyptianize America?"—for Egypt has the gold standard. "Do you want the civilization of the Portuguese?"—for they have the gold standard.

The truth is there are many things that determine the civilization of a nation, the most important of any being climate; and I apprehend that there is no danger of bringing the climate of Mexico to the United States. But these silver-standard nations, compared to their former condition of seven years past, are marvelously advanced. In the last seven years the exports of Mexico have increased more than 100 per cent. The number of manufactures in Japan and Mexico have more than trebled, and the railroad building in every silver-standard country has been increasing enormously.

SILVER-STANDARD COUNTRIES NEED MORE MONEY.

These silver-standard countries, by reason of the increase in their commerce and manufactures, are in need more and more of a greater circulating medium, and consequently, it becomes pertinent to inquire, whether nations having such need for increase of money can easily yield up any quantity of silver they have now, for the purpose of bringing it to our mints for coinage into American dollars.

When we look into the monetary statistics of those countries, we are struck with the fact, that they have entirely too small a circulating medium in silver and gold for their own use, to be able to part with any of their money. Mexico has a circulating medium of but $9.12 per capita, Japan but $1.75 per capita, China but $1.96 per capita, India but $2.07 per capita, the Central American states but $3.65, and the South American states but $2.67 per capita in silver and gold, while we in the United States have a total circulation, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, of $26 per capita, of which over $21 are in gold and silver, and France has a circulating medium of over $36 for each inhabitant. Is it possible that those silver-standard countries, with a shortage of circulating medium now, would be willing to part with that circulating medium, in order to flood the United States with silver? Why, if Mexico should send all of her silver here, it would be but a bagatelle. The total circulating medium of Mexico in 1898 was but $103,000,000, and that is only about one-tenth part of the demand caused by the withdrawal of the $1,025,000,000 of gold.

Mr. Speaker, some people talk of this flood of silver as if it would be disastrous to the nation should it occur. No nation was ever injured by its people having an abundance of the precious metals, and instead of being a detriment, it would produce the greatest era of prosperity in the history of this country. Some people think that as soon as a foreigner brought silver to the United States mint and had it coined, there would be some American with gold chasing him, in order to get him to exchange the silver for a gold dollar. I apprehend that the American people are intelligent, and that they are not going to exchange a gold for a silver dollar, unless it is to their advantage to do so. When a foreigner brings his silver to our mints and has it coined into dollars, what is he going to do with his money?

You know that a foreign coin will not circulate in this country; neither will a United States silver dollar circulate in a foreign country; consequently it will do him no good to take the silver dollars back to his own country. The only thing that he can do with them is to buy something that we have for sale, and we are not going to sell him any more of our products, than we think his silver dollar is worth. I am willing to put the shrewdness of the Yankee against that of any other people in the world. Consequently, this flood of silver, which is held up as such a great "bogy man," even if possible, would turn out to be one of the greatest blessings that could possibly happen to this country.

So it seems to me to be clear that these silver-standard countries, in view of the small circulating medium they now have, and of the immense upward impetus in their commerce and manufacturing industries, could not part with any considerable amount of their circulating medium to dump into the United States, and therefore I do not think we could have any flood of silver. The supply of silver in each nation is no more than its commerce requires, and hence there is no great amount in the world available for coinage.

III. DEMANDS WHICH THE GOVERNMENT CAN MAKE FOR SILVER.

But suppose these silver-standard countries could take from their own circulating mediums, the enormous sum of $1,025,000,000, bring it to the United States, and thus supply the demand caused by the withdrawal of gold! The man who thinks that the powers of the United States are exhausted does not know the strength of this Government.

There are in existence $346,681,016 of credit money, called United States notes, or greenbacks, the existence of every dollar of which is due to the fact that we have not enough circulating medium without those notes. Every dollar of those notes could be retired by the substitution of the silver dollar or the silver certificate, and thus there would be a demand which the Government could create for $346,000,000 more of silver.

I am free to say that if the law providing for the free coinage of silver were passed to-day, under President McKinley's Administration, with the Secretary of the Treasury discriminating against silver as he has in the past, this Government could not establish the parity of the metals. But under an Administration, that would use the powers of the Government for the purpose of establishing the parity of the metals, I have no doubt of the ability of this nation to establish that parity.

But these are not all the powers of our Government. There are in existence $249,516,228 of national-bank notes. The only excuse for their existence, is the fact, that they are absolutely needed as a circulating medium. Every dollar of that credit money could be retired, and silver or silver certificates substituted in its place. Thus there can be created by this Government, a demand for the enormous sum of $1,622,022,406 of silver, all at once if desired, without increasing the circulating medium one dollar. It seem to me, in view of that great demand, there can be no reasonable doubt of the ability of this Government to establish the parity of the metals.

We have had an experience which should teach everyone the power of this nation. In 1890 Congress passed the Sherman Act, which provided for the purchase of only 4,500,000 ounces of silver per month. Under a demand for simply that amount of silver that metal rose in price higher and higher until it reached $1.21¼ per ounce; within 8 points of par, not only at the mint in Philadelphia and on the exchange at New York, but in London, in Calcutta, and in every other market in the world. If such a small demand raised the price of silver to such a height under a limited coinage act, it seems to me clear that the instantaneous demand for $1,622,022,408, or 300 times as much, would certainly establish the parity of the metals. If we should increase our circulating medium to correspond with that of France, namely, $36 per capita, we would make a demand for $770,000,000 more of silver, or a total demand for $2,390,000,000 of silver. That amount is more than three times as much as there is silver in the world that could possibly come to our mints.

IV. POWER OF THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES CONTRASTED WITH THAT OF THE PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.

Mr. Speaker, great as the Government is, there is something still greater, and that is the people of the United States. We are the greatest people on earth. We are the greatest producers and consumers on the face of the globe. Our 77,000,000 people are equal to 700,000,000 of the average of the balance of the world.

It is strange, but nevertheless true, that many Americans do not appreciate the great power and wealth of this country, and it is remarkable that in order to prove our high position among the nations we have to quote from foreign authorities.

Mr. Mulhall, an eminent statistician of England, a few years ago, in an article in the North American Review, analyzed the effective force and power of this country, and made the startling statement, that in power and effective force the United States was nearly equal to Great Britain, France, and Germany combined.

He said:

If we take a survey of mankind in ancient or modern times as regards the physical, mechanical, and intellectual forces of nations, we find nothing to compare with the United States.

Professor Francois, a French economist, in an article in an economic paper of Paris, about five years ago, stated that the wealth and power of the United States was one-fourth of that of the world; that the wealth in 1890 was $62,600,000,000, while that of the entire world was $291,580,000,000. The estimate of the wealth of this country for 1900 is $87,000,000,000, which is between one-third and one-half of that of the balance of all the nations.

There is no nation which can compare with ours. It is only by comparison with groups of nations, or with the balance of the world, that the greatness of these United States is shown.

Mr. Speaker, a comparison of the statistics concerning the commercial, agricultural, mining, and manufacturing industries of this country will conclusively show, that in commercial importance, we are between one-fourth and one-third of the entire world, or between one-third and one-half of the balance of the world.

No better test can be found, as to the amount of commerce done by a nation, than the number of tons of freight carried by its railroads. The foreign trade of every nation, consisting only of its surplus products, must be small compared to the business of the nation itself. It is said that one railroad in the United States—the Pennsylvania—carries more freight than that which constitutes all our foreign trade.

The total railroad mileage of the United States is nearly half as much as that of the entire world, there being 184,428 miles of railroad, exclusive of side trackage, in the United States, as against 443,136 miles for the entire world, or 258,708 miles for the balance of the world.

The value of railroads in the United States in 1897 was $11,775,000,000, while that of the balance of the world was $23,755,000,000.

The tons of freight carried by the railroads of the United States are about one-half of those carried by the railroads of the world. According to the Mulhall-Harper tables, the United States carried in 1897 742,000,000 tons of freight, as against 1,733,000,000 tons carried by the world, or 991,000,000 tons carried by the balance of the world. The number of tons carried by the United States in 1898 was 879,006,307. The fairest test is the freight carried per 100 miles. The average haul in the rest of the world is less than 100 miles. The tons of freight carried 100 miles in the United States in 1899 was 1,236,672,571. These figures present the startling fact that the United States carries more freight than all the rest of the world.

The expenditures of the railroads of the United States are $775,000,000, against $1,535,000,000 for the entire world, or $760,000,000 for the balance of the world. Our expenses for transporting freight were more than that of the rest of the world.

The receipts of the railroads of the United States are $1,025,000,000, as against the total receipts for the world of $2,515,000,000.

The steam power of the United States, according to Mr. Mulhall, is nearly one-third of that of the entire world, or between one-third and one-half of that of the balance of the world, being 18,030,000 horsepower, as against 66,100,000 horsepower for all the world.

The carrying power of vessels used in lake and river traffic in 1890 in the United States was 9,800,000 tons, which was one-fifth of the carrying power of the world on the high seas. Even on the high seas in 1896 we carried 19.8 per cent of all the world's commerce in tonnage—that is, 4,770,000 tons out of 24,090,000 tons for the world—and our carrying power that year on the high seas was 11,850,000 tons out of 63,200,000 tons for the world. The navigable waterways and canals of this country are 51,820 miles, while those of the earth are 170,550 miles. Add the tons of freight carried on ocean, lakes, canals, and rivers to those carried by railroads, and it will show that the United States transports by water and rail, nearly as many tons as are carried by the rest of the world.

The United States in 1899 produced 10,677,000 bales of cotton, of 494 pounds each, out of a total production of the world of 12,343,000 bales, or five-sixth of the world's cotton.

This nation in 1899 consumed 3,553,000 bales of cotton, of 500 pounds each, of the entire consumption of the world of 13,932,000 bales, or about one-fourth.

The production of corn in the United States is more than four-fifths of that of the whole world, being in 1899 2,200,000,000 bushels, as against 2,611,000,000 for the world, or four times as much as that produced by the rest of the world.

The production of wheat in this country is between one fourth and one-fifth of that of the entire world, being in 1899 675,149,000 bushels as against 2,921,045,000 for all the world, and in 1899 547,304,000 as against 2,725,407,000 for all nations.

The total production of grain in the United States in 1899 was half as much as that of the rest of the world, being 3,640,826,000 bushels, while that of the entire world was 11,003,227,000 bushels, or 7,362,401,000 bushels for the balance of the world.

According to the recent edition of Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics we have 16,600,000 horses out of 64,700,000 in the world; 46,500,000 cattle out of 200,000,000 in the world; 40,600,000 hogs out of 97,000,000 in the world; milch cows, 15,940,000 out of 62,100,000 for the world.

According to Mr. Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics our product is as follows:

	Quantity.	World's product.
Fish ..... tons..	880,000	3,070,000
Beef ..... do...	2,190,000	7,205,000
Pork ..... do...	2,170,000	4,479,000
Butter and cheese ..... do...	610,000	2,600,000
Oysters ..... number..	3,500,000,000	4,429,000,000
Hay ..... tons..	42,000,000	159,000,000
Straw ..... do...	60,000,000	127,000,000
Tallow ..... do...	880,000	2,617,000
Tobacco ..... do...	180,000	780,000
Quicksilver ..... flasks..	36,104	105,644
Paper ..... tons..	1,200,000	2,600,000

Mr. Mulhall says:

It appears that the United States produce one-fourth of the food of Christendom.

The hardware manufactures of the United States in 1896 were of the value of $1,145,000,000, as against $3,020,000,000 for the entire world.

Nearly one-third of the pig iron of the world is produced by this nation, in 1898 being 11,962,000 tons out of a total production of 36,570,000 tons for the entire world. Our production in 1899 was 13,620,703 tons.

We produce more than one-third of the total steel in the world, in 1898 being 8,932,857 tons, out of the world's production of 24,060,500 tons.

The copper product of the United States is more than half of that of the entire world, being 239,241 tons in 1898, against 434,329 tons for the world, or over 44,000 tons more than all the rest of the world.

The production of coal in the United States for the year 1899 was 230,888,973 tons, while that of the entire world was about 680,000,000 tons, more than one-half as much as that of the balance of the globe.

The coal fields of the United States comprise nearly half of those of the world, being 194,000 square miles, as against 471,800 square miles.

We produced 103,514 tons of zinc in 1898, while all the world produced 467,749 tons.

We produce 170,000 tons of lead, while the world produces 680,000 tons.

We produce more than half of all the petroleum of the world, being in 1898, 2,543,859,402 gallons, while that of all the world was about 5,000,000,000 gallons.

The forest products of this nation are nearly one-third that of the balance of the world, being annually 9,300,000,000 cubic feet of lumber, against 32,460,000,000 for the world.

Our forest lands are 699,500,000 acres, while those of all the earth are 1,308,000,000 acres.

The meat supply of the world for 1896 was 15,200,000 tons, of which the United States contributed 4,500,000 tons, or nearly one-third.

The United States produces about one-fourth of the gold of the world, the product in 1898 being $64,463,000, as against $287,428,600 for the world.

The silver production of this country is more than one-third of that of the entire world, being in 1898 $70,334,000, coinage value, as against $213,715,400, coinage value, for the world.

Our total product of minerals for 1898 was $797,820,720.

The amount of life insurance in force in this country is $14,125,548,072, as against $5,923,168,549 for the balance of the world.

The length of the world's telegraph system in 1899 was 4,900,921 miles, of which there was 2,516,548 miles in America.

The number of newspapers in the United States in 1899 was 22,056, as against 50,000 for the entire world.

The number of copies of monthly publications in the United States in 1890 was 230,000,000, while that of the world was 813,000,000.

The number of post-offices in the United States in 1895 were 71,258, while there were 225,354 in the world. There are now 75,000 in this country.

The number of letters, postal cards, papers, book packets, etc., sent through the mail annually is about 11,688,000,000 in the United States, as against 27,010,000,000 in the entire world. The people of the United States send nearly half as much mail matter as all of the world.

The number of telephones in the United States is 900,000, as against 1,402,100 in the entire world.

Considerable investigation has been made in recent years, as to the mechanical force that a man is capable of exerting, and of the comparative energy of the men of each nation. The adult laborer, it is estimated, each day expends in energy sufficient strength to lift 300 tons 1 foot. That power of a man is recognized as the unit, and is called a "foot-ton."

It is calculated that the power of a horse is ten times that of a man. If everything were done by hand, the mechanical power of nations, compared to each other, would be nearly in the proportion of their population. But on account of the forces that Americans have produced by their inventive genius, the power that we exert is almost incomprehensible.

Mr. Mulhall has applied this foot-ton principle in ascertaining the comparative strength of nations. He estimates that in 1895 the working energy of the United States was 129,306,000,000 foot-tons daily, or 1,940 foot-tons daily per capita. In other words, the forces used in this nation for each individual are 1,940 times as much as could be exerted by a man without the aid of tools or machinery. That daily force of the United States is sufficient to lift 600,000 pounds 24,489,772 miles each day, or, eliminating the resistance of the air, sufficient to send that weight around the world nearly 1,000 times each day.

When we compare the mechanical force of this nation with that of the rest of the world, it shows that in strength we are nearly equal to one-half the balance of the world. That force is—

	Foot-tons daily.
In the United States	129,306,000,000
In Great Britain	56,100,000,000
In Germany	45,580,000,000
In France	34,580,000,000
In Austria	22,510,000,000
In Italy	11,390,000,000
In Spain	10,640,000,000
In the balance of the world about	120,000,000,000
Total for the world	430,106,000,000

Mr. Speaker, great as these figures may show our country to be, our manufacturing industries are still greater.

The products of manufactories in the United States, according to Mr. Mulhall, are one-third as much as those of the balance of the world, being annually $9,900,000,000, while those of the entire world are $28,550,000,000.

Ex-Speaker Reed, in a speech before this body on February 1, 1894, referring to the manufacturing interests of this country, said:

I do not vouch, nor can anyone vouch for these figures, but the proportion of one-third to two-thirds nobody can forcibly dispute. We produce one-third and the rest of the world, England included, two-thirds. The population of the world is 1,500,000,000, of which we have 70,000,000, which leaves 1,430,000,000 for the rest of mankind. We use all our manufactures or the equivalent of them. Hence we are equal to one-half the whole globe outside of ourselves, England included, and compared as a market with the rest of the world our population is equal to 700,000,000.

With such an array of facts and figures, who can doubt that this nation, in commerce, mining, manufactures, and agriculture, is equal to at least one-fourth if not one-third of all the nations of the world? With such a power and such a force, is it possible that we are too weak to establish a financial policy of our own?

V. DEMANDS FOR SILVER WHICH THE PEOPLE OF THIS COUNTRY MUST MAKE UNDER FREE COINAGE.

Mr. Speaker, it has been estimated that there are between $20,000,000,000 and $30,000,000,000 of long-time indebtedness, consisting of national, State, county, city, and corporation bonds, and individual promissory notes, owed in this nation. Over one-half of this is payable in lawful money of the United States.

Under free coinage, silver dollars become legal tender for the payment of all that ten or fifteen billions of debt. It is a principle recognized in all political economies, that if one dollar is cheaper than another, all the obligations payable in lawful money will be paid in the cheaper dollar. Thus if silver should ever go to a discount compared to gold, there would be that enormous demand created for silver by the debtors, who owe the $10,000,000,000 or the $15,000,000,000. With such an enormous demand upon the limited quantity of silver available for coinage, is it possible that anyone would part with silver at an appreciable discount? You must remember, that this silver dollar is not only a legal tender for the discharge of State, county, and city taxes, which aggregate about $500,000,000 a year; it is a legal tender for the payment of all import duties, internal-revenue duties, and postage dues of the National Government, and you must remember that the National Government raises by those duties the enormous sum of $500,000,000 a year.

The premiums contracted to be paid in lawful money each year in the United States upon life-insurance policies are $339,280,913, and upon fire-insurance policies are $161,730,957.

The total amount of life insurance in force in the United States on January 1, 1899, all of which was payable in lawful money, was $14,125,548,072.

The total amount of fire insurance in force in the United States on January 1, 1898, was $16,500,000,000, all payable in lawful money.

According to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency for the year 1899, the amount of deposits, payable in lawful money, in our—

Savings banks is	$2,182,006,424
National banks is	2,522,157,509
State banks and private banks is	1,228,995,324
Loan and trust companies is	835,499,034
Total deposits in all banks, June 30, 1899	6,768,658,331

The amount of loans, consisting mostly of thirty, sixty, and ninety day paper, all of which is payable in lawful money, in favor of our—

Savings banks is	$1,099,593,589
National banks is	2,567,954,980
State banks and private banks is	902,311,088
Loan and trust companies is	599,031,033
Total short-time paper outstanding on June 30, 1899	5,167,895,610

The total amount payable on shares in building associations is $450,067,594. The amounts agreed to be paid in lawful money, at periods of from one to five years, on contracts for construction of buildings, railroads, ships, canals, and other improvements in the United States must aggregate several billions of dollars.

The desire on the part of all the people and corporations, owing these enormous amounts, to pay in the cheaper money would make such a tremendous demand upon silver, should it go to a discount of even 1 per cent, as to immediately restore its parity with gold. No one would part with silver dollars or silver certificates at a discount, when he could utilize them at par for so many purposes, and to such enormous extent.

WHY MEXICO DOES NOT ESTABLISH PARITY OF METALS.

Our gold friends tell us that the mint is open to the free coinage of silver in Mexico, and ask, Why does not that establish the parity of the metals? They talk of Mexico as if it were a gigantic power. Do you know that the commerce of Mexico is not equal to that of the State of Illinois; and would you expect the State of Illinois, unaided by the rest of the States in the Union, to establish the parity of the metals? The reason Mexico does not establish the parity of the metals, is because it is not sufficiently powerful in commerce to do so; but when you compare Mexico with the United States, you compare a pigmy to a giant. You must remember that this great nation is composed of forty-five great States, and that an act of Congress is simply an international agreement in itself, among those forty-five great States.

VI. THE PIVOTAL POSITION THIS NATION OCCUPIES AMONG THE GOLD AND SILVER STANDARD COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD.

Mr. Speaker, in determining what a powerful effect such a nation as the United States would have in establishing the parity of the metals, you must take into consideration the pivotal position, which it occupies as to the monetary systems of the world. The silver-standard nations, which make their demands upon silver alone for currency, constitute one-fourth of the nations of the world in commercial importance. The world is then divided into nations, one-fourth of which are upon the silver standard, and three-fourths of which are upon the gold standard. This is stating it very strongly in favor of the gold-standard nations, as many are upon an irredeemable paper currency and have the gold standard only in name, and most of them have large quantities of silver, which they still treat as basic money, and thereby relieve the strain on gold. The United States alone, as I have stated, constitutes in wealth, commerce, and power at least one-fourth of the world.

Let that power of the United States be transferred from gold to silver, and you immediately have the world divided into equal parts, one half the nations in commercial importance making their demands upon silver, and the other half in commercial importance making their demands upon gold; and thus we have an equal demand upon equal metals, which, according to the principle of supply and demand, must make an equal price.

It is a fact, which no one denies, that there is now going on in the Orient, where silver is the only money used, a great development in commerce. It is bound to multiply in the near future, as the era of railroad building there is at hand. The nations of the world are in a desperate struggle among themselves to capture that trade. The small circulating medium in each of those eastern countries is bound to expand as trade enlarges, and within the next five years it is likely that the demands for silver from those countries will be enormous.

A FREE-COINAGE LAW WOULD MAKE CAPITALISTS HELP ELEVATE THE VALUE OF SILVER.

It must be borne in mind also, in determining what great influence a powerful nation like the United States will have in establishing the parity of the metals, that although the people of the United States are nearly equally divided upon the question of opening our mints to the free coinage of silver, 7,000,000 having voted for President McKinley, and 6,500,000 having voted for Mr. Bryan, the minute that a free coinage act is passed, all of this difference of opinion will vanish, and we will have a united nation and a united people, using all their powers to establish the equal value of the metals.

Why is this true? Because all of the capitalists in the country have obligations that are payable in lawful money, the United States bonds themselves held by national banks being payable in coin; and when silver under free coinage becomes lawful money, with full legal-tender powers to discharge those obligations, immediately it becomes the interest of those capitalists and banks to elevate the price of silver, to make the purchasing power of the silver dollar just as great as they now desire the purchasing power of the gold dollar to become, and hence the minute a free-coinage law is passed that minute you will have all the power of Wall street exercised to its utmost to elevate the price of silver. It has been the history of depreciated currencies, that no class of people have exercised such a wonderful influence and power in elevating such depressed currencies to par with coin, as have the capitalistic class, and therefore the wealth and power of the entire nation would never permit silver to go to a discount.

I therefore conclude that on account of the present great relative production of gold to silver; on account of the fact that there is now a shortage in the precious metals to the enormous extent of $2,800,000,000; on account of the limited quantity of silver in the world that could be brought to our mints; on account of the enormous demand which the Government and the people of this nation can make upon the silver of the world; on account of the pivotal position in the world, which the United States in commerce holds, being able, by throwing its influence from the gold to the silver side of this controversy, to equally divide the nations in commercial importance in their demands upon the precious metals, thus making an equal demand upon equal quantities of metal, and thereby producing an equal price, it seems to me that the United States could as certainly produce an equality in value of the metals, as it is possible to foretell any future event.

It must be remembered that when you elevate silver to the value of gold, you do not have to elevate the silver that is contained in our own currency, as that is already upon a gold valuation. You do not have to elevate the great mass of silver coins in Europe, because they are upon a gold valuation. You do not have to elevate the silver in the arts, because that silver, by reason of the cost of workmanship, is now worth more than the coinage value of silver. The only silver in the world that must be elevated in price is simply the quantity of silver in the silver-standard countries, which those nations will assist in elevating by their own increasing demands upon it as primary money.

It seems to me, therefore, conclusive, Mr. Speaker, that my proposition is proven, namely, that the United States, by reason of its great power, by reason of its pivotal position among the nations of the earth, could establish bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1.

COULD BIMETALLISM BE MAINTAINED?

Mr. Speaker, it is also contended by our opponents that bimetallism could not be maintained, because in a year or two after silver reached $1.29 an ounce, its production would be so great as to overcome the demands of this nation. That reasoning, as to increase of production, would be true as to wheat, corn, or other products where the amount that can be raised is unlimited, but it does not apply to silver.

The variation between the amount of silver produced, when its price is high and low, is very small. Why? Because the greater portion of silver is extracted from ore that contains both gold and silver. When more than half of the value of the ore is from the gold, it is called a gold mine, with silver as a by-product, and vice versa. These ores will be mined, even if silver should go to 10 cents an ounce, because they would be worked for the gold therein; and if silver were $1.29 an ounce, those mines could not produce very much more. It must be remembered that under bimetallism the purchasing power of gold and silver is correlative. As the value of silver increases, the purchasing power of gold declines; hence the net value of the ore remains about the same.

It is the low-grade mines, which yield the greater part of both gold and silver, because they are so numerous, and it takes generations to exhaust them. It is true there are some mines that produce silver without any gold, but they are very few compared to the number that contain both gold and silver. They are generally very rich and easily exhausted. Their product bears no greater relation to the total silver produced, than the free gold contained in placer claims, bears to the total production of gold. Hence there is no danger that in the long run there will be any great variation between the quantity of silver and gold produced.

Eliminating the amount that goes into the arts and is hoarded or lost in the Orient, the annual production of neither gold nor silver has ever exceeded 3 per cent of the world's stock of the same, and it is not likely that such proportion will ever be exceeded.

I therefore conclude that the establishment and maintenance of bimetallism by the United States is practical; that it is a much safer system of finance than the upbuilding of credits on the narrower, varying base of gold alone, and that it would produce an era of permanent prosperity unequaled in the history of the world. [Applause.]

Trusts.

I submit that every trust engaged in interstate commerce is either the outgrowth of some Congressional legislation, or of Federal permission or toleration or privilege in cases where Congress has failed to enact, under existing constitutional provisions, prohibitory legislation.

HON. HENRY D. CLAYTON,

OF ALABAMA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 31, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama said:

Mr. SPEAKER: In the closing hours of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress an unusual and remarkable spectacle is presented to the country by the Republican majority of this House. Several days ago a resolution was passed here fixing the 6th day of June as the time for adjournment, and now great haste is made by our Republican friends to pass some sort of anti-trust legislation. For three years the Republican party has been in possession of the executive branch of the Government and of both Houses of Congress. The Republican party has been able by virtue of this fact to enact any legislation that agreed with the wishes of its leaders. Now, the country will naturally inquire, Why has so important a matter as legislation looking to the suppression or destruction of criminal combines, oppressive and iniquitous trusts, been so long delayed?

The purpose of this proposed amendment of the Constitution which we now have before us, and the bill for the amendment of the existing anti-trust law which will come up, under the rule adopted, immediately after the disposition of this resolution, is transparent. Everybody sees through the movement. No one is deceived, and many of our Republican friends can not refrain from laughing at the amusing side of the political game they are now playing. A Presidential election is well-nigh at hand. The country is arraigning the dominant party for neglect of duty, in that it has failed to enact legislation against monopolies and trusts. The Republicans have not met the popular demand on this great question, but at this late hour have proposed these two measures, which were never designed to become laws.

Nobody believes that this resolution, or the bill to which I have adverted, will pass at this session. Your object is to go before the country in the coming campaign and say, "We made an effort to have the Constitution amended," and if this resolution should fail you will say that the Democrats are responsible for Republican failure; and if one or both measures should pass here, they will lodge in the Senate, and then you intend to say that we have one or both of these measures pending in the Senate to be acted on favorably at the next session. I believe, and I think all candid men believe, that neither one of these measures will pass the Senate—certainly that this amendment to the Constitution will never be submitted to the States.

There is another unusual feature in the present proceedings of the House. The Committee on Rules reported one rule bringing before the House for consideration both of these measures. But it is useless to criticise so absolute and, I may say, so tyrannical a committee. It can and does, by direction of the Speaker, control proceedings of the House.

It is affirmed and denied that trusts have increased prices. If they do increase prices there can be no question about the right and duty of the Government to protect the people against them. The proposition that they do not increase prices rests entirely upon assertion, while the contrary position is sustained by all of the facts.

It might be said that any increase of price during the years 1897 and 1898 was due to the war with Spain, but whatever increase has been caused by that war must have been created prior to the year 1899. The following are the fluctuations of leading products controlled by trusts during the year 1899 as reported by the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, a strictly nonpolitical paper:

The linseed oil trust raised the price from 41 cents on January 7 to 50 cents on December 30.

The menhaden trust raised the price on menhaden oil from 23 cents on January 7 to 27½ cents on December 30.

The Standard Oil Company raised the price on petroleum from $7.50 on January 7 to $9.90 on December 30.

The sugar trust raised the price on granulated sugar from 4.94 cents on January 7 to 5½ cents on December 30.

The chemical trust raised the price of ipecac from $2.50 per pound on January 7 to $3.65 per pound on December 30. The same trust raised the price of camphor from 33½ cents on January 7 to 51½ cents on December 30. The same trust raised the price of quinine from 21 cents on January 7 to 30 cents on December 30. The same trust raised the price of sal soda from 62½ cents on January 7 to 70 cents on December 30.

The leather trust raised the price of leather from 20 cents on January 7 to 25½ cents on December 30.

The calico trust raised the price of calico from 2⅜ cents on January 7 to 3½ cents on December 30 for print cloths, and from 4 cents to 4½ cents on indigo prints.

The jeans trust raised the price on jean cashmere from 27½ cents on January 7 to 40 cents on December 30.

The jute trust raised the price on jute hemp from 2¾ cents on January 7 to 3⅝ cents on December 30.

The copper trust raised the price of copper from 13½ cents on January 7 to 16½ cents on December 30.

The lead trust raised the price of pig lead from $3.95 on January 7 to $4.65 on December 30.

The tin-plate trust raised the price on tin plate from $3 a box on January 7 to $5.25 on December 30.

The cement trust raised the price of Rosendale from 75 cents on January 6 to 95 cents on December 29. They raised the price during the same period on Portland cement from $1.95 to $2.25.

Dun's Review for January 13, 1900, gives the following increase of prices in some of the lines controlled by the trusts:

The nail trust increased the price of nails from $1.10 on January 4, 1899, to $2.50 on January 3, 1900. The same trust increased the price of wire nails from $1.35 to $3.20 during the same period.

The Structural Iron Company increased the price of structural angles from $1.15 on January 4, 1899, to $2.25 on January 3, 1900.

The coal trust increased the price of anthracite coal from $3.75 on January 4, 1899, to $4.20 on January 3, 1900.

The glass trust increased the price of glass from $2.57 on January 4, 1899, to $2.89 on January 3, 1900.

The rubber trust increased the price of rubber from 94 cents on January 4, 1899, to $1.45 on January 3, 1900.

The prices of boots and shoes, controlled by the leather trust, shows an increase during the year 1899 on men's grain shoes from 97 cents to $1.12; on Creedmore splits, from 95 cents to $1.10; and a like increase on all grades of boots and shoes.

All lines of building material, iron, steel, woolen goods, leather, and other lines controlled by industrial trusts, although showing a great increase in price during the years 1897 and 1898, showed even a greater increase during the year 1899.

The only prices to fall were those of farm products. The Year-Book of the Department of Agriculture for 1899, which has just been issued, shows that the farm products and farm animals in 1899, although vastly increased in quantity since 1890, had fallen off in value to the extent of $706,969,971. This only counts as farm products corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, potatoes, hay, and cotton. The cotton year of 1898, ending September 1, 1899, is used. If the farm products of 1899 had brought the same prices as did the same products in 1890 they would have brought more than they did by the sum of $2,609,437,584.

The farmers raised 1,013,000,000 more bushels of produce in 1899 than they did in 1890, and yet this produce was worth $205,000,000 less than was the smaller crop of 1890. This only calculates the cereals.

The farmers of the United States are paying 33⅓ per cent more for all they consume than they were when the present Administration went into power on March 4, 1897, and have lost during the present Administration nearly $2,000,000,000 by the decline in prices of farm products. In this calculation the statistics of 1897, the first year of the present Administration, are used.

The wheat in the farmers' hands in 1897 was valued at $428,547,121. The wheat in the farmers' hands in 1899 was valued at $319,545,259. The farmers lost $109,000,000 in the value of wheat alone, and yet the yield of wheat was increased.

The value of the cotton crop in 1897 was $319,000,000, and had fallen off $14,000,000 the next year, while the crop of 1899 is not yet calculated.

The average price of wheat in 1897 was 80.8 cents a bushel, while in 1899 it was only 58.4 cents a bushel.

These are the figures given by the Republican Secretary of Agriculture, and it can not be said that they were concocted for a Democratic campaign argument.

All parties admit that trade monopolies, trusts, and combinations in restraint of trade in order to destroy competition or to increase prices ought to be suppressed or destroyed. There may be a difference of opinion as to the remedies to be applied, but those remedies ever since the days of Blackstone have been drastic and in the nature of criminal punishment.

It is impossible to believe that the Republican party is sincere in any effort to suppress these monopolies and combinations which are so oppressive to the people. They never existed under Democratic rule, but were born in this country under the Republican system of internal taxation, and that not being sufficient to give life to enough of them to satisfy the demands of the monopolists the McKinley tariff law was so constructed as to give them a new impetus, and a number of them were formed under the operation of that Republican measure.

The Democrats when in power brought about a revision of the tariff law, and under the Wilson law several of the trusts went out of existence and others were not formed. The Republican party again came into power, again revised the revenue laws under the dictation of the trusts, and within twelve months after the Dingley law was passed more trusts were organized than had ever before existed in the entire history of the United States. That the Republican party was not opposed to these combinations is shown by the fact that more than one-half of their Cabinet officers were publicly charged with being themselves violators of the law against trusts and of being attorneys and directors of these illegal corporations. The leaders of the party have from the first attempted to explain that there are no trusts in the United States, but that all the large aggregations of capital are merely harbingers of prosperity.

The proposed amendment of the Constitution is in the following language:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. All powers conferred by this article shall extend to the several States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all the territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to define, regulate, control, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

The minority of this House have endeavored to amend this resolution in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], referred to in his remarks this morning. And the Democrats will ask that the resolution be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY]; but a Republican Speaker, sustained by a Republican majority here, will not permit the improvement or amendment of the resolution. It is to be offered in its present objectionable form so that Democrats may not be permitted to vote for a proposition to amend the Constitution. There are objections to this resolution in its present form. Such an amendment to the Constitution would deprive the States of rights which they ought not to and will never surrender. Such an amendment is too far-reaching.

It would give Congress the sole right, if it so chose, to define what is a trust, combine, or monopoly, or what is not a trust, combine, or monopoly, and the States could in no wise define differently, however oppressive and criminal might be the combines or monopolies covered or protected by the Congressional definition. It is no answer to say that the several States "may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States," for if Congress should legislate under this proposed amendment it would deprive the States of the right to legislate except "in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States." If the trusts should control Congress, then the States would be shorn of all power. No State could punish its own conspirators who entered into an illegal trade combination against the interests of her own people. If power be conferred upon Congress to declare certain combinations or conspiracies illegal, Congress could likewise declare that certain other combinations or conspiracies were not illegal. In other words, it could license the carrying on of illegal combinations in restraint of trade and oppressive to the public where the States now have power to deal with the combinations and conspirators.

But, Mr. Speaker, if the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] or by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] were adopted, I would vote for the resolution. I do not think the proposed amendment necessary. And I do not believe it possible for it to ever pass Congress, or, if it did pass Congress, that it is possible for it to meet with the favor of the States. I would vote for it because the amendments to it would deprive it of possible harm to the respective States and their people. These amendments would preserve to the States control of domestic conspiracies and intra-state commerce and affairs.

The question of trusts, monopolies, and contracts in restraint of trade is not a new one, and it is only of late years that it has been hedged about by the serious difficulties which now beset the subject upon every hand. The early commentators upon the common law, from Blackstone down, had a well-defined idea of this matter, and classed all such combinations as "crimes against trade."

There are two ways of treating a combination formed for the purpose of preventing competition, or whose operations have the effect of preventing competition, and those ways rest upon entirely different principles. The one is by a civil proceeding invoking the extraordinary remedies of courts of law or equity in order to dissolve such combinations or prevent them from transacting business. Such a proceeding is distinctly a civil one and as such must be supported by the constitutional rules relating to the regulation of commerce.

As long as these combinations are treated as instruments of commerce the right to regulate them must rest upon the right to regulate commerce. But under the common-law rule, which has never been changed by any statute and has never been doubted by any court, these offenses are criminal in their nature and their regulation does not fall under any rule as to the regulation of commerce, but comes strictly within the local right of the States to regulate their own internal police affairs. It is no more necessary for the States to have the right to regulate commerce in order to punish crimes against commerce than it is for them to have the right to issue money in order to punish crimes against the issuance of money. No State has the right to coin money or to issue evidences of indebtedness to circulate as money, and yet every State has the right to punish the crime of counterfeiting or of passing counterfeit money. It has the right whether or not those guilty are citizens of the State or of some other State.

Money is a means of commerce, and indirectly a law regulating the coinage or passing of money is a regulation of commerce. No lawyer will doubt the right of the States to prevent the circulation of counterfeit money, and it would have that right even though the statutes of the United States failed to make it a criminal offense. It has that right independently of the action of Congress and yet not concurrently with Congress. In fact, a criminal offense may constitute two distinct and separate offenses—one under the Federal law and one under the State law—and a conviction for one of these offenses does not constitute a bar to a prosecution for the other offense. The same principle applies to laws passed for the purpose of punishing offenses against trade and commerce. Even though the States have no right to regulate commerce where such legislation affects the subject of interstate commerce, yet they can regulate crimes against trade, even though the instruments of commerce are used as the instruments of such crimes.

This is not a mere offense which is malum prohibitum under the common acceptation of that term. It has been treated as a crime for centuries and in every civilized country. The idea that a man living in the State of New York can commit crime in the State of Pennsylvania through agencies established in that State and render the State of Pennsylvania powerless to prevent or punish crimes within its borders because such crimes are committed by a nonresident through resident agents in connection with commercial transactions involves an absurdity.

The common law to-day, as has always been the case, treats civil contracts involving crime against trade as absolutely void. Can a matter which is not the subject of a contract, because such a contract would be void as against public policy, be considered as a part of the subject of legitimate interstate commerce? Can a contract prohibited by the laws of commerce and made for the purpose of destroying commerce be set up as a defense upon the theory that it is protected by a constitutional provision regulating commerce? That constitutional provision was intended for the upbuilding of commerce and not for a defense upon the part of those who seek to destroy it.

A regulation of commerce is one thing; a protection of the property rights of citizens is quite another thing. This protection of property rights in every phase of the criminal law goes so far as to protect a man against conspiracy, intimidation, and fraud while pursuing any legitimate vocation. It has been recognized by the law writers from the time of Justinian to the present day that the rights of the individual in his occupation are legitimately the subject of state protection against monopolies and combinations formed for the purpose of preventing free competition. And this rule, like any other rule relating to criminal intent, goes so far that the purpose will be presumed from the natural effect.

If the sale of goods, no matter how innocent in themselves the goods may be, has the effect of injuring the free competition in goods of like nature, it is not only the right but the duty of the States to stop such sales. The sale of gunpowder, while not directly in point, is so in its underlying principle. There is nothing harmful to the public about gunpowder in small quantities, but the writers universally recognize the right of States and municipal corporations to regulate the sale of gunpowder and the manner of its handling in order to prevent any possibility of its injuring the property of others. No one has ever claimed that the question of the regulation of commerce had anything to do with this matter. It rests upon an entirely different principle. It rests upon the same principle upon which rests the right of the State to protect its citizens against the results of unlawful monopolies or contracts in restraint of trade.

It does not make any difference where the gunpowder comes from, nor who sells it. The article itself is regulated because it might prove injurious to the property of others. The same is true of the product of a monopoly. If that product were not injurious to the rights of others, then there could be no legitimate reason for controlling the subject at all. If that product is injurious to the rights of others and their property in their business, then the sale can be regulated upon the same principle which underlies the sale of other property likely to be injurious. The gunpowder laws rest upon the theory that the rights of property must be protected; inspection laws rest upon the theory that health must be protected; laws against crimes against trade rest upon the theory that people must be protected in their occupations through which they acquire property and promote wealth. The same principle underlies all trade. There is no question whatever that regulations concerning the sale of gunpowder or other dangerous materials, and regulations concerning inspection are wholly distinct from any regulations of commerce, and laws aimed against crimes against trade rest upon identically the same principle.

If any difference of opinion should exist concerning the jurisdiction of courts under such statutes as to the punishment of offenders, it would be a very easy matter for Congress to set all such doubts at rest. While it is a general rule of law that legislative authority can not be delegated, yet there is an exception to that rule, which is that the execution of the law can be delegated. The rule applies with as much force to the legislatures of the States as it does to the Federal Legislature, and yet in every State legislative powers are delegated to every municipal corporation.

Congress has delegated powers to the courts of the several States to determine Federal questions. Such powers have uniformly been upheld by the courts. All that is necessary is for Congress to delegate to the courts of the different States jurisdiction over persons and acts under the laws against crimes against commerce where the same affect commerce between the States.

If the laws are defective, as is claimed, it would be a comparatively easy matter for Congress to control this subject through its taxing power, and control it effectually. When the United States Supreme Court declared the last income-tax law to be unconstitutional, it expressly reserved the question of graduated occupation taxes. A graduated occupation tax would shut up every trust or criminal corporate combination in the United States if properly arranged. A graduated occupation tax rests upon sound principle. The man who has but $10,000 invested in business has a right to be protected against the destruction of his business by the man with $10,000,000. The man with $10,000,000, having been most greatly benefited and being most greatly protected by the Government, should pay for that increase of benefits and protection.

If a graduated occupation tax was so arranged that business would be profitable with moderate capital and would become unprofitable when capitalized to such an extent that it would control production or consumption, there would be no trusts. There is no question about the constitutionality of such a measure. If it be true that Congress can not control the question of trusts and monopolies under the commerce laws, it is certainly true that Congress can control that question under the taxing clause. Congress has built up the trusts without any provision authorizing it to do so, and built them up under the taxing power, and Congress can regulate them or prohibit them under the same power.

There was no question of constitutionality raised when the anti-trust amendment was introduced to the Dingley law as a revenue measure. The Republicans on this floor who now want a constitutional amendment, as they claim, against trusts, because the commerce clause, they claim, is not strong enough to support such a law, recognized then that an anti-trust amendment to the revenue bill would destroy the trusts, and consequently voted the amendment down. There was not one word said about the unconstitutionality of controlling the trusts through the power of taxation. If the Republican members of this House have an honest desire to control the trusts, their desire can be gratified without any constitutional amendment.

The Republican system, on which the trusts have been built up, has reduced the duty collected per capita from $5.23 under the Morrill tariff to $1.96 under the Dingley law, and has increased the public expense from $4.15 under the Morrill tariff to $7.97 under the Dingley law. In order to foster the trusts the customs revenues of the country have been cut down to so low a figure by reason of the excessive tariff rates, designed to be prohibitive and not for revenue, that they pay but a small percentage of the expenses of government. The result is an onerous system of internal taxation of which the people are growing very weary. Now, if Congress, through a graduated occupation tax, will compel these men for whose benefit the revenues of the country have been decreased, to supply the deficiency, the trusts will be regulated and the men who receive the benefits of our revenue system will stand their proportion of the losses sustained through it. If there is an honest desire upon the part of the Republicans to prevent the trusts from paralyzing industrial and commercial interests of the country, they will repeal the war taxes and pass a graduated occupation tax.

The proposed amendment places the power to "define" trusts in Congress. It places the power to "regulate" all trusts in Congress. This amendment places the power to "prohibit" in Congress. It places the power to "dissolve" in Congress. These powers, just as the powers conferred by other sections of the Constitution, are necessarily exclusive. The section then goes on to say that the States can exercise any powers not in conflict with these. Under this provision the States would have the right to do everything except to "define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations." These powers, being delegated to Congress, are necessarily exclusive.

Thirty-one of the States already have laws against trusts, and every one of them which has become the subject of judicial inquiry has been sustained. The effect of this amendment would be to nullify all of these laws and leave the trusts absolutely free and untrammeled until Congress should see fit to regulate them. The American people have no guaranty that this regulation would be at all displeasing to the trusts themselves. It would not be if the same men were in control of Congress as were there when the amendment to the revenue law was defeated. The amendment, it will be noted, does not require Congress to prohibit trusts. Congress could carry out the purposes of this amendment by only defining them. It could carry out the purposes of the amendment by a license which would perpetuate them, or it could carry out its purposes by providing a means for dissolving them when they violated the provisions of their charters.

None of these laws would be opposed by the trusts themselves, and any one of them would be a carrying out of the provisions of this amendment. This amendment, if adopted, would have the effect of making the States powerless and bringing the influence of thousands of millions of capital to bear upon Congress to perpetuate the trusts, and that influence might be very potent. The probabilities are, that the adoption of this amendment would be a complete surrender to the trusts of everything that they do not now control, and a legal sanction for their continued control of that which they now only hold as violators of law.

No lawyer requires a definition of trusts. They have been defined by every law writer since the time of Lord Coke. A trust combination is an illegal combination, and contracts for forming such a combination are absolutely void. A regulation of trusts could therefore be made to mean to legalize what is now unlawful. A prohibition of trusts would add very little to the present law upon the subject, as they are now prohibited by Congress and by thirty-one of the States. A dissolution of trusts could not be accomplished in any case where it is not possible now. If a corporation conducts its business in an illegal manner and for an illegal purpose, which it does if it is a trust, its charter can be forfeited and the trust dissolved as the law now stands. An adoption of this amendment would gain nothing and lose much.

The reasons given by the majority of the committee for advocating this amendment can be very briefly stated: That Congress now only has jurisdiction so far as interstate commerce is concerned and the States only have jurisdiction so far as internal commerce is concerned within the limits of the State. The remedy is to take away the rights of the State and leave trade conspiracies free and untrammeled until Congress shall see fit to act, and then to leave the whole subject to the discretion of a body which for years has been the only friend the trusts ever had in the civilized world.

The most singular feature of this entire matter is that every law that has been passed by Congress or the States has been upheld by the courts. There has not been a single man convicted under any law of Congress or the States who has escaped punishment. Whenever the courts have been called upon to pass upon these laws they have sustained them. The trouble seems to be that the officers to whom are intrusted the duties of instituting prosecutions object to the law and decline to bring prosecutions under it.

In an editorial the American Law Review, in its March–April number, 1900, explains the difficulties in the way of enforcing the anti-trust law. The American Law Review is not a partisan publication nor a political one. The editors, Seymour D. Thompson, of St. Louis, and Leonard A. Jones, of Boston, are both law writers of established authority, and have both written books upon the law of corporations which have been cited by the courts throughout the country. There could scarcely be two men in an editorial capacity on a law journal who would be more familiar with the subject of trusts. The following is the editorial:

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL ON TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

On the day following that on which the Supreme Court of the United States rendered its decision affirming the court of appeals for the Sixth circuit in the Addystone Pipe Company case, Attorney-General Griggs sent his annual report to Congress, reviewing the work of the Department of Justice during the year 1899. He says that application is occasionally made to the Department to have legal proceedings brought in the name of the United States against corporations or combinations of companies that are alleged to be engaged in forming or maintaining monopolies or agreements in restraint of trade. He ought to have added that such applications have been frequently made in perfectly plain cases, by distinguished persons, both to him and to his predecessor, Judge McKenna, and that the letters in which they were made were not even answered.

"Such actions," the Attorney-General says, "can be maintained only when the offense comes within the scope of the Federal statute. The only Federal legislation against combinations in restraint of trade is contained in the so-called Sherman Act of July 2, 1890.

"It will be observed that this statute is directed only at combinations or monopolies in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. It does not pretend to go into other branches of business or commerce, or attempt in any way to interfere with those transactions which are carried on exclusively within the confines of a State, or which do not amount to what, under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, is understood by the term 'interstate commerce.'

"The Federal Government has no constitutional right to supervise, direct, or interfere with the transaction of ordinary business by the people of the several States, unless such business relates directly, and not incidentally, to interstate commerce; and such has been the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States."

The Attorney-General discusses this subject at some length, quoting freely from the decisions of the courts sustaining his position. In conclusion he says:

"In all cases where the facts presented to the Attorney-General were capable of legal proof and have established satisfactorily such an agreement or combination in restraint of interstate commerce as is contemplated by the Sherman Act, legal proceedings have been taken by him in the name of the United States either to dissolve the combination or to punish the offenders by indictment."

The last paragraph of the Attorney-General's report we take leave to qualify. We know the contrary to be the fact, so far as his predecessor was concerned in an important case and in the same case so far as he is concerned. When the office was held by Judge McKenna, Hon. Nathan Frank, who was personally acquainted with the Attorney-General and who had served with him on at least one committee in Congress, wrote to him requesting him to instruct the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Missouri to bring a proceeding in equity under the act of Congress of 1890, known as the Sherman anti-trust law, to restrain the Associated Press from maintaining its monopolistic feature, whereby its so-called "local board"—that is to say, the proprietors of newspapers whom it served in any particular town—could exclude any other newspaper from receiving its service, even by the dissent of a single one of them. This letter was never answered. Subsequently Hon. Franklin Bartlett, counsel for the Sun Printing and Publishing Association, the publisher of the New York Sun, made a similar application to the present Attorney-General, and his letter was never answered.

The position of the Attorney-General, as stated in his report, is based, as he says, upon interference with "the transaction of ordinary business." The same is the difficulty with the majority of the committee. If this is an interference with the transaction of ordinary business, then Congress has nothing to do with it and ought not to have, even under a constitutional amendment. The Attorney-General can see no difference between ordinary business and an act which was a crime at common law and has remained a crime for centuries. If larceny were treated as a matter of ordinary business, it would be very difficult to deal with it. If these crimes against trade are treated as matters of ordinary business, then it is impossible to stop them. If the Attorney-General would quit treating these illegal acts as affairs of ordinary business and treat them as serious offenses, which the law declares them to be, the trouble of enforcing the law would be at an end.

In the entire discussion of this question by the majority of the committee these trusts are treated as a part of a legitimate commerce instead of as crimes against commerce. Discuss any crime upon the same basis, and no crime would ever be punished.

The distinction between regulation of commerce and regulation of offenses against commerce is not only borne out by reason, but by adjudicated authorities. (Robbins vs. Taxing Dt., 120 U. S., 489.)

A State may enact laws which in practice operate to affect commerce among the States, as by providing, in the legitimate exercise of its police power and general jurisdiction, for the security and comfort of persons and the protection of property; by establishing and regulating channels for commercial facilities; by the passage of inspection laws and laws to restrict the sale of articles injurious to health and morals; by the imposition of taxes upon avocations within its borders not interfering with foreign or interstate commerce or employment, or with business exercised under authority of the Constitution of the United States, and the imposition of taxes on all property within the State, mingled with and forming part of the great mass of property therein.

It is an established principle that the only way in which commerce between the States—that is, legitimate commerce—can be legitimately affected by State laws is when, by virtue of its police power and its jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits, a State provides for the security of the lives, limbs, health, and comfort of persons and the protection of property. (Bowman vs. Chicago Railway, 125 U. S., 465.)

Speaking of the police power of the State as to the introduction of articles "unfit for human use or consumption," the court said:

> Such articles are not merchantable; they are not legitimate subjects of trade and commerce. They may be highly outlawed as intrinsically and directly the immediate sources and causes of destruction to human health and life. The self-protecting power of each State, therefore, may be rightfully exerted against their introduction, and such exercises of power can not be considered regulations of commerce prohibited by the Constitution.
> The articles of monopoly are also outlawed by the act of 1890, and are subject to seizure as confiscated. (City of New York vs. Miln, 11 Peters, 103.)

Whilst a State is acting within the scope of its legitimate power as to the end to be attained it may use whatever means, being appropriate to the end, it may think fit, although they may be the same or so nearly the same as scarcely to be distinguished from those adopted by Congress acting under a different power, subject only to this limitation, that in the event of collision the law of the State must yield to the law of Congress. (Citing Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 203, and Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheat., 419.)

A State has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons, when that jurisdiction is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. It is not only the right but the bounden and solemn duty of a State to advance the safety, happiness, and prosperity of its people and to provide for its general welfare by any and every act of legislation which it may deem conducive to these ends, where the power over the particular subject or the manner of its exercise is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. All those powers which regulate merely municipal legislation, or which may be more properly called internal police, are not surrendered or restrained, and consequently in relation to these the authority of a State is complete, unqualified, and exclusive.

It is at all times difficult to define any subject with precision and accuracy. If this be so in general, it is emphatically so in relation to a subject so diversified and various as the present case. If the court were to attempt it, they would say that every law comes within the description of a regulation of police which concerns the welfare of the whole people of a State or any individual within it; whether it relates to their rights or their duties; whether it respects them as men or as citizens of the State in their public or private relations, whether it relates to the rights of persons or of property of the whole people of a State, or of any individual within it, and whose operation is within the territorial limits of the State and upon the persons and things within its jurisdiction. An example of the application of these principles is the right of a State to punish persons who commit offenses against its criminal laws within its territory. (Georgia Banking Company vs. Smith, 128 M. S., 179.)

It has been adjudged by this court in numerous instances that the legislature of a State has the power to prescribe the charges of a railroad company for the carriage of persons and merchandise, within its limits, in the absence of any provision in the charter of the company constituting a contract vesting in it authority over those matters, subject to the limitation that the carriage is not required without reward, or upon conditions amounting to the taking of property for public use without just compensation, and that what is done does not amount to a regulation of foreign or interstate commerce. (Citing 116 U. S., 331; 125 U. S., 680; 94 U. S., 113.)

So long as the use continues, the power of regulation remains, and the regulation may extend not merely to provisions for the security of passengers and freight against accidents, and for the convenience of the public, but also to prevent extortion by unreasonable charges and favoritism by unjust discriminations. This is not a new doctrine, but old doctrine, always asserted whenever property or business is, by reason of special privileges received from the Government, the better to secure the purposes to which the property is dedicated or devoted affected by a public use. When such use exists the business becomes subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against danger, injustice, and oppression. (Munn vs. Illinois, 96 U. S., 113.)

Where warehouses are situated and their business is carried on exclusively within a State, the State may, as a matter of domestic concern, prescribe regulations for them, notwithstanding they are used as instruments by those engaged in interstate as well as in State commerce; and until Congress acts in reference to their interstate relations such regulations can be enforced, even though they may indirectly operate upon commerce beyond the immediate jurisdiction of the State. (Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company vs. Kentucky, 161 U. S., 678.)

Whatever is contrary to public policy or inimical to the public interests is subject to the police power of the State and is within legislative control, and in the exertion of such power the legislature is vested with a large discretion, which if exercised bona fide, for the protection of the public is beyond the reach of judicial inquiry.

The formation of trusts was an offense at common law, and must be considered as an offense and not merely as a regulation of commerce. The right to the free and unrestricted conduct of trade is a fundamental one and not a matter of ordinary civil regulation.

All combinations which have for their object the injurious affection of public interests are indictable. Thus, for several to conspire to stimulate dishonestly the price of commodities upon the market. Rex vs. De Berenger (3 M. and S., 67), Rex vs. Aspenwall (12 B., Div. 730), Rex vs. Norris (2 Kenyon, 300), Rex vs. Hilbers (2 Chit. R., 163), sustain this doctrine as to raising the price of oil or salt.

At common law forestalling the market, engrossing, and monopoly were indictable offenses.

And combinations to raise prices of provisions, etc., were severely punished with fine, imprisonment, the pillory, maiming, perpetual infamy, and sometimes banishment. (Blackstone's Commentaries, Book IV, page 159, Cooley's edition.)

Said Mr. Justice Field (111 U. S., page 757):

> Among these inalienable rights, as proclaimed in that great document, is the right of men to pursue their happiness, by which is meant the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment.
> The common business and callings of life, the ordinary trades and pursuits, which are innocuous in themselves and have been followed in all communities from time immemorial, must, therefore, be free in this country to all alike upon the conditions. The right to pursue them without let or hindrance, except that which is applied to all persons of the same age, sex, and condition, is a distinguishing privilege of citizens of the United States and an essential element of that freedom which they claim as their birthright.

Said Mr. Justice Bradley (same case, page 762):

> The right to follow any of the common occupations of life is an inalienable right. It was formulated as such under the phrase "pursuit of happiness" in the Declaration of Independence, which commenced with the fundamental proposition that "all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." This right is a large ingredient in the civil liberty of the citizen.

When the subject is treated as one of criminal law, the power of the States is ample and the State statutes have been uniformly upheld, as the following cases will demonstrate:

In New Jersey it was held that where the members of a manufacturers' association produce nearly the whole quantity of an article necessary to the comfort and health of the community, and have agreed to make their prices such as the majority of the members shall prescribe, a scheme to buy and combine into one company the plants of a majority of the members, obtain the control of prices at which all the members shall sell, put the vendors under a covenant not to compete, and thus secure the ability to dictate the prices which the public must pay for the productions of all the members of the association, is an effort to create a monopoly in an article of general necessity and is against public policy. The covenants to restrain competition, though they may be several as between the vendors and the vendee, will be considered as part of a single plan to secure a monopoly. If they are executory, a court of equity will not enforce them. (New Jersey chancery court, 39 Atl. R., 923.)

Monopoly of any lawful trade is against public policy, it not being essential that such trade should be in the necessities of life. (People vs. Duke et al., 44 New York Supp., 336.)

A combination to control the price and production of a certain article may be illegal though its manufacture is protected by patents. (47 New York Supp., 462.)

A combination is not protected because organized as a corporation under a State statute. (18 New York Supp., 224.)

Anti-trust act of 1889 in Kansas sustained. (Barton vs. Mulvane, 59 Kans., 313.)

Act of 1891 of Illinois sustained, prohibiting pools, trusts, and combinations. (155 Ill., 166.)

In Ohio in the Standard Oil Company case the statute was sustained. (30 N. E. R., 279.)

In Indiana in the Natural Gas and Oil Company case the statute was sustained. (53 N. E. R., 1089.)

Texas acts of 1889 and 1895 sustained by Texas court of appeals. (44 S. W. Rep., 236.)

Considered from the standpoint of commerce and not from that of criminal law, the jurisdiction of the State could not be so exercised as to injuriously affect interstate commerce, but even under that construction the difficulty is more apparent than real. Congress could delegate any necessary authority to punish offenses against interstate commerce. This was directly done by the Wilson Act. The following case is in point: Morgan, etc., Company vs. Board of Health, 118 U. S., 455.

The system of quarantine established by statutes of Louisiana is a rightful exercise of the police power for the protection of health which is not forbidden by the Constitution of the United States. While some of the rules of that system may amount to regulations of commerce with foreign nations or among the States, though not so designed, they belong to that class which the States may establish until Congress acts in the matter by covering the same ground or forbidding State laws.

Congress, so far from doing either of these things, has, by the act of 1799 and previous laws and by the recent act of 1878, adopted the laws of the States on that subject and forbidden all interference with their enforcement. (Bowman vs. Chicago, etc., Railroad Company, 125 U. S., 465.)

A State can not, for the purpose of protecting its people from the evils of intemperance, enact laws which regulate—that is, prescribe rules for—commerce between its people and those of other States of the Union unless the consent of Congress, express or implied, is first obtained. (United States vs. Jones, 109 U. S., 513.)

The power of eminent domain belongs both to the States and to the United States.

And the Government of the United States may delegate to a tribunal, created under the laws of the State, the power to fix the amount of compensation to be paid by the United States for private property taken thereby in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, or it may, if it pleases, create a special tribunal for that purpose. (Citing 91 U. S., 367; In re Spickler, 43 Fed. Rep., 653.)

Act of Congress of 1890, known as the Wilson bill, declaring that intoxicating liquors shall, on arrival in a State, be subject to the police powers of the State, simply defines the times when imported intoxicating liquors shall become subject to State control, and is therefore not unconstitutional as being a delegation to the States of the power to regulate interstate commerce. On the passage by Congress of the Wilson bill, which subjects to State police laws all imported liquors as soon as they pass within the boundaries of the State, it became unlawful to sell such liquors in Iowa without a reenactment of the prohibitory liquor law. (In re Van Vliet, 43 Fed. Rep., 761.)

The said act (Wilson law) is a legitimate exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce. (In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545.)

The Wilson law was sustained as to liquor in original packages subject to the local State laws under the police power.

The States now have power to control this subject under criminal laws and Congress has power to control it under its authority over interstate commerce. These offenses against commerce were known at the time the Constitution was adopted, and it is not reasonable that the framers of that instrument would have intended that Congress should not have power to protect commerce against destruction. The power to regulate carries with it by implication all necessary powers. This position is sustained by the following authority: Prigg vs. Pennsylvania (16 Peters, 542).

Congress has on various occasions exercised powers which were necessary and proper as means to carry into effect rights expressly given and duties expressly enjoined by the Constitution. The end being required, it has been deemed a just and necessary implication that the means to accomplish it are given also; or, in other words, that the power flows as a necessary means to accomplish the ends.

The legislation of Congress, if constitutional, must supersede all State legislation upon the same subject, and by necessary implication prohibit it. For if Congress has a constitutional power to regulate a particular subject and does actually regulate it in a given manner and in a certain form, it can not be that the State legislatures have a right to interfere. Where Congress has exclusive power over a subject it is not competent for State legislation to add to the provisions of Congress on that subject.

Wherever Congress exercises a concurrent power it is made in effect an exclusive power. There are, it is true, cases of concurrent power on which both Federal and State legislation may act at the same time and where the latter is not suspended by the action of the former. Thus the exercise of the taxing power by Congress does not suspend the concurrent power of the States, because, although the same power, it is exercised on different objects or for different purposes; but where the power acts on the same subject-matter to accomplish the same end the State power is necessarily suspended.

Congress acted under this clause of the Constitution in 1890, and passed a law against trusts. This law has been universally upheld. Among the authorities are the following: Addystone P. & S. Co. vs. United States (175 U. S., 211—no dissent); statement. Combination of companies in Cincinnati, Louisville, Bessemer, Anniston, South Pittsburg, Chattanooga; syllabus.

Under the grant of power to Congress contained in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with Indian tribes," that body may enact such legislation as shall declare void and prohibit the performance of any contract between individuals or corporations where the natural and direct effect of such a contract shall be, when carried out, to directly, and not as a mere incident to other and innocent purposes, regulate to any extent interstate or foreign commerce.

The provision in the Constitution regarding the liberty of the citizen is to some extent limited by the commerce clause; and the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce comprises the right to enact a law prohibiting the citizen from entering into those private contracts which directly and substantially and not merely indirectly, remotely, incidentally, and collaterally regulate, to a greater or less degree, commerce among the States.

Interstate commerce consists of intercourse and traffic between the citizens or inhabitants of different States, and includes not only the transportation of persons and property and the navigation of public waters, but also the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities.

The power to regulate interstate commerce and to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed is vested in Congress, and when that body has enacted a statute such as the act of July 2, 1890, any agreement or combination which directly operates not alone upon the manufacture but upon the sale, transportation, and delivery of an article of interstate commerce by preventing or restricting its sale, thereby regulates interstate commerce to that extent and thus trenches upon the power of the National Legislature and violates the statute. (Held that the agreement in this case was an unlawful combination.)

When the direct, immediate, and intended effect of a contract or combination among dealers in a commodity is the enhancement of its price, it amounts to a restraint of trade in the commodity, even though contracts to buy it at the enhanced price are being made. (United States vs. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S., 290.)

This case sustains fully the act of 1890 (July 2), and the court held that—

The prohibitory provisions of the act apply to all contracts in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce without exception or limitation, and are not confined to those in which the restraint is unreasonable.

In order to maintain this suit (for injuction) the Government is not obliged to show that the agreement in question was entered into for the purpose of restraining trade or commerce, if such restraint is its necessary effect.

This agreement, though legal when made, became illegal on the passage of the act of July 2, 1890, and acts done under it after that statute became operative were done in violation of it.

The fourth section of the act invests the Government with full power and authority to bring such a suit as this; and if the facts alleged are proved, an injunction should issue.

Under the act of 1890 a contract between railroad companies in restraint of commerce is prohibited, even though the contract is entered into between competing railroads only for the purpose of thereby affecting traffic for the transportation of persons and property. The prohibitory provisions of the act apply to all contracts in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce without exception or limitation and are not confined to those in which the restraint is unreasonable. In order to maintain a suit the Government is not obliged to show that the agreement in question was entered into for the purpose of restraining trade or commerce if such restraint is its necessary effect. (United States vs. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U. S., 505.)

Congress, with regard to interstate commerce and in the course of regulating it in the case of railroad corporations, has the power to say that no contract or combination shall be legal which shall restrain trade and commerce by shutting out competition.

The following decisions have also been rendered:

Held, that a combination among manufacturers of spring-tooth harrows by which each manufacturer assigns to a corporation organized for the purpose the patents under which he is operating and takes back an exclusive license to make and sell the same style of harrows previously made by him and no other, all the parties being bound to sell at uniform prices, is an unlawful combination for the enhancement of prices and in restraint of trade. (National Harrow Company vs. Hench, 76 Fed. R. (Pa.), 667, citing 68 Pa. St., 173; 119 N. Y., 46; 161 Pa. St., 473.)

In a suit to restrain alleged violations of the law of 1890 against trusts and monopolies affecting interstate commerce the existence of an illegal combination among the defendants is to be determined not alone from what appears on the face of the preamble, rules, and by-laws of their association, but from the entire situation and the practical working and results of their methods of doing business as disclosed by the evidence.

The act of Congress is aimed against all restraints of interstate commerce, and its purpose is to permit commerce between the States to flow in its natural channels, unrestricted by any combinations, contracts, conspiracies, or monopolies whatsoever. The reasonableness of the restrictions in a given case is immaterial.

The fact that the place of business of an association is located upon both sides of the line dividing two States is in itself of no material importance in determining whether the business transacted by it is commerce between the States. (United States vs. Hopkins, 82 Fed. R., 529 Kans.)

Numerous manufacturers, under various United States patents of float spring-tooth harrows, agreed to organize a corporation, to assign to it all the patents thus owned or thereafter to be acquired, and the good will of their business, and not to be interested in the manufacture or sale of such harrows except as agents or licensees of the corporation; that the corporation should license them to manufacture and sell, for their own account, subject to uniform terms and conditions, their respective makes, and should not itself manufacture or sell; that each licensee should pay $1 for each such harrow manufactured and sold by him and should receive paid-up stock in return for the patents and good will.

Those who entered the agreement represented 70 per cent of the total manufacture and sales of the United States. The corporation was formed and the assignments made. The licenses issued also bound the licensors not to cut prices, not to sell other float spring-tooth harrows except under the licenses, and provided unliquidated damages for every breach. Held, that the arrangement was an unlawful combination in restraint of trade. (National Harrow Company vs. Hench, United States circuit court of appeals, Pennsylvania, 83 Fed. R., 36.)

Under the anti-trust law of 1890 (United States), a contract or combination which imposes any restraints whatever upon interstate commerce is unlawful; and it is immaterial whether or not the restraint is a fair and reasonable one, or whether it has actually resulted in increasing the price of the commodity dealt in.

Where coal is brought from other States and foreign countries by importers and dealers, who, by a combination with a local coal dealers' association, regulate the retail prices arbitrarily and provide against free competition, such combination is one in restraint of interstate commerce in the meaning of the act of 1890. (United States vs. Coal Dealers, etc., Association, Cal., 85 Fed. R., 252.)

There have been two decisions of the United States Supreme Court which are quoted as sustaining a contrary view—the Knight case (156 U. S., 1), which held only that the mere manufacture of an article could not constitute the gravamen of the offense, which is certainly a correct view, and the case of Leisy vs. Hardin (135 U. S., 10) which, it has been wrongly asserted, decided against the power of a State to pass anti-trust laws, but which was expressly limited and restricted by the case of Plumley vs. Massachusetts, which says:

The judiciary of the United States should not strike down a legislative enactment of a State, especially if it has direct connection with the social order, the health, and the morals of its people, unless such legislation plainly and palpably violates some right granted or secured by the national Constitution or encroaches upon the authority delegated to the United States for the attainment of objects of national concern.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of remedies now possessed by Congress under the Constitution for the suppression of these trust evils. The bill which bears the name of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is an admission on its face that Congress has power to legislate for the destruction of these illegal combinations. Recent history confirms the power of Congress to deal with these and like enemies of the public.

Congress has power to tax corporations or associations engaged in interstate commerce. The corporations or associations can be fully regulated, and "regulate" in its application to interstate commerce means, according to the Supreme Court in the cases already cited, that it has full power and control over them, and the "power to tax" means, according to a number of decisions of the same court, the power to destroy.

Congress can deny the use of the mails to corporations or associations engaged in interstate commerce whose conduct or products are controlled by illegal or oppressive combinations. An act of Congress destroyed the Louisiana State Lottery. A fraud order issued by the Post-Office Department stops the business of every swindler who uses the mails in furtherance of his corrupt schemes.

Congress can provide for the suspension of import duties upon all articles where the domestic manufacturers have entered into a trust. The President is already, under the Dingley law and the reciprocity feature of it, empowered to suspend the tariff or customs duties when reciprocity requires. If the Government can extend this great favor to foreigners, it certainly has the power to permit the foreigner to bring in his goods duty free so that the American people can be protected against the conspiracies and oppressions of the home manufacturer. How long would the paper trust exist if the material for the manufacture of paper could be brought into the country duty free?

Congress has required publicity to be given to the business of national-banking corporations. Has it not an equal power over corporations engaged in interstate commerce? "Regulate" is a broad term and embraces everything short of absolute prohibition.

It is best that all corporations or associations engaged purely in interstate commerce should be left to the control of the States. The States can certainly control their domestic corporations and associations, and Congress can permit the States to prescribe terms upon which foreign corporations may engage in business within the limits of the State. Congress can control corporations engaged in interstate commerce. The State government and the Federal Government have ample power to control and to destroy trade conspiracies and oppressions. I am not willing to see that power of the State to punish domestic conspirators surrendered to the Federal Government. Let me cite the provisions of the Constitution of the United States relating to this subject:

To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes. (Article I, section 8 (3).)

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. (Article I, section 8 (1).)

To establish post-offices and post roads. (Article I, section 8 (7).)

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. (Article I, section 2 (3).)

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken. (Article I, section 9 (4).)

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. (Article I, section 9 (5).)

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to, or from, one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another. (Article I, section 9 (6).)

No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. (Amendment V.)

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. (Article IV, section 2 (1).)

These enumerated powers and these limitations have been construed in many cases by the Supreme Court of the United States. The exclusive power of Congress over interstate commerce has been often defined. The exclusive power of the States over intrastate commerce has always been recognized.

WHAT THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MAY DO.

Congress has exclusive control over interstate commerce. In dealing with the subject the United States are but one country. (Robbins vs. Taxing District, 120 U. S., 489, 494.)

The power of Congress over interstate commerce is not only exclusive, but unlimited. (Addyston P. & S. Co. vs. United States, 175 U. S., 211; Leisy vs. Harden, 135 U. S., 100.)

The power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is full. (Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat., 1.)

Control of Congress over the mails is complete. (Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S., 727; In re Ragier, 143 U. S., 110.)

The power of Congress to suspend customs duties is fully recognized, as is done under the reciprocity clause of the Dingley law.

The power of Congress to prescribe regulations for publicity or the like for national banks is recognized.

Any combination which restrains interstate commerce is illegal under the anti-trust law and may be enjoined by the United States. (United States vs. Trans-Mo. Freight Assn., 166 U. S., 290; United States vs. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U. S., 505.)

Trusts or corporations like the Standard Oil Company could not exist if Congress would pass a proper law to prevent freight discriminations and rebates.

Congress ought to provide for the revocation of patents where a patent right is used to aid a criminal conspiracy against trade.

The case of Addystone P. & S. Co. vs. U. S., supra, decides that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is not limited or affected by any reasons that induced the repose of the power in Congress; that the power is not limited or restricted by the guaranty that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and that under the anti-trust law any combination which directly restrains interstate commerce or destroys competition in interstate commerce is illegal.

In other words, the power of Congress over individuals and over combinations engaged in interstate commerce is ample to control interstate commerce and prevent detriment to the public. Congress can protect the people from monopolistic combines without any amendment to the Constitution. The Knight case I have cited clearly shows what powers are reserved to the State, and the Addystone case clearly shows what powers are conferred upon the Federal Government.

WHAT THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MAY NOT DO.

The Federal Government can not suppress or destroy purely intrastate enterprises or corporations not engaged in interstate commerce or in some other business over which Congress has been given authority by the Constitution of the United States. It has been held that the power of Congress does not extend to a combination of an article of manufacture in a State, because mere manufacture is not trade or commerce, and the article manufactured does not become a part of interstate commerce until it has started for another State, and therefore monopolies in the manufacture of a necessary of life are not covered by the anti-trust law. (United States vs. Knight Company, 156 U. S., 1.)

A combination affecting interstate commerce but not restraining it and not excluding competition is not within the purview of the anti-trust law. (Anderson vs. United States, 171 U. S., 604.)

THE POWER OF THE STATE.

Under its police power the State is permitted to legislate for local purposes affecting the health, moral safety, or convenience of its people, but such legislation does not directly or reasonably affect interstate commerce.

A State can enact local pilotage laws (Cooley vs. Board of Wardens, 12 Howe, 299); quarantine laws (Morgan Steamship Company vs. Louisiana, 118 U. S., 455); harbor-improvement laws (County, etc., vs. Kimball, 102 U. S., 699); laws forbidding the heating of cars with stoves (New York, etc., R. vs. New York, 165 U. S., 628); laws forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday (Hennington vs. Georgia, 163 U. S., 299); laws relating to delivery of telegrams (Western Union Telegraph Company vs. James, 162 U. S., 650); laws to prevent frauds in the sale of oleomargarine (Plumley vs. Massachusetts, 155 U. S., 461); inspection laws (Patapsco G. Co. vs. North Carolina, 171 U. S., 345).

POWERS DENIED TO A STATE.

A State can not exclude foreign corporations engaged in interstate commerce; held as to telegraph lines in the postal service of the United States. (Pennsylvania Telegraph Company vs. Western Union Telegraph Company, 96 U. S., 1.)

A State can not tax a corporation upon its interstate commerce. (Brown vs. Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 419.)

A State can not fix a rate for carrying interstate commerce. (W., etc., Rwy. vs. Illinois, 118 U. S., 557.)

A State can not exclude intoxicating liquors shipped in the original package from other States. (Scott vs. Donald, 165 U. S., 58; Bowman vs. C. & N. W. Rwy., 125 U. S., 465.)

Mr. Speaker, much confusion has arisen on account of a misunderstanding of the various decisions of the Supreme Court affecting the control of intrastate and interstate commerce. I have read the report of the Judiciary Committee, presented with the pending resolution. I have heard the long and able speech of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], and it seems to me that both the report and his speech have had the effect, whether designedly so or not, to still further confuse the subject. It seems to me that our Republican friends have used most of their efforts in this debate to show that Congress is without power to control monopolistic combinations. It is strange that Republicans should assert the want of power on the part of the Federal Government to do almost anything.

The average Republican believes in a strong central government, and believes in so construing the Constitution of the United States as to confer almost unlimited powers upon the Federal Government. No canon of strict construction of the Constitution hampers the average Republican or hinders him from voting for measures that call upon the Federal Government for the exercise of more power. Why, then, do our Republican brethren here argue that the Federal Government is so limited, so devoid of power, so impotent under the Constitution? Is it because they are serving their masters, the trusts and monopolies? Is this an effort to fool the American people? It seems to me that their object is not to destroy trusts and monopolies, but to manufacture excuses for campaign purposes only.

An attempt has been made to class legitimate trades unions with the trusts. A mere organization for self-protection is not a trust and is not contrary to good government. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee will endeavor by a point of order to prevent an expression upon an amendment that the Littlefield bill shall not apply to trades unions after the Republican Committee on Judiciary have refused to make the amendment. Unable to prevent the consideration of the amendment, the Republicans will vote for it, for they dare not vote against that Democratic amendment demanded by organized labor.

There has always been an effort upon the part of the Republicans to protect capital against the just demands of labor, and to hold organized labor responsible for the individual acts of laborers. Trades unions, as such, are formed only for the mutual protection of the workingmen, and that protection is absolutely essential to their well-being.

You can not treat labor as a mere commodity. You can not separate the laborer from his labor. It is not only a commodity, but a personality as well. The laborers band together under the natural instinct of self-preservation, and history has shown that it is absolutely impossible for their just rights to be protected without such organization. There was a time in England and in other European countries when labor combinations were classed under the law with monopolistic combinations. The result was that the laborers refused to submit to being classed as mere chattels, and it has been estimated that nineteen hundred of them were killed in the Sheffield and Manchester riots alone.

The following is a brief account of the conditions prevailing, as given in Webb's History of Trades-Unionism (page 63):

> Toward the end of the last century (eighteenth) at any rate free bargaining between the capitalist and his workmen became the sole method of fixing wages. Then it was that the gross injustice of prohibiting combinations of journeymen became apparent [in England]. "A single master," said Lord Jeffrey, "was at liberty at any time to turn off the whole of his workmen at once—100 or 1,000 in number—if they would not accept the wages he chose to to offer." But it was made an offense for the whole of the workmen to leave the master at once if he refused to give the wages they chose to require.
> It is true that the law forbade combinations of employers as well as combinations of journeymen. But even if it had been impartially carried out, there would still have remained the inequality due to the fact that in the new system of industry a single employer was himself equivalent to a very numerous combination. But the hand of justice was not impartial. The "tacit but constant" combination of employers to depress wages, to which Adam Smith refers, could not be reached by the law. Nor was there any disposition on the part of the magistrates or the judges to find the masters guilty even in cases of flagrant or avowed combination.
> No one prosecuted the master cutlers who, in 1814, openly formed the Sheffield Mercantile and Manufacturing Union, having for its main rule that no merchant or manufacturer should pay higher prices for any article of Sheffield make than were current in the preceding year, with a penalty of £100 for each contravention of this illegal agreement. During the whole epoch of repression, whilst thousands of journeymen suffered for the crime of combination, there is absolutely no case on record in which an employer was punished for the same offense. * * * Could an accurate account be given of proceedings of hearings before magistrates, trials at sessions, and in the court of King's bench, the gross injustice, the foul invective, and terrible punishments inflicted would not, after a few years have passed away, be credited on any but the best evidence.

In the United States injunctions have been issued under the most flimsy pretexts; men have been hauled up for contempt for not obeying these injunctions and have been imprisoned without the opportunity for a trial. It has not been found difficult without any criminal statute whatever to punish all supposed offenses committed by workingmen, even remotely affecting interstate commerce, and yet, with a criminal statute, the administrative officers of the Government insist that they can not reach more grave offenses committed by capitalists.

If the States should have the cooperation of Congress and there was an honest attempt upon the part of the Federal officials to control illegal combinations and monopolies, no difficulty would be found in securing the means by which to accomplish such a purpose.

I submit that every trust engaged in interstate commerce is either the outgrowth of some Congressional legislation or of Federal permission or toleration or privilege in cases where Congress has failed to enact, under existing constitutional provisions, prohibitory legislation.

APPENDIX I.

[From the New York Sun.]

THE ANTI-TRUST AMENDMENT.

When we say plainly that this is the most dishonest and therefore the most discreditable piece of work achieved during the present session by the leaders of Republican policy in the House we are not speaking of the merits of the proposed amendment. Its revolutionary character, the sweeping change it would effect in the entire system of our institutions, the bestowal upon Congress of an unlimited and arbitrary power over all private business in all the States, and without regard to State lines or State rights, need not even be discussed.

There is no more prospect of its adoption by a two-thirds vote of both House and Senate and of its ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the forty-five States than there is of the adoption of a constitutional amendment vesting in the Federal Government the direct management of all the myriad industries of this land.

The dishonesty of the performance lies in the fact that there was no expectation on the part of the author of this resolution, or of the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee who favorably reported it, or of the Republicans in the House who were willing to vote for it that the proposed sixteenth amendment will ever amount to more than a campaign trick of the cheapest and unworthiest description.

APPENDIX II.

[From the Washington Post.]

WHAT WAS THE RESPONSE?

The President, in his annual message to Congress on the 5th of December, 1899, referred to one of the questions that had for two years been "justly provoking public discussion" in these words:

"Combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production, and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people are justly provoking public discussion and should early claim the attention of the Congress. * * * It is universally conceded that combinations which engross or control the market of any particular kind of merchandise or commodity necessary to the general community, by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, whereby prices are unduly enhanced to the general consumer, are obnoxious not only to the common law but also to the public welfare. There must be a remedy for the evils involved in such organizations."

That message was sent to a Congress in complete political accord with the President. It was sent six months ago. What response has been made to it? What has been done or attempted to check all or any of those "combinations of capital organized into trusts to control the conditions of trade among our citizens, to stifle competition, limit production, and determine the prices of products used and consumed by the people?"

Nothing has been done; nothing has been seriously attempted. The amendment farce failed in the House, where it was expected to fail. Had it gone to the Senate, it would have died there. It was never anything but a transparent sham. The anti-trust bill is laid up in the Senate according to the prearranged programme, and no one expects it ever to go through that body without such reconstruction as will utilize little, if any, of the original material.

And that is the record as to so-called anti-trust legislation by the Fifty-sixth Congress up to date. That is the sum total of the response to the President's message sent to Congress six months ago. Trusts that are robbing the people under the shelter of tariff schedules not required for the protection of labor or for revenue; trusts that have been overcapitalized to the extent of hundreds of millions; trusts that are exacting exorbitant prices in order to pay dividends on fictitious capital; trusts whose pictures are drawn by the President in the words quoted above, still have license to plunder and are protected in that business.

Protection and Prosperity—Free Trade and Adversity.

The Farmer, the Workingman, the Manufacturer, and the Business Man have Shared in Their Joys and Sorrows—A Review of the Protective and Low-Tariff Periods of Our History from 1790 to 1900, and a Discussion of Effect upon These Great Classes of Our Population.

OF

HON. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 4, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (H. R. 11538) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901—

Mr. GROSVENOR said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the order of the House which gave authority on the general debate on this bill to print remarks in the RECORD, I avail myself of this opportunity to speak a few words on protection and prosperity.

Results, not theories, are what the voter—be he farmer, toiler in the factory, manufacturer, or business man—wants.

There are two ways of determining the effect of great measures or systems—first and most important, by taking a bird's-eye view of the commerce and finances of the entire nation during its entire history. The method ordinarily followed in attempting this is to examine our historical records and newspaper accounts of conditions in the various years in which low or protective tariffs have been in operation.

PROTECTION VS. LOW TARIFF, 1790 TO 1900.

In addition to this, however, it is practicable to present in a single table all the net results of protection versus low tariff in the United States from the adoption of the Constitution down to the present time, as indicated by the prosperity of our commerce and finances. A table (No. 1) printed on another page shows the total imports and exports and excess of imports or exports in each year from 1790 to 1900, and another table (No. 2) shows the receipts and expenditures and excess of receipts or expenditures of the Government in each year from 1790 to 1900; and with each of these tables is a statement showing the years in which low or protective tariffs, respectively, have been in operation. Following these are other tables showing the condition of our home industries under low and protective tariffs, respectively, and all of these I propose to discuss briefly.

TARIFFS AND COMMERCE.

A study of Tables Nos. 1 and 2 shows that protective tariffs have been in operation in the United States during practically one-half of the one hundred and ten years since the adoption of the Constitution. In Tables Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 will be found the workings of the low and protective tariffs, respectively, grouped.

It will be seen that during the fifty-nine years of low tariff there were but ten years in which the exports were as great as the imports, and that during the entire fifty-nine years of the operation of low tariffs the net excess of imports over exports was $515,000,000. A study of the commerce of the protective tariff years shows that exports exceeded imports in twenty-seven of the fifty-two protective years, and that the net excess of exports over imports during that time was two and a half billion dollars.

To put it in a single sentence, low tariffs, in fifty-nine years of operation, show a net excess of imports of $515,000,000, and protective tariffs, in fifty-two years of operation, show a net excess of exports of $2,500,000,000. Thus the protective tariffs of fifty-two years have paid the commercial debts of the fifty-nine years of low tariffs, amounting to half a billion dollars, and, in addition, placed two and a half billion dollars to the credit of our export trade.

EXCESS OF EXPORTS DURING THREE YEARS OF THE M'KINLEY ADMINISTRATION.

Another striking example of the growth of our export trade under protective tariff is found in the fact that the excess of exports over imports in the first three years of President McKinley's term, from March 1, 1897, to March 1, 1900, was nearly four times as much as the entire excess of exports over imports from 1790 to the date of his inauguration, March 4, 1897, the accurate figures being:

Excess of exports over imports from 1790 to March 1, 1897.....	$383,028,497
Excess of exports over imports from March 1, 1897, to March 1, 1900.	1,483,537,049

The relative effect of low and protective tariffs, respectively, on the revenues of the Government are also readily seen by a study of the tables already mentioned.

TARIFFS AND REVENUE.

Table 5, entitled "Tariffs and revenues, 1790 to 1900," shows the deficit or surplus, respectively, in revenues in each of the low and protective tariff years. An examination of this table will show that all protective-tariff years, with the exception of those in which expenditures were extremely heavy on account of war, show a surplus revenue, while twenty-four of the fifty-eight low-tariff years show a deficit, only three of that number being at all affected by wars. Practically every protective-tariff year, except those in which war conditions caused abnormal expenditures, shows a surplus, and it was under protection and Republican rule that the enormous interest-bearing debt of the United States was reduced from $2,221,000,000, at the end of the war (1865), to $585,000,000, when a Democratic President and low-tariff Congress took control of the Government; and before Democratic rule and low tariff had ceased to exist, the interest-bearing debt had increased to $847,365,000, as will be seen by Table No. 7.

SECTION NO. 1.—A DISCUSSION OF THE EFFECT OF HIGH AND LOW TARIFFS UPON THE GENERAL BUSINESS CONDITIONS OF THE COUNTRY; WITH STATISTICAL EVIDENCE ATTACHED.

As to the effect of the tariff upon the material prosperity of the country, the study is almost necessarily confined to later periods, because the census reports of the first half of the period, considered in the tables already referred to, are not sufficiently elaborate to show in detail the growth of manufactures.

GROWTH IN TEXTILE INDUSTRIES UNDER PROTECTION.

It is practicable, however, to consider the condition of the textile industries at the middle of the century and by decennial periods thereafter and thus determine the condition which they had reached under the almost constant low tariff which prevailed prior to 1850 and the growth during that further low-tariff period from 1830 to 1860, and to compare those conditions and growths with the protective period which has been constant since 1860, with the single three years' interruption from August 30, 1894, to July 24, 1897.

The growth in number of establishments, employees, capital invested, and value of products of the wool, cotton, and silk manufacturing establishments and the dyeing and finishing works at each census year from 1850 to 1890 is equally striking. The value of the products of these four great groups amounted in 1850, after the long period of low tariff, to only $128,000,000 and the number of employees to only 146,897; and during the ten years of uninterrupted low tariff from 1850 to 1860 the value of the products had only reached $214,000,000, an increase of $86,000,000, and the number of employees had increased to 194,000, an increase of 48,000. The wages paid in these four industries in 1860, the last year under low tariff, amounted to but $40,000,000.

In the next decade the number of employees had increased to 275,000, with a growth of more than 100 per cent in wages and of 42 per cent in number of employees. At the next decennial census, that of 1880, the number of employees was 384,000, an increase of more than 100,000; wages were $105,000,000, an increase of nearly $20,000,000, and the value of products, $532,000,000, or more than double those of the last year under low tariff. By 1890, still another decade of constant protection, the wages paid had increased to $175,000,000, an increase of $70,000,000 paid to labor, while the number of employees had increased to 511,000 and the value of products had increased to $722,000,000, or three and a half times that of the year 1860, which terminated the long low-tariff period.

GROWTH IN PROSPERITY, UNDER PROTECTION AND SOUND MONEY, SINCE THE "CRIME" OF 1873.

Another table (No. 8), prepared from official data, was presented by Secretary Gage at Chicago and Philadelphia, in addresses to great gatherings of those interested in the development of our productions and commerce, and was afterwards published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as an evidence of the growth of prosperity under protection and sound money. It shows that, while population has doubled during that period, all the other material interests have increased with far greater rapidity than population. Salaries paid in public schools, newspapers published, post-offices in existence and receipts of the Post-Office Department, telegraph messages sent, railways in operation, tonnage of vessels engaged in commerce on the Great Lakes, wheat produced and exported, cotton produced, manufactured, and exported, coal, iron, and steel produced and exported, exports of manufactures, exports of the products of agriculture, money in circulation, total and per capita deposits in savings banks, and number of depositors—all show a growth greatly in excess of that of population.

COMPARISON OF CONDITIONS UNDER THE M'KINLEY, WILSON, AND DINGLEY TARIFFS.

To come down to a later period in the study of the general effect of low and protective tariffs, attention is called to the showing made in Table No. 9, which states the imports, exports, money in circulation, prices, and many other facts, as shown by the records of the Department of Agriculture, Treasury Department, Interstate Commerce Commission, and other branches of the Government service in the protective-tariff year 1892, the low-tariff years 1895 and 1896, and the protective-tariff year 1899. It will be found that in regard to every one of the 125 items of this table in the low-tariff years 1895 and 1896 conditions were far less favorable than those in 1892, the last year under President Harrison and the McKinley tariff, and in 1899, under President McKinley and the Dingley tariff.

BUSINESS FAILURES UNDER THREE TARIFFS.

Laying aside the question of general conditions and taking up that of the various classes of our citizens and business conditions as shown by official records, the study is equally interesting and convincing as to the value of protection. Let us take, first, general business conditions during a long term of years as shown by the records of the Government and by accepted authorities in business lines. No better general index of commercial conditions is attainable than that showing failures and liabilities in each year for a long term of years, and this is presented in Table No. 10. This table is prepared by Dun's Review, a generally accepted authority, which was widely quoted by Democrats and Populists in 1896 by way of sustaining their theories which were then presented to the public.

This table shows that the number of failures in the calendar year 1892, the last year under President Harrison, was 10,344, and in 1893, the first year under a Democratic President, was 15,242, an increase of practically 50 per cent; and in 1896, the last year of Democratic rule, was again 15,088. The amount of liabilities in 1892, the last year under President Harrison, was $114,000,000, and the amount in 1893, the first Democratic year, was $346,000,000, or more than three times as much as in the last Republican year; and that of 1896, the last Democratic and low-tariff year, was $226,000,000, while in 1897, the first year under President McKinley, the liabilities dropped to $154,000,000, and in 1899 the liabilities had fallen to but $90,000,000, or about one-fourth those of 1893; and the total number of failures was but 9,337, against more than 15,000 in the last year of Democracy.

BUSINESS ACTIVITY UNDER THREE TARIFFS.

Take, again, the Table No. 11, showing clearing-house returns of the United States in each year from 1880 to 1899. They are an index of the activity of business. It will be seen that the clearing-house returns of the entire country amounted to $60,000,000,000 in 1892, the last Republican year, and had dropped to $45,000,000,000 in 1894, the year in which the low-tariff law was enacted, and were less than $52,000,000,000 in 1896; while in 1898, the first full year under the Dingley tariff, they were $65,000,000,000, and in 1899 were within a fraction of $89,000,000,000, or practically double those of the year in which the Wilson low-tariff law was enacted.

FREIGHT CARRIED ON RAILWAYS.

Take, again, the record of the railways of the United States, that accurate register of commercial activity, as shown by Table No. 12. The freight carried shows in 1894, the year in which the low-tariff law was enacted, a drop of 83,000,000 tons, or more than 10 per cent of the entire business as compared with the year in which a Democratic President was inaugurated, and 1898, under McKinley and the Dingley law, shows an increase of 124,000,000 tons as compared with 1897, the year in which the Wilson low-tariff act was repealed, and an increase of 230,000,000 tons over the year in which the Wilson law was enacted. Meantime the net earnings dropped from an average of $2,000 per mile during several preceding years to $1,800 per mile during the entire low-tariff period, and in 1898 again passed the $2,000 per mile line, being for that year $2,111 as the average earnings per mile of the railroads of the United States.

EARNINGS OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

The effect of this depression upon the employees under the low tariff is shown in Table No. 13, by which it will be seen that the number of men employed by railways fell in 1894, the year of the enactment of the Wilson law, nearly 100,000 below the number employed in 1893, while the earnings also showed a marked decrease. In 1898, the first full year under the Dingley tariff, the number of employees was, in round terms, 100,000 greater than in 1894, and the amount paid in wages $50,000,000 greater than in 1895, while the year 1899 showed an increase of 149,000 employees over 1894 and $75,000,000 increase in the wages paid, as compared with 1894 or 1895.

BUSINESS BY TELEGRAPH.

Another evidence of the effect of the low-tariff period upon business is found in Table No. 14, which shows the number of telegraph messages sent over the lines of the Western Union Telegraph Company only from 1868 to 1899. It will be seen that the number dropped from 66,000,000 in 1893, the year of the inauguration of a Democratic and low-tariff President and Congress, to 58,000,000 in 1894, the year in which the Dingley law was enacted, and that during the entire low-tariff period from 1894 to 1897 the number remained stationary, at 58,000,000, increasing in 1898, however, to more than 62,000,000.

DECREASE OF MORTGAGES.

On the question of mortgages, of which we heard so much in 1896, Table No. 15 shows, for the single State of Nebraska, that the value of mortgages filed in 1897, the first year under President McKinley, and the year in which the protective-tariff law was enacted, amounted to but $15,630,721, against $34,601,318 in 1893, the first year under a Democratic President and low-tariff Congress, and $31,690,054 the year in which the low-tariff law was enacted, while the value of the mortgages released in 1898, the first full year under the protective tariff, was $27,498,070 against $18,213,882 in 1896, the year of Mr. Bryan's nomination.

PATENTS, LAND SALES, AND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Still other evidences of general business activity or depression during the protective and low-tariff years are found in the business transacted by the various Government offices. Table No. 16 shows the receipts of the Patent Office from 1890 to 1899. They fell from $1,268,000 in 1892 to $1,183,000 in 1894, and $1,195,000 in 1895, increasing, however, to $1,343,000 in 1897, the year of the enactment of the Dingley law.

Another table (No. 17) shows the money received from the disposal of public lands by the General Land Office. These receipts fell from more than $4,000,000 in 1892 and 1893 to $1,847,000 in 1896, and $1,596,000 in the fiscal year 1897, all of which was under the low tariff, while in 1898, the first fiscal year under the Dingley tariff, they had increased to $2,144,000, and in 1899 to $2,594,000.

Still another table (No. 18), which indicates the number of final homestead entries made at the General Land Office, shows that the total number in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, practically all of which was under President Harrison, was 24,204, and the number of acres granted, 3,477,231. In the fiscal year 1894 the number fell to 20,544, and in 1896 to 20,099, with a total number of acres of 2,790,242, increasing to 22,261 in number and an acreage of 3,095,017 in the fiscal year 1898.

THE POSTAL BAROMETER OF BUSINESS.

Another table (No. 19), showing business conditions, is one quoted by the Postmaster-General in his recent annual report, in which he says:

The course of the postal revenues furnishes an unerring barometer of the business conditions of the country.

He then quotes the receipts, expenditures, and deficits of the Post-Office Department from 1893 to 1899, showing that the receipts in 1894, notwithstanding the steady growth in population, actually fell below those of the fiscal year 1893, practically all of which was under President Harrison, and that during the entire Democratic and low-tariff period the growth in receipts was but very small, the total receipts in the year ending June 30, 1893, being $75,896,923, and in the year ending June 30, 1897, $82,665,462, an increase in the four years of less than $7,000,000, while in the two years from June 30, 1897, to June 30, 1899, the increase was more than $12,000,000, the receipts for the fiscal year 1899 being $95,021,384. The deficit of the Department, which, in the fiscal year 1893, the last year under President Harrison, was $5,177,171, amounted, in the year ending June 30, 1897, all of which was under the low tariff, to $11,411,779, and dropped again under protection and the business activity which accompanied it to $6,610,776 in the year 1899.

BANK DEPOSITS.

Another measure of general business conditions is found by an examination of the deposits in savings and other banks of the United States. A table, No. 20, shows the aggregate deposits in all classes of banks in the United States on or about June 30 in each year from 1892 to 1899. It shows that the deposits in national banks fell from $1,771,000,000 in 1892, President Harrison's last year, to $1,574,000,000 in 1893, a reduction of $200,000,000, and that in the last year of the Democratic term they were but $1,666,000,000, increasing to $1,760,000,000 in 1897, $2,073,000,000 in 1898, and $2,605,000,000 in 1899—an increase of more than a billion dollars in 1899 as compared with 1893.

State banks also show an equally remarkable record, their total deposits in 1899 being almost double those of 1894. Loan and trust companies show in 1899 deposits amounting to $885,000,000, against $471,000,000 in 1894. Savings banks show a reduction of $31,000,000 in their deposits in 1894 as compared with June 30, 1893, while those of June 30, 1899, are $310,000,000 greater than for June 30, 1894. Taking the record of all classes of banks—national, State, loan and trust companies, savings banks, and private banks—the total deposits on June 30, 1899, were $6,853,381,000, against $4,667,930,328 in 1894, the year of the enactment of the Wilson law, an increase of more than $2,000,000,000, or almost 50 per cent, and practically all of this increase occurred after the election of President McKinley and a protective-tariff Congress.

A table, No. 21, shows the details of savings banks, and another, No. 22, compares the savings banks of the United States with those of the other principal countries of the world. It will be seen by this last-mentioned table that the average deposit in the United States is larger than that of any other country, and the total deposits double those of any other country named in the list. Details of the conditions of the banks and deposits in banks in each State in 1896 and 1899, also shown by a table, No. 23, present interesting facts in reference to the growth of business interests and deposits in banks in all parts of the country in 1899 as compared with 1896, the year of the last Presidential campaign.

MONEY IN CIRCULATION UNDER LOW AND PROTECTIVE TARIFFS.

Another recent evidence of the effect of low and protective tariffs on the money in circulation is shown in Tables Nos. 25 and 26, which show the amount of money of various classes in circulation in the United States for a term of years, the first of these extending back to the beginning of the protective period—1860—and the second extending back to 1870, which precedes the "crime" of 1873. They show the steady growth in the amount of money in circulation up to and including 1892, the last year under President Harrison, then a steady fall until 1896, and again an increase up to the present time.

The per capita money in circulation in 1892, the last year under President Harrison, was $24.44. By 1896 it had dropped to $21.10, and in spite of the prediction that it could not increase without the free and unlimited coinage of silver and the retention of a low tariff, it has, under McKinley, the protective tariff, and the gold standard, increased to $26.58 per capita on May 1, 1900, an increase of 20 per cent in the per capita circulation, of 25 per cent in the total money in circulation, and of 64 per cent in the gold and gold certificates in circulation; the total of the gold and gold certificates on July 1, 1896, the date of Mr. Bryan's nomination, being $197,000,000, and on May 1, 1900, $814,000,000, while the total money on July 1, 1896, was $1,306,434,936, and on May 1, 1900, $2,060,523,463—and all without the "free and unlimited coinage of silver." The second table, No. 25, shows the per capita gold and silver, gold certificates, silver certificates, and other classes of money in circulation in each year from 1870 down to May 1, 1900. It will be seen that there has been a marked increase in every class of currency in circulation, comparing May 1, 1900, with July 1, 1896.

TABLE No. 4.—Showing the effect of protective tariffs upon the foreign commerce and finances of the United States, as indicated by the excess of exports and a surplus revenue in the years of their operation.

NOTE.—The deficits in the years 1813-1815 are due to abnormal expenditures in the war of 1812; those of 1862-1865, to the war of the rebellion; those of 1898-99, to the Spanish-American war; that of 1894, to the panic following the inauguration of a Democratic President and low-tariff legislation.

NEBRASKA MORTGAGES.

That the prosperity which followed the election of Mr. McKinley, the restoration of a protective tariff, and the rejection of the silver proposition has been such as to enable people to reduce their indebtedness is evidenced by the following table, showing the mortgages filed and released in each year from 1892 to 1898 in Mr. Bryan's own State, Nebraska. It will be observed that in each year prior to 1896 the mortgages filed far exceeded those released, while in 1897 and 1898 the mortgages released exceeded those filed from 25 to 33 per cent. These conditions are Nebraska's refutation of Bryanism and its doctrines. They are the farmer's reply to demagogism, which attempted to mislead him in 1896 and wants to do it again in coming campaigns.

The following table shows the mortgages filed and released in Nebraska in each year from 1893 to 1898:

POSTAL REVENUES.

The course of the postal revenues furnishes an unerring barometer of the business conditions of the country. This is made plain in reviewing the figures during the bad and the good times respectively of the past few years.

TABLE No. 19.—Postal revenues an unerring barometer of business conditions.

[From Report of the Postmaster-General, 1900.]

Year.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Deficit.
1893	$75,896,933.16	$81,074,104.90	$5,177,171.74

The volume of receipts was nearly stationary for the first three years, notwithstanding the growth of population, but for the last three years, with the return of prosperity and business activity, the revenues show a great and steady gain. The annual deficit, which mounted up in large ratio, reaching an increase of 78 per cent in 1894, is again rapidly declining. The expenditures show a regular increment year by year, varying not much from $3,000,000. This is inevitable with the extension of the service, unless there are directions in which retrenchment could be enforced without crippling the work. But in prosperous times the increase of revenues more than keeps pace with the increase of disbursements and steadily advances the service toward a sounder basis.

NOTE.—The apparent decrease in the per capita of gold coin in circulation in 1900 is due to the large increase of gold certificates, which increased from 43 cents per capita in 1899 to $2.58 per capita in 1900.

SECTION No. II.—A DISCUSSION OF THE EFFECT OF HIGH AND LOW TARIFFS UPON THE MANUFACTURERS AND WORKINGMEN OF THE COUNTRY; WITH STATISTICAL EVIDENCE ATTACHED.

Let us next consider the effect of the protective system upon our manufacturing industries. The most satisfactory way of measuring the growth of these various industries is through the census figures. These, however, are gathered but once in ten years, and the latest details of this character, therefore, relate to conditions in the year 1890. This material has been so thoroughly discussed from time to time that the facts relative to the wonderful progress in manufacturing, as shown by the decennial inquiries, are already well known to the people.

The census of 1890 showed the number of employees in the manufacturing industries of the United States in that year to be 4,712,622, against 2,732,595 in 1880, an increase of 1,980,000, or nearly 75 per cent, and the wages in 1890 were $2,283,216,529, against $947,953,795, an increase of $1,335,000,000, or 141 per cent. It is particularly interesting to note that the per cent of increase in wages paid in 1890 was nearly double the per cent of increase in number of persons employed, thus showing an average increase in the individual earnings of employees during the decade, as well as a great increase in the number employed, while the value of the products manufactured was in 1890 $9,327,437,283, against $5,369,579,199 in 1880—an increase of $3,957,858,084, or nearly 75 per cent. The population during the same period increased 25 per cent, while manufactures increased 75 per cent, thus indicating that the manufacturers were in 1890 supplying a much larger proportion of the consumption of the people of the United States than in 1880. During the same time importations of articles manufactured ready for consumption increased nearly $24,000,000, or 17.5 per cent, while population was increasing 25 per cent and domestic manufactures 75 per cent, thus indicating that during the decade for which we have accurate figures of both domestic manufactures and imports the manufacturers of the United States rapidly increased the proportion which they were supplying of the home consumption of manufactured goods.

GROWTH OF MANUFACTURES, 1890 TO 1900.

There are three methods by which it is practicable to measure in some degree the growth of domestic manufactures in the decade just ending, and for which there are as yet no census figures. One of these is to study the increase in the importation of the classes of raw material which manufacturers must use. While our manufacturers naturally utilize home materials as far as practicable in their industries, there are certain materials which they require which are not produced at home, while in others the supply from home production is not sufficient to meet their requirements. In crude rubber and silk, for instance, all of the materials utilized must be imported, while in the vegetable fibers, such as hemp, flax, and certain high grades of cotton, hides and skins, and other articles of this class, they are compelled to draw a part of their supplies from abroad. By following the course of importation of these "manufacturers' materials," or, to use the technical term of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, "articles in a crude condition, which enter into the various processes of domestic industry" it is practicable to measure in some degree the activities of our manufacturers since 1890.

INCREASED IMPORTS OF MANUFACTURERS' MATERIALS.

A table (No. 1) printed on another page shows the importation of this class of manufacturers' materials, the importation of manufactured goods, and the exportation of manufactured goods. It will be seen from an examination of this table that manufacturers' materials imported in 1890 amounted to $178,435,512, or 23 per cent of the total importations, while in the fiscal year 1900 the importations of this same class amounted to $310,000,000 and formed 35.8 per cent of the total importations. It is thus apparent that our manufacturers are to-day drawing from abroad fully twice as much material for use in manufacturing as they did a decade ago, since the actual value is nearly double that of 1890, while it is a well-known fact that prices of manufacturers' materials are now much less than those of a decade ago and that a given number of dollars now represents a larger quantity than at that time. It is also gratifying to note that this class of material, that required by manufacturers, now forms nearly 36 per cent of the total imports, against 23 per cent in 1890.

INCREASED EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURES.

Still another evidence of the activity of manufacturers is found in a column of the same table (No. 1), where the values of manufactures exported is shown. In the fiscal year 1890 exports of domestic manufactures amounted to but $151,000,000 and in the fiscal year 1900 to $425,000,000—an increase of nearly 200 per cent.

DECREASED IMPORTS OF MANUFACTURES.

Meantime, importation of manufactures has been greatly reduced, having been, in 1890, $346,678,654, and forming 44.8 per cent of the total imports, while in 1899 it was but $259,862,721 and formed but 37.9 per cent of the total imports.

Thus, in the study of imports of manufacturers' materials and the imports and exports of manufactured goods all the available data show a phenomenal increase in our manufacturing industries during the decade 1890–1900, in which we must depend chiefly upon these data in determining the growth of manufactures. A study of the period shows, first, an increase of nearly 100 per cent in imports of manufacturers' materials; second, an increase of nearly 200 per cent in the exports of manufactured goods, and third, a decrease of 25 per cent in the imports of manufactured goods; while manufacturers' materials form every year a larger proportion of the total imports, and manufactured goods form every year a smaller proportion of the imports; and, on the other hand, manufactured goods form every year a larger proportion of the total exports.

EFFECT OF WILSON TARIFF ON MANUFACTURERS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES.

Before leaving this statement, which shows the imports of manufacturers' materials and the imports and exports of finished manufactures, it is proper to call attention to the disastrous effect of the low tariff of 1894–1897 upon the manufacturing industries as measured by the imports of raw materials and the imports and exports of finished products. It will be seen that, despite the claim of the supporters of the Wilson law, that their measure would especially benefit manufacturers by giving them free raw material, the importation of raw material in the years ending June 30, 1895, 1896, 1897, all of which were under the low tariff, averaged less than those of the fiscal year 1893, all of which was under the McKinley protective tariff and most of it under President Harrison, and that the years ending June 30, 1899 and 1900, under the Dingley law, show a larger importation than that of any year under the Wilson low tariff, the importation of raw material in the year 1900 being 50 per cent greater than the annual average importation of raw material under the Wilson law, and the share which raw material formed of the total imports was, in the year 1900, 36 per cent, against an average of 26 per cent during the entire period that the Wilson law was in operation.

In exports of manufactures the increase under Dingley protection over that of Wilson low tariff, with its enforced idleness of factories, is equally striking. The exports of manufactures in the three fiscal years during which the Wilson law was in operation averaged $230,000,000 per annum, while for the year 1900, as already indicated, they were $425,000,000, an increase of 61 per cent. Still another important indication of the prosperity or depression of manufactures under protection and low tariffs, respectively, is found in a comparison of the imports of manufactures with the exports of manufactures. A comparison of the figures in the import and export columns of manufactures in Table No. 1 shows that the exports of manufactures exceeded the imports of manufactures in the fiscal year 1898, both of which were under the Dingley tariff law, while in preceding years imports of manufactures had always exceeded exports of that class of merchandise, the reversed condition being due to the steady reduction of imports and the steady increase of exports of manufactured goods.

Some indication of the growth in exports of manufactures by great classes is found in Table No. 2, which shows the exports of manufactures of iron and steel, copper, agricultural implements, leather and its manufactures, etc., in the fiscal year 1897, the last year under the Wilson law, compared with the fiscal years 1898–1900, all of which were under the Dingley law and all of which show a marked increase in exports of manufactures as compared with the last year of the Wilson law. A further study of the growth of exports of manufactures during a longer period is found in Table No. 3, which shows the exports of principal manufactured articles in 1868, 1878, 1898, and 1899.

Still another table, No. 4, shows the exports of the principal manufactures in each year from 1890 to 1899, and gives an opportunity to study the relative growth under low and protective tariffs, respectively. The fiscal years 1890 to 1894 were under protective tariffs; those of 1895 to 1897 under a low tariff, and those of 1898 and 1899 were again under a protective tariff.

An opportunity for comparison of the imports and exports of manufactures in each year from 1888 to 1899 is given by Table No. 5, which shows that the exports of manufactures have more than trebled during that period, while imports of manufactures have fallen off 20 per cent.

OUR GROWTH IN MANUFACTURING COMPARED WITH THAT OF FREE-TRADE ENGLAND, AS INDICATED BY COAL CONSUMPTION.

Three great industries—coal, iron, and tin plate—have made especial progress under the development of our manufacturing system, coal production being of itself a measure of the development of manufacturing, since coal enters so largely into that industry. Table No. 6 shows the growth in coal production in free-trade Great Britain compared with that of the protection countries—United States, Germany, and France; also the total coal production of the world and the per cent supplied by the United States at quinquennial periods from 1868 to 1898.

It will be seen by an examination of this table that the coal production of the United Kingdom during the thirty years under consideration, during all of which time that country has been under a low tariff, only increased from 115,000,000 tons to 226,000,000 tons, or a little less than 100 per cent, while Germany, which adopted a protective tariff about the middle of the period under consideration, has increased her coal outpnt from 36,000,000 tons to 144,000,000 tons—a growth of 300 per cent. France, also a protection country, increased her output from 14,697,686 tons in 1868 to 35,748,644 tons in 1898, an increase of 150 per cent, while the United States, which has been constantly under a protective tariff law during that period (with the exception of three years), increased her output from 31,648,960 tons in 1868 to 258,539,650 tons in 1899—an increase of over 700 per cent. It must be remembered, in addition to this, that the United States has consumed in her factories, on her railways, and among her people practically all of this enormous increase, our exports of coal averaging less than 3 per cent of our total production, while Great Britain has been for years a large exporter of coal.

EFFECT OF THE WILSON LOW TARIFF ON THE COAL INDUSTRY AND ON LABOR EMPLOYED AT THE MINES.

Another table, No. 7, shows the details of coal production in the United States from 1880 to 1899, indicating the quantity mined, value of the product, the price per ton at the mines, the number of employees, and the average number of days in which they were employed in each year, the imports and exports of coal and the per cent of the world's production supplied by the United States.

An examination of this table will show the effect of the low-tariff period upon the coal production and coal producers—the workingmen in the mines of the United States numbering a half million toilers. The production in 1894, the year in which the low tariff was enacted, fell to 170,000,000 tons as against 182,000,000 in the preceding year, and the value of the product fell from $208,000,000 in 1893 to $186,000,000 in 1894, a loss in a single year of $22,000,000 in this one article in which labor forms so important a part of its value.

A study of the number of men employed at the mines shows little change during the low-tariff period; but an examination of the column showing the number of days in which they were active discloses the effect of the low tariff upon the laboring men in that great industry. In 1891, under protection and the activity of the great industries of the country, the average number of days in which the men in the coal mines of the United States were employed was 232. In 1893, the year in which a low-tariff President and Congress came into power, the number of days in which the miners were employed dropped to 201, and in 1894 dropped again to 178; while in 1897, the last year of the Wilson tariff, the number was but 179, a reduction of 20 per cent in the time in which they were employed as compared with 1891. The figures for 1898 show a marked increase in the number of days employed and an increase of 38,000 men as compared with 1893; while it is apparent that the figures for 1899 will, when completed, show a much larger increase, since the product in 1899 was 39,000,000 tons greater than in 1898, and 85,000,000 greater than in 1894, an increase of nearly 20 per cent in production and 25 per cent in value of the product.

The growth in the production of iron and steel in the United States from 1880 to 1899 is shown in a table (No. 8). Pig-iron production in the United States has increased from 3,835,191 tons in 1880 to 13,620,703 tons in 1899, which year placed the United States at the head of the iron and steel producing nations of the world. An examination of this table will show the effect of the Democratic low-tariff period—1893–1896—upon this great industry. The pig-iron production of 1892 was 9,157,000 tons. In 1893, the year of the inauguration of Democracy and low tariff, it fell to 7,124,000 tons; in 1894 to 6,657,000 tons, and in 1896 was but 8,623,000 tons. The year 1897, in which protection was again adopted, showed an increase to 9,652,680 tons, and in 1899 an increase to 13,620,703 tons. Thus the fall from the last year of President Harrison to 1894, the year in which the low tariff was enacted, was 2,499,622 tons, or 27 per cent, while the increase of 1899 over 1896, the last full year under a low tariff, was 4,997,576 tons, or 57 per cent.

DEVELOPMENT OF IRON AND STEEL MANUFACTURE UNDER PROTECTION—INCREASED PRODUCTION AND LOWER PRICES.

The reduction of prices noted in the column showing the price of steel rails during the period under consideration is also extremely suggestive, answering, as it does, the assertion that sufficient competition to keep prices at a minimum can only be obtained by a low tariff. It will be seen from an examination of this column that the average annual price of steel rails during the period of protection from 1880 to 1893 fell from $67.50, in 1880, to $28.12, in 1893. In 1894, the year in which the low tariff was adopted, there was a fall of $4 per ton, but the price returned to $28 in 1896—dropping to $18.75 in 1897, the year in which the protective tariff was again adopted, $17.62 in 1898, and returned in 1899 to $28.12, the figure at which it stood in 1893 and 1896.

Another illustration of the tremendous growth of our iron and steel industry during this long protection period is found in the columns of this table, showing the imports and exports of manufactures of iron and steel in each year from 1880 to 1898. It will be seen that under this long period of protection and the development of the manufacturing industries which accompanied it, the imports of iron and steel fell from $71,266,699 to $13,100,440, and that the manufacturers, besides supplying the enormous addition to the home market which this reduced importation implies, also increased their exportation of iron and steel manufactures from $14,716,524 in 1880 to $93,716,031 in 1899, and in the year 1900 the total will amount to $120,000,000, or more than eight times that of 1880.

OUR GROWTH IN IRON AND STEEL MANUFACTURING, COMPARED WITH THAT OF FREE-TRADE ENGLAND.

The relative growth of the iron and steel industries in the protection and nonprotection countries, respectively, is another illustration of the advantages of the protective system. A table (No. 9) shows the production of pig iron in free-trade Great Britain and protection United States, Germany, France, and Russia in each year since 1870. It will be seen that Great Britain, whose fame as a producer of iron and steel is world-wide, has only increased her output during that time from 5,963,515 tons in 1870 to 9,305,319 tons in 1899, an increase of 56 per cent, while France, under a protective tariff, has increased her output during the same time from 1,178,114 tons to 2,567,388 tons, an increase of 117 per cent, and Russia, also a protection country, has increased her output from 359,531 tons in 1870 to 2,223,469 in 1898, an increase of 520 per cent. Germany, under vigorous protection, has increased her output of pig iron from 1,391,124 tons in 1870 to 8,142,017 tons in 1899, an increase of 485 per cent, while the United States, with a thoroughly protective tariff, increased her output from 1,665,179 tons in 1870 to 13,620,703 tons in 1899, a gain of 11,956,000 tons, or 718 per cent.

Attention is also called to the table (No. 10) which shows the relative production of Bessemer steel ingots and rails in the United States and in Great Britain since 1868, in which it will be seen that the growth in the United States has been enormous as compared with that of free-trade Great Britain, the increase in ingots in the United States being from 7,589 tons in 1868 to 7,586,354 tons in 1899, while that of Great Britain increased from 110,000 tons in 1868 to 1,825,074 in 1899. In Bessemer steel rails the growth in production has been equally striking. Still another table (No. 11) compares the production of crude steel of all kinds in the United States and in Great Britain from 1875 to 1899, showing that the increase in the United States has been from 198,796 tons in 1873 to 10,639,857 tons in 1899, while that of Great Britain was from 653,500 tons in 1873 to 5,000,000 tons in 1899.

TIN PLATE—HOME MANUFACTURES INCREASED, IMPORTS DECREASED, AND PRICES REDUCED BY PROTECTION.

Still another striking evidence of the growth of our manufactures under protection is found in the facts presented by a table, No. 12, which shows imports, home manufactures, and prices of tin plate in the United States under the protection established by the McKinley law. Importation of tin plate, before the establishment of the protective duty, ranged in the vicinity of 650,000,000 pounds, the amount of money sent annually abroad for this article being over $20,000,000. The McKinley law, which went into effect October 1, 1890, placed a thoroughly protective duty on tin plate, of which there were no manufactures in this country at that time. By 1892 the production amounted to over 13,000,000 pounds, by 1894 to 139,000,000 pounds, by 1896 to 307,000,000 pounds, by 1898 to 681,000,000 pounds, and in 1899 to 791,000,000, or more than was ever imported in a single year except that of 1891, in which there was an excessive importation in order to evade the duties established by the McKinley Act. Meantime importations have fallen until they amounted to but 108,000,000 pounds in 1899, and the amount of money sent abroad for this article was but $2,613,000, against $21,222,653 in 1889.

RECENT INCREASE IN PRICE OF TIN PLATE MUCH LESS THAN IN THAT OF THE RAW MATERIAL USED.

An examination of the column in Table No. 12 showing the price of Bessemer steel plates in the New York markets since the establishment of the industry in the United States also reveals some interesting facts. It shows that the price in 1893, the second year of production under the protective tariff, was $5.04 per box; that it fell steadily year by year until it reached $3.52 per box in 1896, a reduction of 30 per cent. In 1899 the average price was $4.51 per box, and on April 20, 1900, $4.84 per box. This increase from $3.52 per box in 1896 to $4.85 in 1900 has been the subject of much criticism, and led to a charge that the increase was an arbitrary one caused by combinations of the tin-plate manufacturers of the country. An examination of the accompanying columns, however, which show the prices of tin and steel billets, the chief constituents of tin plate, discloses some interesting facts. It will be seen that Straits tin increased from 13.3 cents per pound in New York in 1896 to 31 cents in 1900, the period in which the advance in tin plate occurred, while the price of steel billets increased from $15.08 per ton in 1897 to $37 on April 20, 1900, thus showing an increase of more than 125 per cent in the articles entering into the manufacture of tin plate, while the advance in the price of the finished article was but 38 per cent.

The growth of the cotton manufacturing industry, which has already been referred to, is also illustrated by a table (No. 13), which shows the cotton production and manufacture in the United States, the reduction in imports, and increase in domestic manufactures and exports from 1883 to 1899. It will be seen that the number of bales taken by Northern mills increased from 1,759,000 in 1883 to 2,217,000 in 1899, and those of Southern mills from 313,000 in 1883 to 1,415,000 in 1899, making a total increase from 2,072,000 to 3,632,000 during the time under consideration. Meantime the exportations of manufactures of cotton increased from $13,721,605 in 1883 to $23,566,914 in 1899, and imports fell from $38,026,044 in 1883 to $32,054,434 in 1899. An important fact as to the effect of the low tariff upon the manufacturing industries is shown by a study of the consumption of cotton by the mills of the United States year by year during that part of the period under consideration. In 1892, the last year under President Harrison, the number of bales taken by the mills of the United States was 2,856,000. In 1893 the number dropped to 2,375,000 and in 1894 to 2,291,000. In 1896 the number was 2,505,000, and in 1898, the first full year under the Dingley protective tariff, it increased to 3,465,000, and in 1899 was 3,632,000, an increase of 60 per cent in 1899 as compared with 1894.

Certainly the manufacturers and the millions who are benefited by their prosperity, have no cause of dissatisfaction with the Dingley law, since the exportation of manufactures has increased under it while the importation of manufactures was decreasing. The following figures show the exportation of the leading manufactures from the United States in the first and second years of the Dingley law, compared with the last year of the Wilson law:

SECTION No. III.—A DISCUSSION OF THE EFFECT OF HIGH AND LOW TARIFFS UPON THE FARMERS OF THE COUNTRY; WITH STATISTICAL EVIDENCE ATTACHED.

The farmer has shared with the business man, the manufacturer and his workmen, the railways and their employees, and the various classes of our citizens, in the general prosperity following the return to protection. His markets have increased both at home and abroad, and with this increase have come advanced prices for what he sells and advanced value of that which he retains. Not only do the figures of exports show a marked increase in his receipts from abroad, but in the home market, by far the most important to him, prices have advanced, consumption and demand increased, and with these has come prosperity to this greatest class of producers.

A table, No. 1, which is given on another page, gives the rates of duty on the principal farm products under each tariff since 1883. It will be seen that on all farm products the rate of duty was reduced by the Wilson tariff, and in most cases that of the McKinley tariff was restored by the Dingley tariff. This increase has had its effect in checking the importation of manufactured articles of farm production, and thus has saved to the farmers a large share of the home market.

DECREASED IMPORTATION OF FARM PRODUCTS UNDER THE M'KINLEY AND DINGLEY LAWS.

A table, No. 2, prepared by the Department of Agriculture, shows the imports of agricultural products from 1894 to 1899. It will be seen that there was a marked decrease in the importation of farm products immediately following the repeal of the Wilson law, which occurred in July, 1897, the imports of the year ending June 30, 1897, having thus come entirely under the Wilson Act. The total imports of agricultural products, as classified by the Department of Agriculture, was, in the fiscal year 1897, $400,871,868; in 1898, under the Dingley law, it dropped to $314,291,796, and in 1899 was $355,514,881. This gives an average reduction of over $60,000,000 a year in agricultural imports in 1898 and 1899 as compared with 1897.

A SINGLE EXAMPLE.

Many single instances might be cited to show the reduction in individual classes of articles, but as a single example will be all that is required for this purpose, the comparatively unimportant item of eggs is selected. An examination of the import figures of the Bureau of Statistics, given in Table 3, shows that prior to the enactment of the McKinley law, which placed a duty upon eggs entering the United States from abroad, the valuation of the importations ranged from two million to two and a half million dollars per annum, being in the fiscal year 1889 $2,418,926 and in the year 1890 $2,074,912. Immediately following the enactment of that law the importations fell to less than any former figure, and in the year 1894, the last year of the McKinley law, amounted to only $199,536, or but 10 per cent of the average in the years preceding its enactment. The Wilson law, however, reduced the duty on eggs from 5 cents to 3 cents per dozen, and in 1895, the first year of its operation, the importations increased to $324,133 in value, following the general depression in 1896–1897. The Dingley law restored the rate of duty to 5 cents per dozen, and in 1898 the value of importations again dropped to $8,078, and in the fiscal year of 1900 averaged about $1,700 per month, or a trifle above $20,000 per year, as against an average of over $2,000,000 per annum before a duty was placed against this article of foreign production.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE HOME MARKET UNDER PROTECTION.

It is in the improvement of the home market, however, that the farmer's chief benefit from protection is found. With general prosperity in manufacturing, in mining, in transportation, and in all lines of business, the consumption among all classes of consumers is increased, while with the decreased activity, silent mills and factories, employees on half pay or without earnings, the decrease in consumption is very great and the farmer thus becomes the chief sufferer. This fact is clearly shown by Table No. 4, taken from the Statistical Abstract, which shows the amount of certain articles retained for consumption for each individual in the United States for various years from 1868 to 1898. This table, which has been published for a long term of years, is a generally accepted authority on matters of this character. A single example, that of wheat, will be sufficient to illustrate the effect of the depression or prosperity accompanying low or protective tariffs upon home consumption.

Prior to the election of 1892, and the depression which immediately followed it, the amount of wheat retained for consumption was about 6 bushels per capita. On some occasions it exceeded that figure, being in 1883 and 1885 more than 6¼ bushels per capita, and seldom falling below 5¼ bushels. In the year 1893, however, during the depression which immediately followed the election of a Democratic President and a free-trade Congress, the per capita wheat consumption fell to 4.85 bushels, in 1894 to 3.41 bushels, and in 1897 was 3.88 bushels. No year in the entire term covered by this table shows so small a consumption of wheat per capita as does either of these years 1894 and 1897, for it should be kept in mind that the Wilson tariff was not repealed until after the close of the fiscal year 1897. Immediately following the repeal of that act there was a marked increase in the per capita consumption, and in 1899 it had again about reached its normal figure, being for that year 5.95 bushels per capita.

Another example may be found in the amount of cotton retained for consumption under protective and low tariffs, respectively. In the years 1891 and 1892 the amount of domestic cotton retained for consumption was, respectively, 22 and 24 pounds per capita, while in 1893 it fell to 17 pounds per capita. In 1894 it was 16 pounds, and in 1896 and 1897, 18¼ pounds, increasing, however, in 1898, under protection, to 25.2 pounds, and in 1899 to 27.1 pounds, or 50 per cent more than the average during the entire Democratic free-trade term from 1893 to 1897.

VALUE OF FARM PRODUCTS UNDER LOW AND PROTECTIVE TARIFFS, RESPECTIVELY.

It is not necessary to multiply illustrations to show the reduced consuming power of our people under the depression which accompanied low tariffs, but some figures, published in the Statistical Abstract and others prepared by the Department of Agriculture, showing the value of crops and of farm animals in each year during a long term of years, indicate something of the tremendous losses to the farmer which accompanied and was the legitimate fruit of the low-tariff experiment of 1893–1897.

SHEEP AND WOOL VALUES REDUCED.

Take first the single item of wool. The Wilson law, as is well known, gave the country in the item of wool an example of the effect of genuine Simon Pure Democratic free trade. It was to the free-trade mind the one redeeming feature of that act whose feeble attempts at retaining a shadow of protection was denounced as an evidence of "party perfidy and dishonor." Under that act importations of foreign wool, which had never but once reached so much as 150,000,000 pounds, were in its very first year more than 200,000,000 pounds, and in its closing year exceeded 350,000,000 pounds. As a consequence, wool fell nearly 50 per cent in value, the October price of washed clothing Ohio fleece wool, medium, dropping from 33 cents per pound in 1892 to 19 cents in 1896, but increasing to 29 cents in 1897, immediately following the restoration of the protective tariff under the Dingley law, and to 33.5 cents in the month of October, 1899, as shown by a table, No. 5, which gives also the imports of wool during a long term of years.

Another table, No. 6, which is compiled from the Statistical Abstract of the United States, gives the home production of wool, the average price per pound, the per cent which the foreign product forms of the total wool consumption in the United States, the number of sheep on farms and their value, also the value of import of wool and wool manufactures in each year from 1875 to 1899. An examination of this table shows that foreign wool, which, under protective tariffs, formed from 16 to 33 per cent of the domestic consumption, increased to 40 per cent in 1845, 46 per cent in 1896, and 57 per cent in 1897. As a consequence of this increased importation of foreign wools and the accompanying reduction of nearly one-half in price the number and value of sheep on farms was greatly reduced, the number of sheep on farms in 1893 being 47,273,553, and their value $125,909,264. By 1896 the number had fallen to 38,208,783 and the value to $35,167,735, the actual value having thus been reduced one-half, meaning a loss in sheep alone of more than $60,000,000 to the farmer, while the annual loss in his wool clip during that time was correspondingly reduced. Another effect of the rates of duty on wool and woolens is shown by the columns stating the value of imports of wool and manufactures of wool. The value of the foreign wool imported prior to 1893 had not for many years reached so much as $20,000,000; but in 1895 it had exceeded $25,000,000; in 1896 exceeded $32,000,000, and in 1897, the last year of the existence of the Wilson law, was $53,243,191, while imports of woolen goods, which in 1892 amounted to $35,000,000, were in 1896 $53,000,000, and in the fiscal year 1897 $49,000,000.

VALUE OF FARM ANIMALS REDUCED BY LOW TARIFF, BUT RESTORED BY PROTECTION.

It is not in sheep alone that the value of farm animals was affected by the low-tariff law and the depression which accompanied it. Another table, No. 7, shows the value of the various classes of farm animals as reported by the Department of Agriculture in each year from 1870 to 1900. It shows that the value of horses on farms fell from more than $1,500,000,000 on January 1, 1892, to $500,000,000 in 1896 and $452,000,000 on January 1, 1897, a loss of $540,000,000 in this one item during the five years under consideration. In mules the value fell from $175,000,000 in 1892 to $92,000,000 in 1897; swine, from $241,000,000 in 1892 to $166,000,000 in 1897, and of all farm animals the value fell from $2,461,755,698 on January 1, 1892, to $1,655,414,612 on January 1, 1897, a loss of $806,341,086, while the figures for January 1, 1900, show that the two-billion-dollar line has again been crossed by the restoration of values accompanying the Dingley protective tariff and the prosperity which it brought to the farmer by increased home consumption as well as increased foreign markets. The American Agriculturist, a well-known publication, in a recent number, says that the livestock of the country in 1900 is worth $700,000,000 more than it was during the years of depression under the low-tariff act.

VALUE OF CROPS FELL UNDER LOW TARIFF—RESTORED BY PROTECTION.

Nor is it in farm animals alone, however, that the farmer was the loser under low tariff, or the gainer again under protection. Another table (No. 8), also prepared by the Department of Agriculture, shows a value of various articles of farm production, such as corn, wheat, oats, rye, barley, tobacco, cotton, potatoes, etc., in each year from 1866 to 1899. As has already been pointed out, much of the value of farm crops is due to the home demand, and this home demand is determined by the earnings and consequent purchasing power of individuals, and their earnings and purchasing power are in turn dependent upon the prosperity and activity of manufactures and business generally.

It will be seen by an examination of this table that the value of the corn production in the United States fell from $642,000,000 in 1892 to $491,000,000 in 1896; that of wheat from $513,000,000 in 1891 to $225,000,000 in 1894 and $237,000,000 in 1895, returning to $428,000,000 in 1897; oats fell in value from $209,000,000 in 1892 to $132,000,000 in 1896; rye, from $15,000,000 in 1892 to less than $10,000,000 in 1896; barley, from $45,000,000 in 1891 to $22,000,000 in 1896; tobacco, from $47,000,000 in 1892 to $27,000,000 in 1895; cotton, from $326,000,000 in 1892 to $260,000,000 in 1896, and potatoes, from $103,000,000 in 1892 to $72,000,000 in 1896, while in all these cases the figures for later years show a marked increase in values over those under the Wilson Act.

TESTIMONY OF A WELL-KNOWN AGRICULTURAL AUTHORITY.

On this general question of the value of crops the American Agriculturist says that—

> The value of staple crops in 1899 was valued at $400,000,000 more than under the low-tariff depression, and other crops aggregated an increase of more than $200,000,000 in value, or 25 per cent gain, as compared with the period of depression, including 1894, 1895, and 1896.

One other feature of the improved condition of the farmer is pointed out by the American Agriculturist, and this relates to value of agricultural real estate which, it says, has more than recovered in value and is now worth $1,220,000,000 more than it was a single year ago, while the percentage of farms occupied by owners is, according to careful estimates, which it has made, now larger than ever before, while the number of farms under mortgage has materially decreased. The amount of mortgages on farms occupied by their owners is estimated at about $300,000,000 less than at the beginning of the decade.

Mortgages—

> now average only about 27 per cent of the value of the farms they are on, the rate of interest has declined, and the great bulk of mortgages now in force were incurred to buy the farm or to improve it.

EVERY STATE SUFFERED UNDER LOW TARIFF.

To those who desire to trace carefully the course of prices by the various articles and in each section of the country during the years 1892 to 1899, another table (No. 9) will offer this opportunity. It will be seen that every State shared in the depression, as did also every article of farm production.

RELATIVE FALL IN PRICES OF ARTICLES OF FARM PRODUCTION AND FARM CONSUMPTION, 1870 TO 1899—FARMERS HAVE BEEN GAINERS—A LESS REDUCTION IN PRICES OF ARTICLES PRODUCED THAN IN ARTICLES REQUIRED FOR CONSUMPTION.

On this question of prices of farm products several other tables will prove especially interesting to those desiring to make a careful study of the subject. A table (No. 10) shows the average farm price for the principal articles of farm production in each year from 1870 to 1899; also the wholesale price in New York of the principal articles of farm consumption during the same period. This table is compiled by the Bureau of Statistics from the reports of the Department of Agriculture and from the Aldrich report on prices, supplemented by the reports of the Department of Labor on prices since 1890.

A careful study of this table shows that the prices of articles consumed on the farm have fallen with greater rapidity than those of the articles produced on the farm. Wheat, for instance, fell in price from 94.4 cents per bushel in 1870 to 58.4 cents in 1899, a decline of 37 per cent, while sugar, one of the most important classes of articles purchased by farmers for consumption, fell from 13.2 cents per pound in 1871 to 4.9 cents in 1899, a decrease of 63 per cent. Corn fell from 49.4 cents per bushel in 1870 to 30.2 cents in 1899, a decrease of 39 per cent, while sheetings fell from 14¼ cents per yard in 1870 to 5.2 cents in 1899, a reduction of 64 per cent. Oats fell from 39 cents in 1870 to 25 cents in 1899, a reduction of 36 per cent, while drillings fell from 14.9 cents in 1870 to 5.1 cents per yard in 1899, a decrease of 65 per cent.

Horses, which probably show a greater fall in value than any other article of farm production, owing to the substitution of steam and electricity for the class of transportation of which those animals formed so important a factor, show a fall in average farm price from $81.38 per head in 1870 to $37.40 in 1899, a decline of 54 per cent, while mineral oil shows a fall from 30.5 cents per gallon in 1870 to an average of 5.8 cents in 1899, a reduction of 80 per cent in cost. Sheep show an average price per head in 1870 of $2.29 and a fall to $1.58 in 1895 under the low tariff, but a return to $2.75 in 1899, the average value of sheep being higher in 1899 than in any year since 1875. Swine show a fall in the average value on the farm of from $7.03 per head in 1870 to $4.40 in 1899, a reduction of 37 per cent, while fine salt shows a fall of from $2.15 per barrel in 1870 to 65 cents per barrel in 1899, a reduction of 70 per cent.

Milch cows show a fall of from $39.12 per head, average farm price, in 1870 to $27.66 in 1899, a fall of 29 per cent, while the average wholesale price of shoes (men's brogans) is quoted at $1.50 per pair in 1870 and 93 cents in 1899, a fall of 38 per cent. Potatoes show an average farm price of 72 cents per bushel in 1870 and 43.4 cents per bushel in 1899, a fall of 40 per cent, while bags show an average price of 36.2 cents each in 1870 and 14.3 cents in 1899, a drop of 60 per cent. Hay shows a fall from $13.82 per ton, the average farm price in 1870, to $7.27 in 1899, a fall of 44 per cent, while scythes are quoted at $12 per dozen in 1870 and $3.74 in 1899, a reduction in price of 69 per cent. Cotton shows an average farm price in 1871 of 16.9 cents, but in 1872 it was 22.1 cents. Comparing 1899, when the price was 6.88 cents, with 1872, the higher of the two former years under consideration, we find that the fall in price is 69 per cent, while cotton tickings have declined in price from 28.6 cents per yard in 1870 to 7 cents per yard in 1899, a fall of 75½ per cent.

FREIGHT RATES HAVE FALLEN MORE RAPIDLY THAN FARM PRICES.

One further fact of interest to the farmers is that freight rates have fallen with greater rapidity than prices of farm production. Table No. 11, besides showing the average annual prices of farm production and farm consumption, presents columns showing the average annual freight rate on wheat from Chicago to New York by rail; also the rates by canal from Buffalo to New York. The average rate by all rail in 1870 was 33.3 cents per bushel, and in 1899 11.1 cents, a fall of 66⅔ per cent; while the rate from Buffalo to New York by canal fell from 11.2 cents per bushel in 1870 to 3 cents per bushel in 1899, a reduction of 73 per cent. On freight rates from the Pacific coast to New York the rates on canned goods in carload lots show a fall from $3.66 per hundredweight in 1870 to 75 cents per hundredweight in 1897, the latest year for which this information is available, a reduction of 80 per cent.

On this question of freight rates Tables 12, 13, 14, and 15 are also instructive. They show that the freight rates on live cattle from Chicago to New York fell from 55 cents per 100 pounds in 1880 to 25 cents in 1899; hogs, from 43 cents to 25 cents; sheep, from 65 cents to 25 cents, and dressed beef, from 88 cents to 40 cents, while refrigerator car rates on dressed hogs fell from 59 cents in 1887 to 40 cents in 1899. Freight rates on wheat from New York to Europe also show a marked reduction, as will be seen by the Tables Nos. 16, 17, and 18.

The above statements of prices on farms and in the New York markets, also those relating to freights, it is proper to add, are officially compiled by the Statistical Bureaus of the Agricultural and Treasury Departments except where otherwise specified.

PROSPERITY AND THE SILVER QUESTION.

The facts which I have cited, Mr. Speaker, showing prosperity in every branch of industry, have an important relation to the silver question, which formed so prominent a feature of the campaign of 1896 and which the Democratic leaders promise to again urge in the campaign of 1900. We were told in that campaign that the cause of the depression which then existed in every industry was not the tariff, but the lack of sufficient currency, and that this could only be supplied by the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. The country rejected free coinage and adopted a protective tariff, and the prosperity which has come both in increased business and increased currency fully disproves the Democratic claim that the depression which then existed was due to the necessity for free coinage of silver, and at the same time sustains the claim of Republicans that it was due to the low tariff then existing.

TABLE No. 3.—Importation of eggs, as affected by the tariff.

Prior to the enactment of the McKinley law, in 1890, there was no duty on eggs, but the framers of that measure, seeing that the importation of this class of farm production had become large and was constantly growing, placed a duty of 5 cents per dozen on eggs. The framers of the Wilson law saw that the effect of this duty had been such that they dared not entirely remove it, so they merely reduced the rate to 3 cents per dozen. The Dingley Act restored the McKinley law rate of 5 cents per dozen.

Let us now see to what extent the McKinley and Dingley tariffs by putting a duty on eggs protected the American farmer's egg basket; whether or not they checked the importation of foreign eggs. Here are the figures for sixteen years:

NOTE BY MESSRS. MAUGER & AVERY.—This table exhibits in a concise form the prices of the three grades of a standard domestic fleece wool in the seaboard markets at the beginning of each quarter. In its present shape it is deemed to be intelligible to all interested in wool. In the special features of character and condition, "washed Ohio fleece wool" is less subject to variation than any other description, and thus is more a basis of value than any other class. Wool, owing to its wide variety, difference in character and condition, and liability to shrink in cleaning, is precluded from speculative operations which apply to products which may be dealt in as "futures." For these reasons the prices of wool are not liable to the same changes as cotton, wheat, etc.

SPEECH

OF

HON. E. R. RIDGELY,

OF KANSAS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 31, 1900.

The House having under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States and the bill (H. R. 10539) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890—

Mr. RIDGELY said:

Mr. SPEAKER: By a special rule adopted by the Republican majority of this House, we are permitted to discuss but not to amend this proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Republicans say, "Indorse this amendment just as we dictate, or reject it if you dare." For one, I shall reject it, and in the brief time allotted I shall state reasons for my negative vote. First, let me read the proposed amendment:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. All powers conferred by this article shall extend to the several States, the Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory under the sovereignty and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise.

The several States may continue to exercise such power in any manner not in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

Passing section 1, which clearly exposes a theoretical dilemma into which the Republicans have fallen—namely, by their absurd theory that the Constitution (which is the people's limit upon Congressional power, as well as upon the powers of the judiciary and executive branches of our Government) does not apply to all parts of the nation unless Congress sees fit to permit. This ridiculous assumption is too absurd for serious consideration. It will serve, however, to emphasize the straits to which modern Republicanism is driven in its efforts to establish imperialism by annulling the Constitution at will. It also exposes a fit of generosity in permitting this new section to apply coextensive with the sovereignty of the Government. But we may ask, Why leave all the balance of the Constitution limited in its territorial jurisdiction? This proposition is too silly to dignify with discussion.

Section 2, however, is not so harmless. If adopted, it will place in Congress the most sweeping and unlimited power possible to express in four short lines of type—the power to define, regulate, and destroy all organizations, whether in the form of corporations or otherwise. This is a sweeping power, and might be abused to the extent of destroying all co-operation of our citizens and every labor organization, farmers' association, or common partnership.

It will center in Congress and the courts a dangerous and unnecessary power, taking the same away from the people and the States, and may be abused to destroy the liberties of the people instead of preserving them. I believe it is intended to be used against labor organizations, and I am not alone in this conclusion.

When this discussion began I called President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor over the telephone and asked him to state, for the labor organizations he represents, their opinion of the amendment.

In reply I have just received the following letter:

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your message over the phone, in which you ask me my opinion regarding the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States known as Article XIV. I have already stated our position to you over the phone, but in order that you may have a record of the matter, I write this.

In my judgment the proposed constitutional amendment is one of the most dangerous to the right and the liberties of the people of our country that has ever been introduced in Congress. Your attention is called to section 2 of the article, as follows:

"Congress shall have power to define, regulate, prohibit, or dissolve trusts, monopolies, or combinations, whether existing in the form of a corporation or otherwise."

By emphasizing the words "combinations" and "otherwise," as they appear in the section, you will at once see the basis upon which my judgment is formed.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that if this amendment to the Constitution were adopted, it would prove destructive to any effort on the part of the working people of our country to protect themselves against the aggression of accumulated wealth.

The trusts, against which this constitutional amendment is ostensibly aimed, have thus far been enabled to successfully defend themselves; and in spite of the amendment, in future will be enabled to protect themselves against any hostile legislation or hostile action, even on the part of the courts. The legislation which the amendment empowers Congress to enact, if taken advantage of at all, will, I have no doubt, be leveled against the associations and combinations of the working people who may be organized, or who are now organized, for the purpose of protecting themselves and their interests against the aggressions of accumulated and concentrated wealth.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that there have been many efforts made in the history of the English-speaking peoples to crush out the organizations of the working people. The combinations among those having a common interest are numerous, and cover an infinite variety of purposes, such as churches, clubs, and other organizations for religious, social, and business purposes. The legality of such combination is conceded on common-law principle, and much encouragement has been and is furnished by statute for their formation; but, as to the combinations among wage-workers, there has been ofttimes the anomalous doctrine announced that these combinations are illegal and criminal conspiracies; but despite such efforts to wipe out the labor organizations by statute, they have been maintained. Under those adverse circumstances their maintenance was secret, and their methods necessarily unlawful. They emerged from that dark period and are now open and avowed, and their every act open to the keenest scrutiny of any opponent.

The origin of this supposed doctrine appears on a consideration of the social conditions that prevailed, particularly in England, for centuries, producing a series of statutes dated as far back as the fourteenth century, operating most oppressively upon the laboring classes, which doctrine has been transferred to the jurisprudence of our own country.

This doctrine found support in such decisions as King vs. Journeymen Tailors of Cambridge (1721).

This decision was followed in Hornby vs. Close (1867), holding combinations of workmen to be illegal. But the advance in public opinion is shown by the decision of the same court in the case of Farrer vs. Close (1869), the court now being equally divided on the question of the legality of such combinations.

As a result of the decision that the Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders, being a society "in restraint of trade," was an illegal body, rendered in the case of Hornby vs. Close (Queen's Bench, 1867), a royal commission was appointed, which, at the conclusion of its labors, recommended protective legislation for the trade unions. That recommendation was carried into effect by the trade-union act of 1871 (34 and 35 Victoria, chap. 31), the second and third clauses of which read as follows:

"The purpose of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be deemed to be unlawful so as to render any member of such trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy.

"The purpose of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be unlawful so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust."

Maryland, in a statute, adopted the following progressive law:

"An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen shall not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as an offense; nothing in this section shall affect the law relating to riot, unlawful assembly, breach of the peace, or any offense against any person or against property."—Act of 1884; Code of 1888.

Following King vs. Journeymen Tailors of Cambridge (1721), such a combination was held illegal in People vs. Fisher (N. Y., 1835); but People vs. Fisher is not law in New York since the enactment of Penal Code, section 170.

In the same State the validity of such combinations has, as in England, been expressly declared by statutes, while the act of Congress (24 U. S. Stat. L.) authorized the incorporation of national trade unions.

Thus you will see that there has been a growing and more enlightened public sentiment crystallized into law regarding the lawful and natural and inherent rights of the wage-workers to organize and associate themselves together to improve their material, moral, and social conditions. The adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment would practically render all past efforts of the working people on this line nugatory, and with a stroke of the pen organizations of labor, having attained the position of lawful bodies, will be outlawed.

What, I ask you, do the men think who have in mind the suppression of the labor organizations would be the result if success attended their efforts and the workers were denied the lawful right to associate themselves in a lawful manner and in a lawful manner redress their grievances? All history attests to the fact that when people have been denied a lawful method to defend and protect themselves that they have then resorted to the means at their command.

If organized labor should be destroyed (and I have no doubt but that the amendment is really aimed to accomplish that purpose), it will throw every man upon his own resources; no man will be responsible to his fellows, and instead of a well-regulated, reasonable, intelligent, cohesive, and practical labor movement it would give place to chaos and anarchy in its worst accepted sense.

The amendment strikes at the individual liberty of the citizen and the constitutional guaranty and right of association; and I have too much confidence in the intelligence and good faith of the people of our country to believe that they will sanction such an unwarrantable, dangerous, and indefensible departure from the fundamental law of our country.

Very respectfully, yours,

SAML. GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Hon. EDWIN R. RIDGELY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

This letter speaks for organized labor.

REPUBLICANS DODGE AND DECEIVE.

Is it not strange and suggestive, Mr. Speaker, that, in answer to the universal cry coming up from all classes of our people for protection against the abuses of corporations, trusts, and combines, our Judiciary Committee will not offer something more in harmony with the public demands?

In submitting this proposed amendment to our Federal Constitution our Committee on Judiciary have cunningly dodged the important provisions demanded by a large and growing number of our people, among which is the constitutional power to levy a graduated tax upon centralized wealth, in whatever form it may exist. As proof of this sentiment I cite the income-tax law, which was popular with the masses of all political parties, but which the Supreme Court decided could not be enforced without a change in our Constitution. But our committee seems determined that the people shall have no opportunity to amend the Constitution so as to carry out their will and judgment in the matter of taxation.

Some time ago I introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to section 9, Article I, of the Constitution, relating to taxation, which amendment reads as follows:

Congress may impose taxes on incomes, inheritances, corporations, corporate stocks and obligations, and estates of living persons, in excess of such exemptions as it shall deem reasonable, and may graduate the rate of taxation and impose higher rates per cent on large incomes, inheritances, and estates than on smaller ones.

My proposed amendment was referred to the Judiciary Committee, where it peacefully sleeps, and in all of the months our committee has stubbornly refused to report it, nor will they permit anyone to amend this abortive thing which they have reported; nor will the committee offer an amendment providing for a direct vote of the people in the election of United States Senators or the referendum privilege, by which the people can enact or repeal any law by direct popular vote.

The committee dare not give the people a chance to adopt constitutional amendments along these lines; nor will they permit us to enlarge our constitutional powers of public ownership and operation of public utilities. So afraid are they that the people's friends on this side will offer these amendments, they have smothered all privilege of amending their resolution. They know full well that if we on this side were permitted to offer amendments, they would be compelled to go on record with their opposition votes, thereby exposing to the country their determination to protect and shield the trusts and all forms of monopoly and centralized wealth. The Republican party as now organized and dominated is the special machine by which these great trust combinations are plundering the people and controlling the Government in every department.

CONGRESS HAS POWER NOW.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House contend that Congress has more power now to suppress trusts than it will use while under a Republican majority. The trouble is not so much in the lack of power; it is in the unfortunate fact that a majority of the people's representatives do not represent them, but instead, they continually aid these monopolies and shield them in their wicked plundering.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have another proof of the inconsistency of this Republican proposition. By the same rule under which we are considering this proposed constitutional amendment we are also to take up and pass House bill 10539, known as the anti-trust bill, also submitted to us with favorable recommendation by the Republican majority of our Judiciary Committee, being the same committee which submits this proposed constitutional amendment. The double absurdity is here exposed of saying first we must have a constitutional amendment before we can do anything with these trusts, and in the same breath and by this same rule asking us to legislate under the Constitution as it is; but these careful defenders of the trusts aim their proposed legislation against organized labor and the people, while pretending to restrain the trusts.

As we are also to consider this bill at this time, I will confine myself to the problem of needed anti-trust legislation, and first let me say that I shall vote for every amendment to this bill which has been offered by the Democratic minority, which amendments, I am glad to know, will have to be voted on by the House, one of the most important of which reads as follows:

Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to apply to trade unions or other labor organizations organized for the purpose of regulating wages, hours of labor, or other conditions under which labor is to be performed.

If this amendment to the pending bill is accepted by the House, I shall vote for the bill, and I predict now that when the roll call is taken and the Republican majority are compelled to go on record before organized labor and the country, they will vote for this amendment in the face of the fact that they have refused to report it with the bill, and the further fact of their determined opposition to it during the debate.

NO REMEDY IN THE AMENDMENT OR THE BILL.

However, Mr. Speaker, neither the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment nor the enactment of this anti-trust bill will reach the seat of the trouble we seek to eradicate. To get out of this trouble of congested wealth and the extortions which it is imposing on our people, our legislation must be such as will accomplish two things.

A REMEDY OFFERED.

The first and most practicable at present is that of taxing this wealth in accordance with its ability to pay. This is the true spirit of equitable taxation, but we sadly fail to carry it out.

If, instead of the pending bill, the committee had reported the one which I introduced January 10 and which has been before them since that date (No. 5756), we would have before us something practical and effective which we could enforce even without amending the Constitution. I will read the bill to which I refer:

A bill (H. R. 5756) for raising revenue, and other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1900, no corporation shall do business in the United States without first taking out a United States license, the fees for which shall be based on the amount of their capital stock and outstanding bonds combined.

Second. That two or more corporations, each one having a United States license in force, on which the fees have been paid in full, may combine their business and interests for the purpose of reducing their operating expenses and increasing their ability to command a better price for their products, by taking a special license, the fee for which shall be based on the aggregate stock and bonds of the participant corporations; the penalty for a corporation to do business without a license to be 1 per cent of its capital stock and bonded debt per week, and for a trust the penalty for a failure to comply with this law to be twice as much as for a single corporation and to be collected from the several corporations comprising the trust, in proportion to capital stock and bonded debt.

Third. The president or secretary of all corporations and of all trusts to make a quarterly statement to the Treasury Department, giving list of officers, a financial statement, and report of business operations.

Fourth. The fees for an annual license to be graduated according to the total amount of outstanding stock at par, plus any market premium, and bonds, and to be paid in quarterly installments by all corporations, and also by all trusts and combinations of corporations, as follows:

When the aggregate stock and bonds amount to less than $1,000,000, a tax of 1 per cent per annum; on $1,000,000 and not over $10,000,000, 1½ per cent; on $10,000,000 and not over $25,000,000, 2 per cent; all over $25,000,000 and not over $50,000,000, 2½ per cent; all over $50,000,000 and not over $100,000,000, 3 per cent; all over $100,000,000 and not over $150,000,000, 4 per cent; all over $150,000,000 and not over $200,000,000, 5 per cent; all over $200,000,000 and not over $250,000,000, 6 per cent; all over $250,000,000 and not over $300,000,000, 7 per cent; all over $300,000,000 and not over $400,000,000, 8 per cent; all over $400,000,000 and not over $500,000,000, 9 per cent; all over $500,000,000, 10 per cent.

Fifth. The Secretary of the Treasury shall make all necessary rules and regulations for assigning to the Internal Revenue Bureau the duty of enforcing this act.

If we will enact this bill into law we will at least compel these powerful combinations of capital to contribute to the nation's revenue a fair portion of the wealth they are enabled by their monopoly to unjustly extort from the people. This revenue will make it possible to put into operation the second provision, which is absolutely necessary to free the people from the poverty and slavery imposed upon them by greedy trusts and corporation combines.

CONSTRUCTIVE REMEDY BEST.

To succeed we must enter upon a constructive remedy, which will be much more potent in solving this problem than any effort to prevent, destroy, or break up great combinations of wealth, which under nature's economic law are absolutely necessary to the most successful accomplishment of production and distribution.

We can make certain this constructive remedy if we will but put into the hands of the people through public ownership the necessary instruments of production and distribution. Do this and they will take care of themselves without any restrictive legislation against trusts, as this will at once free them from the necessity of paying tribute to the trusts and will also enable the people to find ready employment with double present wages, as it will no longer be possible for the trusts to suppress wages and control both production and distribution.

CENTRALIZATION VS. DISTRIBUTION.

It is an indisputable fact that no person can actually produce more than a fraction of a million dollars in values during a lifetime. Then it must follow that if anyone is permitted to be the lawful owner of property amounting to millions of dollars in value, such owner has appropriated the title to the products of another's labor without giving an equivalent in value therefor.

If such results are permitted by law, we are legalizing injustice and robbery, which we have already done and are still doing, to the extent of producing millions of homeless and propertyless families, which are in evidence in every community throughout the nation, while a few multimillionaires go unrestrained but are legally aided in adding to their millions by increased spoliation of the people.

The great problem of temporal comfort in this life that confronts every being upon earth can be successfully solved by two acts, namely, the production and distribution of the things necessary to human life and comfort. These two acts are simple in their statement, but far-reaching and complex when we attempt to put them into successful operation over a great and extensive country like ours, the greatness of which makes possible equally extended human comforts and happiness if we correctly solve the problem of production and distribution.

In the matter of production alone we are making wonderful progress in every department. We have outstripped the world in quantity, quality, and variety; but in the second act—that of distribution—our system is an absolute failure. Instead of distributing the titles to our products it eternally centralizes them, until less than 10 per cent of our people own 90 per cent of all the values created by the present and all preceding generations. We find undeniable proof of this lamentable congestion of wealth, not only in the centralized ownership of all products of labor, but we also find by the census of 1890 (Abstract Eleventh Census, page 223) this alarming revelation of the centralized ownership of real estate:

Total number of homes in the United States.

Total number of families owning homes	2,923,671
Total number of families renting homes	4,999,302
Total number of families occupying homes	7,922,973

This table reveals the startling fact that of all the families occupying homes a little less than 37 per cent claim to be home owners, leaving 63 per cent home renters, while we discover by the same table that of the above reputed home owners 28 per cent of these homes were mortgaged, leaving but a trifle over 15 per cent of the families occupying homes actually owning the same.

Mr. Speaker, with this alarming condition before us is it any wonder that the great mass of our people are crying out for deliverance from the burdens imposed by a system which has robbed them of their homes and the products of their labor?

Negative legislation against trusts and corportions will not solve this problem, but in our efforts to check these greedy combinations we will discover that the real trouble lies deeper than the trusts, which are but the inevitable result and not the cause of this ruinous congestion of wealth.

REAL CAUSE OF OUR TROUBLE.

Looking deeper, we find this underlying principle in our productive and distributive system. The real cause of our trouble is this: We assume that all capital used in production and distribution must draw unto itself some per cent of increase. We force this payment of increase out of the products of human labor and the absorption of land titles by various methods known by the familiar names of interest, rents, profits, gain, etc.

We find on further inspection of this system and its operation that our official statistics reveal the fact that 10 per cent of our people, who own substantially all of the capital and instruments used in production and distribution, are taking from the other 90 per cent at the place of production over half of all newly created values; or, to state more clearly, the total earnings, or wages, of the 90 per cent army will not buy one-half of the property their labor creates, reckoned at wholesale values at the place of production, and not to exceed one-fourth in the retail markets.

While it is true the other half does not go to the immediate capital used by the laborers, it does go to the billions of capital which of necessity must be used in the collection of the materials necessary to production.

Analyzing this system further, we find it not only robs the producers of over half the values they create, but it brings disaster and failure upon the 10 per cent fellows who are getting the titles to the other half of all our productions.

The owners of the billions of capital we are using at first own the entire product, but admitting the total wages paid by them to the laborers will buy back half of the newly created values, these 10 per cent fellows find their real trouble begins at this point. Their great difficulty is to find customers able to buy the other half of their goods.

Every nation has an enormous surplus of products left over after its people have purchased to the last dollar of their wages. Hence our manufacturers are crying for a market, urging increased exportations, which can only be possible (in anything like adequate quantities) by exchanging our surplus productions for the surplus of other nations. Returning home with these, we find our people no better able to buy the goods brought in than they were those taken out. Hence the 10 per cent fellows are still in trouble, and we find them crying out "overproduction."

They next resort to shutting down their mills, mines, and factories to stop overproduction; but this, like their exportation, is also a flat failure, because in shutting down their productive plants they cut off the wages of the people; hence they destroy their market simultaneously with the reduction of products.

Thus these 10 per cent fellows are involved in serious financial trouble. In their efforts to get out they are forming trusts. The 90 per cent fellows having legislated against this, the next and present effort of the 10 per cent fellows is to merge their entire capital and property into a few gigantic corporations. But when this is all accomplished they will still be unable to successfully continue this worn-out system of gathering tribute to capital for its use. It has only been possible to operate this system in the past by steadily absorbing the titles to all of the world's real estate, which has been the mighty values added to the people's earnings, which added value has alone made it possible for the people to buy the products of their own labor under this system.

This land value was originally a gift to the people from nature; hence their purchase power has been their earnings (wages) plus their credit (the latter a lien on their land). The two combined have enabled the people to purchase the products of their own labor, but this has only been possible by passing the titles of their lands over to the 10 per cent fellows. As proof of this we need only to cite the fact that the great centers of capital in the older nations, as well as in our own country, have ever been absorbing real-estate titles and driving an army of homeless people westward to seek lands. This process has gone on until it has finally belted the earth.

NO RELIEF FOR US IN ASIA.

We are now looking with longing eyes across the Pacific to the Asiatic shores, where the world's civilization first established this system of paying tribute to capital, and what do we find there? Ten to twenty times as many people per acre as we have here, with their wealth and land titles centralized to a greater extent than anywhere else upon earth, while their great army of laborers are reduced to the condition of serfs, starving by millions, their wages, when employed at all, being but a very few pennies per day; yet some foolishly believe that we can take our machinery over there, employ these serf laborers at 10 to 20 cents per day, and grow rich by throwing their products into the world's markets, which they say is the only outlet for the surplus productions of our laborers. If anyone believes our mad rush into Asia will bring relief to our congested civilization, he is doomed to serious and bitter disappointment.

No, Mr. Speaker, we can not force this old system much further. Already we hear the cry of overproduction again in our land, with our factories and mills shutting down and a nervous unrest in the camp of our capitalists as well as among our great army of laborers; and yet they call these prosperous times. In this statement they confess that they expect serious disaster just ahead, while we do nothing but keep up this eternal quarrel between the capitalists and laborers, each trying to force upon the other the greater burdens of this faulty and decaying system.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP THE REMEDY.

We must find a solution for these troubles. The above analysis of their cause clearly indicates the remedy which can alone be found in the abolishment of all payments of increase to capital for its use in any form. We must find a way by which all the people can have free and voluntary access to, and use of, all necessary capital and instruments of production and distribution, without paying any increase whatever to their values. Public ownership of these instruments provides the way for this new and better system. We pay no interest, tribute, or increase to public capital.

Let us abolish our present system of bank issues and loaning of money and in its stead issue all money direct by the Government, a full legal tender, regardless of the material used in its coinage, create and issue a sufficient volume to effect all exchanges of titles to property upon a cash basis, put this money into circulation by paying it out in settlement of all governmental expenses, and abolish forever all interest-bearing bonds and all forms of private debts.

This will free labor from all tribute to capital in the form of money and make it possible to exchange and distribute titles to all property without the creation of debts.

The first act in distribution of property is to change the titles from the one having too much of an article to the one that has not enough. Money is the best instrument of account ever devised by man to exchange titles to property. There should be enough money to displace all use of credits and avoid all borrowing of money by the citizen.

The next step in distribution, after the change of titles, is to move the goods from the place of production to the place of consumption. Th s calls for the instruments of transportation, which should also be public. Therefore let us begin at once to establish a national system of transportation for all kind of goods as well as the necessary instruments of communication. Place these instruments subject to the voluntary use of all the people on equal terms, charging only what is sufficient to renew, repair, and operate. When we have done this we will be ready to open up our mills, mines, and factories as fast as their present owners shut them down.

The Government should buy these idle mills and instruments of production at their true values and permit the people to use them on such terms as would cover the cost of renewal and repair. If we will turn our legislation in this direction, we will find a speedy solution of all of these troubles, which manifest themselves at this time in the form of trusts and corporation monopolies, money lords, landlords, strikes, and lockouts.

By this new system we will restore universal prosperity among our people, give to every laborer more than double his present earnings, and, instead of this eternal legislation to keep the peace between capital and labor, we will create universal peace and prosperity, turn all of our idle soldiers and millionaires into the natural channel of production and distribution, lift our civilization to a much higher plane, forever settle these troubles, and make it possible for each individual citizen to supply himself with all things necessary to the highest possible development and realization of happiness.

Mr. Speaker, I am rejoiced to know that millions of our people are already turning their attention not only to the causes that produce trusts with all of their attending evils, but they are also seeking a permanent remedy which they believe can only be found by abolishing forever all tribute to capital for its use. This they have determined can best be accomplished by public ownership.

Our mechanics and wage-workers, through their labor organizations, are, in their study of the vital problem of production and distribution, rapidly coming to espouse public ownership, and as proof that our farmers also feel the burdens that monopoly is heaping upon them, and that they, too, have reached the same solution and look to public ownership as the way out, I will close my remarks by reading a paper written by a farmer in my own State, as presented to one of our agricultural institutes, which you will observe forcibly arraigns the trusts; and after presenting the hardships they impose upon the farmer, the paper closes advocating public ownership as their only escape. This able paper I will now present:

THE FARMER AND THE TRUSTS.

[Paper read before the Brown County Farmers' Institute, January 18, 1900, by Grant W. Harrington.]

"There will soon be a trust for every production and a master to fix the price for every necessity of life." Such was the prophecy made by John Sherman ten years ago, when the Senate was considering the trust question. One decade has been sufficient to see the fulfillment of the Senator's prophecy. There is to-day a trust for every production and a master who does fix the price of every necessity of life. From the individual producer to the partnership; from the partnership to the corporation; from the corporation to the pool; from the pool to the trust, the concentration of wealth has gone steadily on until a few individuals exercise absolute control over the business affairs of the nation. The trusts have now thrown off all form of combinations and assumed the dress of corporations. This gives them the standing of persons in the courts and enables them to laugh to scorn any public power that has yet been invoked against them.

More than one-fourth of the entire manufacturing capital of the country is now controlled by the trusts. The New York Investor in its issue of December 30, 1899, says there were 532 trusts, with a capital of over $8,000,000,000, organized during the years 1898 and 1899. Over three and a half millions of people now look to the trusts for employment. Such concentration of wealth and power is a menace to a free government and demands the earnest consideration of every man who loves his country and her free institutions.

The best definition of a trust I have yet seen is the one given by Senator CHANDLER in the January number of Munsey's Magazine. He defines it as:

"An association of separate individuals or corporations having in view the control of the production of some article of merchandise and the increase of its price to the consumer by preventing competition in the sale of the product." "Such a trust," he says, "is usually made up of a combination of corporations, because neither individuals nor partnerships are willing to invest sufficient capital to accomplish the monopoly of production and the suppression of competition. In addition to trusts composed of corporations there is another species of trust, namely, a single corporation of sufficient magnitude to take control of the whole production of the article of merchandise, crush out competition, and keep up the price."

The essential feature of the trusts is their monopolistic character. This was well put by Justice Sherwood, of Michigan, in a recent decision against the match trust, in which he says:

"The sole object of this corporation is to make money by having it in its power to raise the price of the article or diminish the quantity to be made and used at its pleasure. Thus both the supply of the article and the price thereof are made to depend upon the action of a half dozen individuals, more or less, to satisfy their cupidity and avarice, who may happen to have the controlling interest in this corporation—an artificial person, governed by a single motive or purpose, which is to accumulate money regardless of the wants of or necessities of over sixty million people."

By their vast capital trusts are enabled to secure the greatest opportunities for economy, not only in the manufacture of goods, but also in the purchase of raw material and in the marketing of the finished products. These things enable them to practically regulate all competition and fix the price of their product with but little reference to competitors or the cost of production, but mainly with reference to securing the greatest net results. The farmer is the great consumer of the country, and the ability of the trusts to control the market enables them to take toll of every bushel of grain the farmer raises and of every pound of meat he puts upon the market, so that nothing could be more fitting in a gathering of farmers than a discussion of the "Relation of the Farmer and the Trusts."

I believe two propositions can be demonstrated:

First. The trusts have increased the prices of things the farmer has to buy.

Second. The trusts tend to depress the prices of raw material and so injure the farmer's market.

If these two propositions are true, then we are rapidly getting around to the point where the farmer should take Mrs. Lease's advice and begin to raise less corn and more hell.

Now, as to the first proposition, Have the trusts raised the prices of the things the farmer has to buy?

Let us call a few of the Hiawatha business men to the stand and see how they will answer the question.

HORACE AMANN. Axes, hammers, chisels, and everything in that line is controlled by the American Edged Tool Company, and they have advanced the price about 40 per cent. Copper goods have gone up 100 per cent. Barbed wire and nails have advanced 100 per cent. Glassware, 15 to 20 per cent. Granite, 25 to 50 per cent.

O. W. BROWN. Lumber is more than one-third higher than it was a year ago. Some grades have advanced more than 50 per cent. A few men are securing control of all the desirable timber lands, and this puts them in a position to make any prices they see fit.

FRANK CASE. Farm wagons cost about $6 apiece more now than they did a year ago. Buggies cost from five to ten dollars more.

ED ZIMMERMAN. Horseshoes and horseshoe nails have gone up until it now costs me about 20 cents more to shoe a team of horses than it did a year ago.

HILL BROTHERS. Nails have gone up from 2 cents to 4¼ cents. Barbed wire has risen from $1.75 to $4.30 per hundred pounds. Tin plates have risen from $7.75 to $10.60 a box. Stoves have increased 40 per cent in cost. Farm machinery has risen 25 per cent. Shovels, hoes, rakes, and that class of goods have gone up 50 per cent.

J. T. GRIMES. Galvanized pipe has risen from 11 cents, in Kansas City, to 17 cents. Wire fence has risen from 28 to 35 cents per rod. Cypress lumber for tanks has gone from $32 to $42 per thousand. The material in a 10-barrel galvanized stock tank will cost at least 50 cents more to-day than it did a year ago.

M. E. YOST. Furniture has advanced from 15 to 20 per cent. Every new list shows an advance. Carpets and linoleums have gone up from 5 to 10 per cent. Coffins and undertaking supplies have advanced fully 10 per cent.

MINER & STEVENS. There is practically nothing in the trust line of goods that has not advanced. Glass has gone up 30 per cent, linseed oil 25 per cent, and wall paper 30 per cent.

HAL FAIRCHILD. There is nothing in my line but that has increased in price. Iron pipe has doubled in price. Bath tubs have increased from 10 to 15 per cent. Boilers and radiators have gone up from 20 to 30 per cent.

J. C. KELSEY. Prices have gone up 25 to 50 per cent in the harness business in the last six months. Leather is up about 30 per cent, deer-hair pads for horse collars 40 per cent, horse collars 20 per cent, and fur robes 25 per cent.

H. P. WELSH. Clothing has advanced from 15 to 25 per cent. The advance is very noticeable on all goods controlled by trusts.

HENRY HAMANN. There has been an advance on shoes. One lot that I have just duplicated has risen from $1.85 to $2.10 in four months.

W. M. SMITH. Oil and gasoline have jumped from 2 to 3 cents per gallon. Matches have gone from $1.25 a case to $1.55. A tobacco which cost 14 cents last year now costs 33 cents.

LEVI OGLE. There has been an average advance of 12½ per cent on rubber goods. Fleeced underwear has advanced 25 per cent in sixty days. Cotton fleeced goods have advanced 20 per cent. The broom-corn trust has advanced the price of the brush since it left the farmers' hands $100 per ton. The result is two advances on brooms, amounting to $1.75 per dozen.

Such testimony could be prolonged indefinitely, but this is certainly enough to prove the proposition.

Who is getting the benefit of this rise in prices?

Henry Clews, the recognized mouthpiece of Wall street, in a recent letter says that commodities have advanced 15 per cent on the average and that wages have advanced 5 per cent. What has become of the other 10 per cent? Manifestly it went to the holders of the trust stock. The average Brown County farmer will not kick very much about the 5 per cent which labor receives, but he has good grounds for kicking about the 10 per cent which capital has appropriated.

Now, as to the second proposition: Do the trusts tend to lower the prices of raw material and so injure the farmer's market?

Let us call Secretary Coburn, of the State board of agriculture, to the stand and see what has happened in Brown County in the past ten years. His testimony will show that wheat, corn, and oats are all lower in price to-day than the average price has been for the last ten years. Let us take them up one at a time, beginning with 1890, the year when Congress decided that the trusts had reached sufficient magnitude to call for some sort of regulation:

WHEAT.

	Cents.		Cents.
1890	93	1896	50
1891	80	1897	70
1892	60	1898	60
1893	50	1899	55
1894	42
1895	60	Average for 10 years	62

The average price for the ten years has been 62 cents per bushel. To-day the best grade of wheat is selling in Brown County for 55 cents, or 7 cents per bushel less than the average price for the last ten years.

"What we want," said a member of the Millers' Trust, "is cheaper wheat and dearer flour." How they get it is well told by John A. McGuire, of the Hiawatha Mills, who says:

"I am satisfied that the cracker trust has reduced the price of soft wheat at least 5 cents per bushel. Before the trust was formed there was competition and when the Hiawatha Mill had a car of soft wheat on hand we asked for a bid and the wheat went where it would bring the most money. Now one man in Chicago buys all the wheat for the trust factories and I am satisfied that the trust figures on getting its flour at the cost of the wheat and that they do not propose to let the miller have anything for grinding it. This forces the miller to reduce the price of soft wheat to the farmer.

In this connection it will be interesting to note that the legislature of Minnesota appointed a committee in 1892 to investigate the wheat combine and that the committee reported that the evidence it had secured tended to show that the price was 6½ cents per bushel below what it ought to be.

Let us next see what has happened to corn during this same period. Mr. Coburn's biennial reports show:

CORN.

Year.	Average price.	Year.	Average price.
	Cents.		Cents.
1890	42	1896	16
1891	38	1897	18
1892	32	1898	24
1893	28	1899	25
1894	34
1895	26	Average for 10 years	28.2

The average price for the ten years has been 28.2 cents per bushel. To-day No. 2 corn is selling in Brown County for 24 cents. This is 4.2 lower than the average price for ten years.

Oats too in sympathy with wheat and corn have taken a slump. The Coburn reports show:

OATS.

Year.	Average price.	Year.	Average price.
	Cents.		Cents.
1890	33½	1896	12
1891	26	1897	29
1892	25	1898	20
1893	21	1899	18
1894	26
1895	19	Average for 10 years	22.90

The average price for the ten years is a fraction less than 23 cents per bushel. Good bright oats are selling in Brown County to-day for 18 cents, or 5 cents less than the average price for ten years. Do not forget in this connection that the oatmeal trust has put up the price of the finished product more than a hundred per cent.

If the rise in commodities is a natural and a legitimate one, why is it that the farmer's product has not kept pace with it and gone up instead of down?

Horses have also gone down in value, according to Secretary Coburn:

HORSES.

1890	$80	1896	$25
1891	70	1897	33
1892	65	1898	33
1893	52	1899	42
1894	32
1895	28	Average for 10 years	44

The average value for the ten years has been $44 per head. Last year, notwithstanding the fact that the horse supply was short, his average value was only $42.

Cattle have gone up in price, according to the same authority.

CATTLE OTHER THAN MILCH COWS.

1890	$16.00	1896	$21.00
1891	17.00	1897	24.00
1892	17.00	1898	26.00
1893	17.00	1899	27.00
1894	18.00
1895	19.00	Average per head	20.20

At the beginning of the decade a select committee from the United States Senate was examining into the cattle business. That committee found that the cattle market was controlled by "The Big Four," of Chicago, and that under the influence of that combine the price of cattle had gone down. The business had become so unprofitable that hundreds of men quit it and hurried their breeding stuff onto the market. When the reaction set in it was found that the supply of cattle was short everywhere, and ten years has not been enough to bring the supply back where it equals the demand. When we take this into consideration and remember that one war is just over and that two more are in progress the only wonder is that beef prices are not higher than they are.

When beef is high there is supposed to be a greater demand for pork, but the Coburn figures show that the Brown County hog has not kept pace with the "beef steer and his sister."

SWINE.

Year.	Average value per head.	Year.	Average value per head.
1890	$8.00	1896	6.50
1891	6.00	1897	$5.00
1892	6.00	1898	4.50
1893	7.50	1899	6.00
1894	7.00
1895	5.50	Average for 10 years	5.81¼

We are told in glowing headlines every day of wonderful prosperity of the country, but it is certainly evident from these figures that the farmer is not getting his share of it. The trusts look upon him as their lawful prey, and they pluck him accordingly. Prof. John F. Crowell, of New York, presented figures before the Industrial Commission the other day showing that in manufacturing the annual product per capita was $393, in mining $740, and in farming only $290.

My farmer friends, you are up against it. What do you propose to do about it? If a vote was taken here to-day as to whether the farmers here assembled were opposed to the trusts, every one of you would vote "aye," but what is your remedy? It has been well said that he who shoots at nothing always hits it. What are you aiming at?

Are you in favor of national control? We have tried that. Congress in 1890 passed an anti-trust law and the courts said in substance that these vast corporations were creatures of the State, and that Congress had no power to outlaw a business which the State declared was legitimate. Corporations, you know, are citizens, and as such are entitled to all the rights and privileges accorded to a Brown County farmer. There is no limit to the amount of property they may buy and hold, and the law can not take mere size into consideration when dealing with them.

Are you in favor of a national commission to regulate the trusts? We have had an interstate railway commission clothed with power to regulate the great railroad trusts of the country, and in its last report the members threw up their hands and acknowledged their inability to cope with existing circumstances.

Listen to their tale of woe:

"We are satisfied from investigations conducted during the past year * * * and from information which is perfectly convincing to a moral intent, that a large part of the business at the present time is transacted upon illegal rates. Indeed, so general has this rule become that in certain quarters the exaction of the published rate is the exception. From this two things naturally and frequently result. First, gross discriminations between individuals and gross preferences between localities; and these discriminations and preferences are almost always in favor of the strong and against the weak. There is probably no one thing to-day which does so much to force out the small operator, and to build up those trusts and monopolies against which law and public opinion alike beat in vain, as discrimination in freight rates. Second, the business of railroad transportation is carried on to a very large extent in conceded violations of law.

"Men who in every other respect are reputable citizens are guilty of acts which, if the statute law of the land were enforced, would subject them to fine or imprisonment. This is true both of the traffic operator and the shipper. It is difficult to estimate the moral effect of such a condition of things upon a great section of the community, and almost impossible to believe that it can be allowed to continue without some attempt at reformation. This condition the present law is powerless to control."

Do you favor State control? Kansas has had a little experience along that line. She, too, had been trying to regulate the railroads of the State; but to-day the question of railroad legislation is still agitating the farmer and the stock raiser, and they are asking for some power that will compel equitable treatment.

Our sister State, Nebraska, passed a maximum freight bill, saying what the roads of the State should charge for hauling the farmers' grain to market, and the Supreme Court of the United States gravely declared that the roads were entitled to make money and that the State could not pass a law reducing the rates below the point where the roads could pay expenses, interest on their bonds, and have something left.

Kansas passed a law regulating the Kansas City stock yards, and that gigantic corporation went into the Federal courts to resist the new rates, alleging that not compensatory, and the court acting along the same lines as the Nebraska decision, appointed a master to take testimony to see how much money the corporation could make under the new rates. Kansas also passed a law reducing telegraph charges, and an obliging Federal judge declared it unconstitutional.

Kansas also passed laws known as the scrip and screen laws to secure justice for the coal miners of Kansas, but it is notorious that they have been evaded at every turn. The experience of Kansas ought to be enough to convince us that the State can not regulate something it does not own.

The end of business is to make money. Corporations have no souls, and whatever the trusts want from legislators, courts, assessors, and public prosecutors they will get if they can and pay for it. They will buy exemption from molestation from party bosses when they must. They will run conventions and concern themselves in elections. They will subsidize newspapers, bribe voters, buy legislators, and spread corruption wherever their financial interests seem to demand it.

What, then, is the remedy? There is but one, and that is Government and State ownership. Your cities have pointed the way. Municipal ownership of public utilitiesare every where replacing private monopolies. You can scarcely pick up a daily paper in which you do not read of some city which has just voted to own its own waterworks, electric-light plants, gas works, street railways, or some similar business. So rapidly is this idea growing that you can scarcely mention any line of business, from running a newspaper to manufacturing locomotives, thrashing machines, and other heavy machinery, which some city in this or some other country is not trying and trying successfully.

This is the road along which the people must march in doing battle with the trusts. The State and the nation must supplement and extend the work of the cities. The Government must carry the farmer's grain and his cattle and his hogs as well as his newspaper and his letters. While the railroads remain in private hands they will continue to furnish special privileges to the big shipper to the detriment of the little one. An equal and exact justice to all, with special privileges to none, can not be secured as long as these great highways are left in private hands. With this great bulwark taken away from the trusts, if competition does not then regulate the question, then the Government must go on, step by step, appropriating the mines of the country, the mills, the factories, the packing houses, and all instruments of collective industry, until the last vestige of private monopoly has been succeeded by public ownership.

Mr. Speaker, just one minute more. It is clear to everyone present that the Republican managers here do not intend or expect to really pass any legislation against trusts and monopolies; they are in too close partnership with them.

All this noise just at the close of this session is a cheap play to fool the people. The proposed constitutional amendment is too absurd to ever be submitted to the States.

The bill before us under the rule will pass here and slumber in the Senate as a convenient reference during the campaign, but it will never be permitted to pass so long as Republicans control Congress. It will not pass the Senate, but the people will not be fooled; they know you can stop the trusts but you will not.

Pensions.

SPEECH

OF

HON. CYRUS A. SULLOWAY,

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 7, 1900.

The House having under consideration the bill (S. 1477) amending sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890—

Mr. SULLOWAY said:

Mr. SPEAKER: It seems idle, perhaps sophomorical, to stand here and waste time in the discussion of a bill that nobody opposes. I want to say that I am in favor of this bill without any "ifs" or "ands." I want to say further that it is not a committee bill.

Questions have been asked as to why we did not report this or that, and in reply I will say that this bill is the child of the Grand Army, born of their wish, and we bring it to you to-day without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t." They believe, and their representatives who were clothed with authority to appear before the Senate committee and before the House committee believe, that it will bring the relief that is desired by those men who are entitled to relief and who were their comrades on bloody fields.

Now, to satisfy you of that fact I want to read a passage from what took place at the hearings before the Senate committee. The hearings before our committee were not reported. The chairman of the Senate committee, Senator GALLINGER, put this question to Mr. Patrick, who represented the Grand Army on that occasion.

As a final question, and for the purpose of having this matter distinctly understood, let me ask you if the committee of the Senate is correct in the supposition that if the act of June 27, 1890, is so amended as to specifically provide that these minor disabilities shall be aggregated, and that the widows shall be pensionable who are without means of support other than their daily labor, and an income not exceeding $250 per year, the Grand Army will be entirely satisfied?

Now listen to Mr. Patrick's reply:

Mr. PATRICK. Yes, sir; we shall be entirely satisfied. We criticise no other inequalities, and we ask nothing more than the two amendments referred to; they not to change existing law, but merely to change the phraseology so that it may plainly read as Congress originally intended and not be susceptible of two widely diverse constructions.

And I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not change existing law, save only that it declares with reference to widows that an income of $250 shall not prevent the granting of a pension, whereas after the enactment of June 27, 1890, of which this is but declaratory of the meaning thereof, they were pensioned when their incomes were $300. As to disabilities, Congress, in March, 1895, in an appropriation bill enacted into law the following:

And it is further provided, That from and after the passage of this act all pensioners now on the roll who are pensioned at less than $6 per month for any degree of pensionable disability shall have their pensions increased to $6 per month, and that hereafter, whenever any applicant for a pension would under existing law prior to the passage of the act of 1890 be entitled to less than $6 for any single disability or several disabilities combined, such pensioner shall be rated at not less than $6 per month.

Now, what the Grand Army complain of is this, that men are not properly rated, that the disabilities of claimants are not aggregated; and it is a truthful complaint. It is a complaint that was born under the last Administration and one that continues to-day. It is idle to deny it. Why, when that committee called on the Commissioner and asked him whether or not he aggregated the ratings, he assured them that he combined them, and sent out into another room and had some papers brought in cases that were adjudicated the day before, and the first one, as I am informed, that they took up demonstrated that their complaints were well founded.

Here was a man whose medical examination showed that the applicant was disabled to the extent of 50 per cent in the use of his right shoulder from crepitus, and for that he was rated nine-eighteenths. For another disability he was rated six-eighteenths, for another six-thirtieths, and yet that applicant's claim, notwithstanding the ratings showed him to be a total wreck (eighteen-eighteenths), was rejected. That is what the Grand Army complain of, and they believe that this mandate of this Congress, re-enacted explicitly in the language that is put into this bill, will produce a change in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. Don't you know that in that hearing before the Senate committee the Commissioner said he combined disabilities, but did not combine ratings? And in this bill all you ask him to do is to combine disabilities. If he combines disabilities now, what do you make by passing this bill?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, my good friend from Kansas, while I do not care to talk about it here, I think the old soldiers have a kindly sort of feeling toward me, and I rather think that in my short life I have been rather friendly toward them; but I want to say to you that you can not pen language stronger or more explicit in the English language than that used in this bill if it is obeyed, and if you have a Commissioner of Pensions who will not obey the mandates of Congress it is idle to enact statutes.

Now, let us see what we have here on page 2 of this bill, beginning with line 11:

Proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support; and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated.

Can you use language that will express more than that? It is clear and plain. There is no ambiguity; it is capable of but one construction.

It provides that each and every infirmity shall be considered and rated, and that the ratings shall be aggregated. Words can not make clearer the duty of the chief of that bureau.

And if that language, when enacted into law, is to be disobeyed, if the Commissioner neglects and refuses to rate as the law directs him to do, Congress can do no more. The sovereign remedy is in the hands of another Department of this Government.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will my friend permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. You can make it a good deal stronger by putting in the words "shall be rated as of service origin." If you want to strengthen the language, put that in and there will be no escape.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What difference does it make whether it is of service origin or of some other origin, under the act of 1890, if he has the disability?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That would narrow it instead of enlarging it. That would be a limitation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. As suggested by the gentleman from Maine, it would narrow it instead of enlarging it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It certainly would. The act of 1890 is for the benefit of soldiers who do not trace, and are not required to prove, their disabilities to be of service origin, though in an overwhelming majority of cases the disabilities are in fact due to exposure and hardship endured when in the service.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, I should like to have the following changes made: Strike out the word "not," at the end of line 9, page 2, and the word "exceeding," at the beginning of line 10, page 2, and then strike out, beginning at the word "and," in line 10, "and not less than $6 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support," and then, in line 13, beginning with the word "and," strike out the words "and the aggregate of the disabilities should be rated;" so that it will read:

And be entitled to receive a pension of $12 per month; and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Bureau of Pensions, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability or disabilities then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] very well understands that that would enact into law an increase of the pension of every man who draws six dollars and make it twelve.

Mr. STEELE. That is what I am trying to get at—a disability pension.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That would be the result if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana were adopted. The veterans of the civil war do not ask that. They do not ask for legislation that will enlarge their rights in that respect. They are content with the existing law, construed as the language used demands, and honestly administered. This bill does not change in spirit existing law so far as it relates to invalid pensions or claims for invalid pensions. It is a reenactment, in explicit language, of existing law.

It is a declaration by Congress, a mandate, that the chief of the Bureau of Pensions should not disregard, disobey, or defy. It is the voice of 75,000,000 of people speaking through their Representatives clothed with authority to make laws. It grants to at least a million men, who were the flower of the Federal army from 1861 until General Lee's surrender, certain rights, namely, the right to receive from the Government that they and their comrades by their valor preserved and perpetuated in contests on bloody fields for years with as heroic men as ever wielded swords or drew a bead, pension: that pension to be not less than $6 nor more than $12 per month, according to their disability, rank not to be considered, the private and the general to fare alike.

The Commissioner of Pensions refuses, I understand, to pay them that were orphans, made so by the death of their fathers in defense of their country, the pittance of $2 per month that the Government allowed them as pension from the cradle, if they were there when the father was killed or died in the service, until they should become sixteen years of age. They were then under disability as minors. They could not, if they knew that they were entitled, obtain the pension. Not one in a thousand, probably, of those that did not receive it ever knew until they had grown to manhood or womanhood that they were entitled to it; to that pittance which, as a matter of law, belongs to them as clearly as the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions belongs to him at the end of each month, and which is denied them and withheld; and we stand before the world repudiating our obligations, created by statute, and which morally and sacredly could not be more binding.

For his country the father died. We promised, and wrote upon the statute of the United States, that we would pay to his little helpless children $2 per month until they became 16 years of age; and to-day, and for months and years, as I am informed and believe, the chief of that Bureau, in defiance of the statute, has refused to pay them, who were powerless to recover what belonged to them when minors, because that, in the chapter of accidents and in the providence of God, they did not starve or freeze, but lived to be 16 years of age. This is the treatment meted out to them whose fathers on some bloody field left them helpless, to be cared for as objects of charity.

If individuals as a whole had been as destitute of respect for what duty and honesty demand at their hands, and had refused to aid them, and had withheld, as the Commissioner of Pensions does, what law, duty, and decency demand that they have as a matter of right, purchased with their father's blood, there would be no claims of that character pending in the Bureau of Pensions to-day. Death would have relieved this poor, weak people of the obligation to pay them the sum of 6⅔ cents per day, with which to purchase care, comfort, medical attendance, and education from the cradle until 16 years of age.

In the name of justice and in behalf of these claimants and the honor of the United States, I protest against any further withholding of pensions to this class of claimants. Such a course ought to mantle the cheek of every patriotic American with a crimson tinge of shame. It is abhorrent to every principle of law and justice and to the wishes of a patriotic people. I have drawn a bill making it mandatory upon the Commissioner of Pensions to pay these claimants.

The amount paid annually for pensions is rapidly decreasing. It was $6,296,826 less for the year 1899 than for the year 1898. No legislation that will ever be had will, looking to the payment of pensions in the future, require an annual appropriation of $144,651,000—the amount appropriated in 1898—unless it provides for the rerating and equalizing of pensions since the adoption of Order 225. To do that would require $40,000,000.

For five years past the average annual decrease of the roll has been 43,492, by death and other causes. The annual decrease of the names of invalids from the rolls by death is 27,000.

Since the close of the fiscal year 1894 there have been dropped from the rolls, for death and other causes, 255,572 names. The annual dropping from the rolls by reason of death and other causes lessens the amount to be paid about $5,500,000 annually.

As I have stated, the actual decrease for the year 1899 was $6,296,826 less than was paid in 1898.

It is estimated that of the 2,778,304 men who engaged in the struggle for the preservation of the Union during the civil war, 999,000 are living in the year 1900. Of that number, 742,476 were on the pension rolls June 30, 1899, leaving 256,872 survivors of that conflict not pensioned.

It is estimated that at least 20 per cent of those not pensioned would for various reasons never apply for pension.

It is more than probable that if an act were passed granting a pension to all the survivors of that conflict who served ninety days and had been honorably discharged, it would add less than 200,000 names to the pension rolls.

I believe that the time has come when we should make provision for pensioning every Union soldier who participated in that conflict. I have prepared a bill providing that every officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served ninety days or more and has an honorable discharge from the service, and who is or may become 62 years of age, shall be pensioned for senility at $6 per month; that those who are or who may become 65 years of age shall be pensioned at $8 per month; that those who are or who may become 68 years of age shall be pensioned at $10 per month, and that those who are or who may become 70 years of age shall be pensioned at $12 per month.

The following tables, prepared by Gen. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department, will show the number of survivors who will become 62 years of age until all have reached that age:

TABLE No. 2.—Survivors becoming 62 years of age.

Showing the probable number, June 30, 1899, of the survivors of the war of the rebellion (excluding deserters), the number who will be 62 years of age, or over, on that date; also the number who will attain 62 years of age after 1899, with the year in which they will reach that age.

Probable number of survivors in 1890 1,285,471
Probable number of survivors in 1890 62 years of age or over 149,591

Will live to be 62 years old.		Will live to be 62 years old.
In year—	Number of men.	In year—	Number of men.
1891	20,817	1901	62,414

1898	43,025	1908	5,672
1899	48,611	1909	820
1900	55,042

As more than three-quarters of all the survivors are now drawing pensions, only one-quarter of those who become 62 years of age would become pensioners if the bill prepared shall become a law. This year—1900—55,042 will become 62 years of age, three-quarters of whom are now on the roll. There would be 13,760 added to the roll as beneficiaries under the proposed enactment, about one-half as many as are dropped from the roll of invalid pensioners by death and other causes annually.

In no year would the names added by reason of the passage of the bill equal the number dropped from the roll of invalid pensioners.

Under existing law officers are retired when they become 62 years of age. Why should not the remainder of that vast army that did so much for man and humanity be recognized and receive a pittance, if they elect to apply for it, during the few remaining days they have to live? Who in this land will object?

The flower of that great army who are pensioned to-day are on the roll under the act of June 27, 1890. Many of them are men who had no hospital record. They had nerve, endurance, and lion hearts. If unable to stand when the roll was called, they shouted "Here!" When the bugle called, they jumped into line with their comrades.

By night and by day, in sunshine and in storm, amid the smoke of battle where shells burst, minies hissed, and solid shot mowed down their comrades, they stood firm beneath the crack of the enemy's musketry, the roar of his artillery, and quailed not at the impetuosity of his charge. If Abraham Lincoln, who called these men to the conflict, were a member of this House, does anyone doubt that he would vote to pension them? If Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, McClellan, Hooker, Heintzelman, Sedgwick, Rosecrans, Howard, Logan, Sickles, and the other great commanders were members of this House, which side of this question they would be on no one can doubt. Almost every man who for any time participated in that terrible conflict where Americans were contending with Americans, by exposure incident to the service, exhausted his nerve force and physical strength and is prematurely old to-day.

When their duty in the field had been performed they went home with the same heroic determination to fight the battle of life that had made them the flower of the army in the field. They asked no favors and made no applications for pension. After a time the store of nerve force and physical strength they had became exhausted, causing them to surrender. Men of iron, who were always at the front when cannon talked, could no longer compete in the struggle of a busy life with those who stayed at home and enjoyed the comforts thereof while they were enduring the exposures and the hardships incident to a soldier in the field. Let us provide a system of pensioning these men that will do away with the expense of special examiners and make it impossible for the medical referee in the Bureau of Pensions to deprive them of what the law gives. No one of these should ever suffer for the necessaries of life or be an object of local or individual charity. They are the wards of the nation and should be cared for from the National Treasury.

It seems to me that he who opposes this is as destitute of the light flashed down from Calvary two thousand years ago as the Dead Sea is of live ashes.

If we are to relieve these claimants, alleviate their sufferings, and recognize the sacrifices they made, we must act while they live. It will not comfort them to visit their graves with a flood of tears and a handcart full of bouquets. Aid them now and make dry that brave old warrior's cheek now moist with tears born of suffering, with the necessaries of life that will cheer him with comfort on his way to the grave.

"Loot the Treasury!" There was never uttered a more infamous libel, a more wanton and barbarous attack upon any class of men than the assault upon the soldiers of the civil war that they desire to "loot the Treasury." Men who left home as beardless boys, or as husbands or fathers, in response to the call of Abraham Lincoln, entered the service, and were shot at for years for $13 a month, and a considerable part of the time received their pay in a currency worth less than 50 cents on the dollar; preserved this Government; purchased for all who live under our flag to-day all the blessings we enjoy that come from government; and now, decrepit, aged, diseased, suffering physical pains and mental anguish, these men ask for a pittance; and some sordid, soulless brute shouts, "They want to loot the Treasury!" Such creatures are destitute of patriotic impulses, dead to humanity, and barren of every shadow of love and gratitude, and if some man undertakes to aid in preparing papers for helpless orphans, widows in mourning, and old warriors crippled and in distress, to make application for pension, he is denounced as a shark, a land pirate, and a claim agent.

The act of March 2, 1895, provided that from and after the passage of said act—all pensioners now on the rolls who are pensioned at less than $6 per month for any degree of pensionable disability shall have their pensions increased to $6 per month; and that hereafter, whenever any applicant for pension would, under existing ratings, be entitled to less than $6 for any single disability, or several combined disabilities, such pensioner shall be rated at not less than $6 per month.

To me it seems that that law has been disregarded and defied from its passage until this day. Congress intended, and by legislation said, that every soldier entitled to a rating giving him any pension should receive $6 per month. Instead of increasing the pension and giving the soldier the benefit of that act, the practice at the Pension Bureau has been to reject a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, unless the rating for disability would give the claimant a pension under the general law of $10 per month; and in thousands of cases disabilities, and ratings for disabilities, have not been aggregated, as I contend the law directs, and the claimants have been refused a pension who are clearly entitled, and who would be in receipt of a pension to-day if their claims had been adjudicated as the law provides.

I am earnestly in favor of the provision, when amended as we have proposed, which directs the chief of the Pension Bureau to grant pensions under the act of June 27, 1890, to widows who have a net income of not more than $250 per year.

When the act of June 27, 1890, was passed, the law was administered fairly and pensions were granted to widows with an income of $300. I know of no reason why any sum should be named or any amount of income should bar the widow. The soldier, if possessed of a million dollars (and I wish no one of them had less), would be entitled to pension at the same rate that he would be if he was not possessed of a penny.

I believe that there are no more worthy or deserving persons whose names are on the roll of pensioners to-day than the widows who were the wives of soldiers during the war. Mentally, they suffered a million times more than the soldiers in the field, and especially was that true of the wife and mother. The soldier knew his condition. The mother never kissed her children to bed at night knowing whether they were orphans, whether the father was wounded and bleeding on some battlefield, or was captured and on his way to some Confederate prison to starve. When a battle like Gettysburg was being fought, and every tick of the wire told of the terrible slaughter, the wife and mother suffered more than the lion-hearted warrior, who thought only of duty and victory. As the wife read the daily papers and ran her eyes down over the list of killed and wounded, the little ones at her knee, watching the expression of her countenance, and looking into her eyes moist with tears, asked, "Is papa dead, mamma? Is papa killed?"

Only the God of matchless love, who reads all hearts, can ever know the agony such mothers endured. He who would deny to such widows, or deprive them of, the pittance of $8 per month pension because they have, in the providence of God, a little property, would, had he been present, have agreed to the objection that was made to the anointing of the Saviour's feet, and would have insisted that the ointment should be sold and the proceeds put into the treasury. As I view it, such, if any there be, are devoid of gratitude, destitute of patriotism, barbarous and inhuman. My conviction of what duty demands is that any woman who was the loyal wife of a soldier during the war should, at any time thereafter, if she be a widow, upon proof of that fact, have her name written on the roll of pensioners; and I care not if she has had as many husbands as Solomon had wives, when she is a widow she should receive a pension.

The President favors the passage of this bill, and in his annual message recommended a change by statute that will overturn the ruling of the Pension Bureau which denied to widows a pension when they had an income amounting to $96 a year, directing that widows whose actual net income does not exceed $250 shall be pensioned.

That recommendation evidenced the loyalty and thoughtful remembrance by President McKinley of the widows of the brave men who were his comrades in arms. It was a noble and a patriotic act, and where he leads, we will follow.

All will remember an address that he made to his comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic who visited him at his home in Canton in 1896.

I can not quote it from memory, but in substance it was as follows:

After welcoming them kindly, he said: When the war closed the nation owed two great debts, one to those who loaned it the money to enable it to feed and clothe its soldiers and provide them with arms and munitions of war. That debt, said he, is substantially paid. The great debt the nation owes to-day is to the men who, with arms in their hands, defended our flag and preserved and perpetuated our Government. That debt must and shall be paid. The great heart of the nation throbs with gratitude to its defenders. Duty and patriotism alike demand that we care for all who are in want and for the widows and orphans of those who fell on the field or have since died from wounds received or disease contracted while in the service.

In substance, he declared that all such are the wards of the nation, and should be cared for out of the national Treasury rather than by local or individual charity.

Does anyone doubt the sincerity of President McKinley? Does anyone fear that he will not demand of the Chief of the Bureau of Pensions a liberal construction of what we are about to enact into law?

I do not doubt. I will not fear. I have implicit confidence that he will see that his comrades in arms receive every penny that the law entitles them to, and I believe that immediately we shall observe, and the old warrior claimants realize, that the change has come.

All know that there should be a change; the people do in every neighborhood where lives an old veteran, broken down, sick, and suffering, who has been examined by surgeons who have known him for years, whose neighbors have furnished a volume of testimony to prove his inability to labor and to earn, yet who receives a letter from the Chief of the Pension Bureau informing him that he is not disabled or disqualified for labor in a pensionable degree.

The rejection of cases such as I have named enrage the veteran soldiers of this land and the people in every community where such a one lives.

Almost our entire population demand a change, and without a dissenting vote in the Senate or the House, I trust we shall write a law that declares that the practice that has been in vogue must stop. The unanimous vote of the representatives of 75,000,000 people must be respected. The declaration in the statute that every disability shall be considered and the ratings aggregated must be respected. That he who is afflicted with a disability in every limb and almost every organ is to be rejected because all his disabilities are not concentrated in one limb or organ is a construction both outrageous and wicked. Aggregated ratings for disabilities is all that claimants for pension ask. That they are entitled to and must have. This people do not want a sordid or niggardly treatment of broken-down, prematurely old, and disabled veterans of the civil war. The man who enjoys the blessings purchased by their valor and sacrifices, and then complains because they are pensioned, ought to flee to Canada, or elsewhere, as some did during the civil war to avoid the draft.

I desire to call attention to what purports to be a letter written by the Hon. H. Clay Evans, Commissioner of Pensions, and published in the Washington Star, March 29, 1900. It reads as follows:

Some days ago the Union Veteran Legion of Pittsburg sent to Commissioner H. Clay Evans, of the Pension Office, as well as to the chairmen of both Pension Committees of Congress, copies of a resolution passed at a recent meeting of the Legion, denouncing the bills for the relief of deserters and bounty jumpers. Commissioner Evans answered the kindly expressed letter accompanying the resolution, and said:

"A glance at the many bills that have been introduced in Congress which have for their object the removal of charges of desertion and the granting of pensions to those who have now no legal status will convince you that a persistent and organized effort is being made to secure special legislation for the relief of individuals, as well as general legislation, which will operate to place upon the pension rolls the names of many of those who are now barred therefrom by reason of dishonorable discharge or desertion.

"In addition to the above, numerous bills have been introduced and are being pushed in Congress for the purpose of granting pensions to teamsters, telegraph operators, employees of military railroads, employees of the Life-Saving Service, and others whose service was rendered as civil employees and who were never connected with the Army or Navy. These men were paid good wages while so employed, and to place them on the pension rolls alongside of the veterans who composed the ranks of the organization which you represent would be an act of injustice.

"One of the first bills introduced in the present Congress was to grant an honorable discharge to all soldiers who were at any time in the service of the United States, and who have for more than thirty years been held to be ineligible for such discharge. The number of deserters at large at the close of the civil war is estimated at 117,247. Under the operations of this bill honorable discharges would be granted to all."

The object and purpose of the author of that letter is patent. It impugns the motives of members of Congress, seeks to create a prejudice against granting pensions by special act, very many of which are made necessary by reason of the unjust rejection of meritorious claims in the Pension Bureau. If not alleged, it is implied, and intended to be understood that members of Congress are engaged in a persistent and organized effort to secure unjust and improper legislation, such as is named. I desire to denounce that statement as absolutely destitute of any foundation. There is not a shred of truth in the warp or woof thereof. It is due to my associates on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as well as to my colleagues of the House of Representatives, that I brand that charge as I have.

A statement that any such claim has been urged or "pushed" by any single individual before our committee is also untrue, and born of misrepresentation or delusion. The writer of that letter seems to think that if a soldier, by reason of sickness or some other cause no fault of his, was borne on the rolls as a deserter, it is a crime to have the record corrected in accordance with what justice and truth demand. Many private soldiers stood charged with desertion when the war closed against whose names there was no more reason for such record than there was for charging General Grant with desertion. When the facts warrant, such charge should be removed and the record corrected. It is to the credit of our people that a party which repudiates the obligations a nation owes to its defenders and to the widows and orphans of those who fell or who have since passed away can not command the votes of the citizens in communities where Union soldiers live.

Not long ago we witnessed the experiment of attempting to coin a surplus out of a deficiency by robbing pensioners, and the party that attempted it counted its electoral vote north of Mason and Dixon's line in the list of scattering at the next election thereafter. The amount paid for pensions in the fiscal year 1893 was $156,806,537.94; for the year 1894, $139,986,626.17; reduction in one year, $16,819,911.77.

The only men for whom the Commissioner of Pensions evidences any solicitude were Confederate soldiers. If it is true that out of a total of 665,000 claims disallowed and rejected from 1861 to June 30, 1899, there were rejected in the year ending June 30, 1899, 107,000, nearly one-sixth of all rejected in thirty-eight years, it might create suspicion that he did not desire to have Congress review and pass upon claims that he had rejected.

I quote from his letter:

In addition to the above, numerous bills have been introduced and are being pushed in Congress for the purpose of granting pensions to teamsters, telegraph operators, employees of military railroads, employees of the Life-Saving Service, and others whose service was rendered as civil employees and who were never connected with the Army or Navy. These men were paid good wages while so employed, and to place them on the pension rolls alongside of the veterans who composed the ranks of the organization which you represent would be an act of injustice.

I desire to say that if any such bill has been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions no one has ever asked it to report a bill pensioning any person in any one of the classes named; and he who states that anyone is "pushing," or has "pushed," or asked, or urged the committee to report any bill of the character named is grossly mistaken, or deliberately states what is absolutely false.

It is the right of each and every citizen to criticize any act of Congress; that right extends to and includes bureau chiefs. It becomes the duty of Congress to examine and review, so far as time will admit, the action of the Chief of the Bureau of Pensions, and to do, what in some instances he could not do, in others what the law directed and the evidence made it his duty to do, which he neglected and refused to do.

In conclusion, I will say that the author of that letter appeared before our committee and urged us to report favorably a bill to pension Confederate soldiers, no matter how long they fought for the Confederacy and against the Union—it may have been from Bull Run until ninety days before Lee's surrender—if they deserted the lost cause and came into our lines, enlisted, and served ninety days before the war closed.

That bill made no provision for pensioning Union soldiers who may have fought under our flag for three years or longer and were captured, taken to some Confederate prison like Andersonville, where, naked and starving, to save their lives they entered the Confederate service with the intention of escaping and returning to our lines and who did make their escape and so return; but it did provide for Confederates who came into our lines and served for ninety days.

Gentlemen, I desire to say to you and to the country, in replying to that Bureau Chief, that of more than 4,700 bills, public and private, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, if there has been a persistent and organized effort made to secure legislation which would operate to place on the pension roll the name of many who are now barred therefrom, it was in the bill championed by Commissioner Evans to pension Confederate soldiers.

If claims that are conclusively proved up and claimants rated by the boards of examining surgeons as the law provides were allowed at the Bureau, there would be fewer applications for pensions by special act.

When a claimant has proved his case beyond all doubt and it is rejected at the Bureau, as many are, claimants have no remedy but to appeal to Congress; and it is the duty of Congress to grant to claimants what was wrongfully withheld and denied at the Bureau.

When claimants are treated fairly at the Bureau there will be few applications for special acts.

Nicaragua Canal.

SPEECH
HON. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
OF ALABAMA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, May 2, 1900.

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans—

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I am glad that there is no division on any party lines as to the passage of this bill. I regret to see that there is any member of this body who thinks it is his duty to oppose this measure. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that in some particulars it could have been bettered. It could have been more specific on some points; it could have been improved in other respects.

But, Mr. Chairman, the argument made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is the argument we have heard for more than two decades in reference to the Nicaraguan Canal. The excuse, in Congress after Congress, has been, "Wait until some survey has been made, and then we can act more intelligently on the subject." Mr. Chairman, this is the best proposition we can get before this House for consideration at this time, and as one who favors this great project, one who believes that notwithstanding any treaties that may be ratified, this great canal will be used as a benefit to America in case of war if necessary, and a means of spreading our commerce in time of peace, I shall give it my support.

A few days ago the people in the first State of the Union alphabetically, and I think, Mr. Chairman, I may say with pardonable pride the best State in the Union, spoke in no uncertain tones in reference to this pending measure.

On the 26th day of April last the people of Alabama in a Democratic convention assembled adopted the following resolution, and when I say a Democratic convention in Alabama I mean a convention composed of intelligent, straight-haired men with white faces, like those I see before me here to-day. [Applause.]

That convention declared:

We advocate the construction of the Nicaragua Canal to make a highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific and to make the seaport of the State of Alabama the front door of the United States, and that this party pays its tribute of affection and admiration to our distinguished citizen, Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN, whose integrity, intellect, energy, and persistence have accomplished so much in forwarding this great enterprise to a point where there can be no longer a doubt of its ultimate success.
